Dear Colleen,
We are pleased to know that Mennonite Church USA has received a grant to digitize the print files of Gospel Herald and The Mennonite.

You have our full permission to digitize all issues of The Mennonite and make them available for free, with full-text access.

Best wishes in this important endeavor.

Sincerely,

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES

GENERAL THEME: The Living God

Sunday

THE LIVING GOD

Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you. Jos. 3:10.

Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake, as in the days of old, the generations of ancient times. Art thou not it that cut Rahab in pieces, that pierced the dragon? Art thou not it which dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep; that made the depths of the sea a way for the redeemed to pass over? And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing into Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Isa. 51:9-11.

And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Hallelujah: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Rev. 19:6.

Read also: Isa. 40; Ps. 46; Ps. 121; Rom. 8:31-39.

THE MEDITATION

We believe in a living God. He is not the God of the deists, who made His world like a marvellous clock and wound it up to run itself. He is the present will and power that runs it. He is not the God of the humanists, made by men in their own image. He is the present source of all that comes to pass; He provides the setting for our existence, not we the setting for His. St. Paul did not say, "In us He lives and moves and has His being"; he said, "In Him we live and move and have our being." He is behind all, above all, and active in all (always "on the job," if one may say it reverently). Nor is He some auxiliary power, held in reserve for us to use when we fail of ourselves to "put across" our own enterprises, however good and worthy. He is no second to us, He is always first. "Not my will, but thine, be done," is the condition of all of our living below.

The living God is the God who does things. When Jordon barred the way, Joshua said to the people, "Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you;" and they passed over. Israel was not His people because they held some philosophical tenet or accepted some moral code. It was what God did in Egypt, at the Red Sea, at Sinai, at Jordon, and in the Promised Land that made them His people—a series of mighty deeds, His deeds. Many centuries later He restored the exiles to their home land and secured them in the practice of their religion (Isaiah 40-66). Then in the fulness of time He did those transcendent deeds which constituted an era in history, and Christianity was born. The Word made flesh, Golgotha, the living Lord,—the Word incarnate, crucified, alive—these are "the wonderful works of God" in which our religion is founded (Acts 2:11).

The whole on-going process of nature and human life springs from Him. His hand is on it all every moment, all His creatures in His care. Confusion and terror abroad may be too much for us; it is not too much for Him. "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth." And His ways may be to us inexplicable and baffling, but the God who made Himself known in Jesus Christ is to be trusted. At the last our faith will not be put to shame. The Christian man can labour in confidence and sleep in security; he has committed himself, and his, and all men, to a faithful Creator and merciful Redeemer.

Let us lift up our hearts to the God who made us, who redeemed us, who watches over us, till the good work which He has begun in us is completed (Phil. 1:6). Let us marvel at the vastness of His creation, at the order of it, and the infinite care that sustains it all. Let us praise Him for what He did for us in Christ Jesus, who for us men and our salvation became man, suffered, and died, whom God raised up, because He could not be holden of death (Acts 2:24). And let us praise Him for the victory which is ours in Christ Jesus and the sure hope set before us; "We have our hope set on the living God" (I Tim. 4:10).

Then let us look at our brother men, God's creatures, like ourselves, made to be like Him, active sons of the living God, doing His generous works, honest in thought and word and deed, kind and helpful in the family, in worship and field, in the neighborhood, in the nation, in the world, walking humbly every day with Him. Let us consider how we are woven with them into the web of society which He began to weave so long ago; shall we not do our best to work with Him at it, so that His pattern may not be marred—the pattern of the redeeming Cross? So we shall look out on our brother men with eyes purged and consecrated. We shall forgive as we are forgiven. New purpose will bind us to them. We shall work and play, we shall talk and feel and think with them, as brethren in the family of God. Self-seeking and pettiness will go; greed and stubbornness will be dissolved; and we shall be absorbed in the Father's life for all, "the work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope" (I Thess. 1:3). So are we "Delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21).

Subjects for Prayer

For a personal consciousness that God is.

For a sense of God's immediacy in the human heart.

For the insight which sees Him at work in His world now.

For a fresh realization that the suffering and distress prevalent today are not according to His will.

For a rebirth of the faith which looks to Him in confidence for the ending of the present turmoil and the coming of justice and right.

THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth. John 1:14.

He is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. Heb. 7:25.

Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, yea and for ever. Heb. 13:8.

Read also: John 1:1-18; I Cor. 1:4-9; Eph. 1:3-23; Phil. 2:1-11.

THE MEDITATION

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, the light and the living creatures. And God saw all that He had made: He saw the hosts of heaven that the astronomers are counting still; He saw all the wonder and the potencies that the physicists are beginning to talk about. He saw the great beasts before they sank down, to leave their bones in the rocks; He saw the tiniest creatures the biologist knows. "God saw all that He had made, and behold it was very good." And they all,—the heavens and the earth, the light and the living creatures,—tell me about God: they tell me of His might, His wisdom, His constancy, His delight in order and beauty.

Last of all, He made man. He made man in His own image,—with a mind to understand His ways, ever searching and never satisfied till he does understand; He made him with a heart like His own, who clings to each creature He made with affection, a heart never content with a love less free than God's; He made him with a will that strives on and finds no peace except in doing the will of God. If I look into the face of nature I learn something of what God is like; I learn more if I look into the face of my brother-man; the inflexible law of right, the marvellous working of love.

I learn most about God if I look upon the Word made flesh, born of Mary, heralded by angels, greeted by shepherds, sought out and adored by the wise—the Word made flesh, brother of all men, friend of the poor, feeder of the hungry, healer of the sick—the Word fade flesh whose face was set like flint against all that was hollow, or false, or pretentions, who loosed His anger upon them that loved money, or power, or position;—the Word made flesh who denounced the opressor, who set at liberty them that were bound, who eased the burden of them that laboured and were heavy laden, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister, who himself had not where to lay His head and yet for many made a common dwelling to be a chamber of the Father's house. That is what Jesus, Son of Mary was like; and so I see what God is like.

I look upon the Word made flesh, and behold a love that will not be denied its way. If St. Paul writes an extraordinary hymn in praise of Christian love (I Cor. 13), it is because God has already written the hymn in the deeds and character of Jesus. I look at Jesus and I know what St. Paul means. Love is patient and kind, and feels no envy. Love makes no parade, gives itself no airs. Love is never offensive, and never puts itself first. Love is never irritated, never resentful. Love takes no pleasure in evil, but rejoices in all honesty and goodness. Love is unwilling to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always steadfast. Love never gives up. That is what Jesus, Son of Mary, was like. And so I see what God is like for ever.

I look upon the Word made flesh, and behold a cross! Love to the uttermost! God's love suffering to save the man in God's image! God all in earnest that man should not at last fall short of what God intended at the first.

"O love of God! O sin of man!
In this dread act your strength is tried,
And victory remains with love;
For He, our Lord, is crucified."

That is what Jesus, Son of Mary, was like. And so I see what the living God is like for ever.

Subjects for Prayer

Let us pray
- For a clearer understanding of the Word made flesh.
- For His dwelling in us, making us over into His likeness, enabling us to do His work. ("Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.")
- For a determination to enthrone Jesus Christ at the center of all life, individual and social.
- For Christian living and such fineness as to attract those not now His followers.
- For a spirit of sacrifice commensurate with the present need of the world.
- For the conviction that He has the final answer to the problems that beset mankind.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LIVING GOD

He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost. Matt. 3:11.

When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak. John 16:13.

They were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Acts 2:4.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free of the law of sin and death. Rom. 8:1, 2.

God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Gal. 4:6.

I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man. Eph. 3:14, 16.

He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you. Rom. 8:11.

Read also: St. John 14:16,17,26; 16:7-4; Acts 1:1-8; 2;Rom.8; I Cor. 12-14; Eph. 4:1-13.

THE MEDITATION

The old Testament explained many a mysterious and conspicuous fact by ascribing it to the spirit of God. The spirit came on a man, and lo, he had extraordinary strength (Samson), or he had extraordinary skill as a craftsman (Bezaleel), or he stood forth an extraordinary leader (Joshua), or, as spokesman for God, he uttered extraordinary messages (the prophets). It was a figure of speech to begin with, for "spirit"and "wind" are the same in Hebrew, and the wind is mysterious and potent; the figure of speech proved to be a true insight. In so many ways men knew that the living God was in their midst, doing things.

Those were isolated facts, but with Jesus and especially with His death and resurrection the powers of another world began to sweep down freely and widely, working wonders. An Afflatus would come upon whole companies and reset men's lives; it would give a new direction to the life of a lonely traveller (Paul). Converts would speak with tongues would prophesy, would sing, bless God, pray ecstatically. They received strange help to decide what to do at critical moments, words they had not planned to say came to them as they stood before kings and governors. In the daily round of life and in their common worship they were mysteriously reshaped, made like their Master. That transformation within was the Spirit's work too: extraordinary insights, revelations, understanding; love joy, hope, confidence, marvellous sonship, marvellous brotherhood, meekness and with it unearthly staying power. All were notable gifts, but St. Paul prizes the least sensational most; love, he says, is the greatest of all.

The New Testament is truly described as "The Acts of the Spirit of God." He is there from the first Chapter to the last (St. Matt. 1:18,20; Rev. 22:17). The early Christians lived in the sphere of the Spirit. It meant new life to them, they were new creatures in Christ Jesus. It was the doing of the Spirit of the living God. Men were in contact with the living God and they knew it; He was doing things. It was pre-eminently the age of the Spirit, when the living God was doing glorious things (II Cor. 3:8). If what is recorded in the New Testament required men to formulate a doctrine of the person and work of Christ, it required them equally to formulate a doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

Let us ask ourselves the questions that St. Paul asked the Corinthian Christians: "Know ye now that ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you" (I Cor. 3:16). Where is "the fruit of the Spirit?" (Gal. 5:22,23). Is it ripening in our own lives? Are we helping it to ripen in our fellow men? We must let Christ have His way with us for months, for years, before such fruit will mature. And the nurture that matures it is the life of the living God. Without this fruit in our lives we are less than Christian.

O may thy Spirit seal our souls,
And mould them to thy will.

Subjects for Prayer

Let us pray
- For the purifying of God's Spirit which cleanses our hearts of unrighteousness.
- For the quickening of the Spirit which turns intentions into deeds.
- For the leading of the Spirit which gives wisdom to our purposes and achievement to our endeavors.
- For the undergoing of the Spirit which gives strength in difficulty, temptation and sorrow.
- For the uplifting of the Spirit which brings us to unexpected levels of fellowship with God and accomplishment for Him.

THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD

He gave Him to be head over all things to the Church, which is His Body. Eph. 1:22,23.

Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. Eph. 2:19.

And He gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ: till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a fullgrown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Eph. 4:1-13.

Read also: I Cor. 12-14; Eph. 2:12-22; 4:1-13; 5:23-27.

THE MEDITATION

The Church was founded by Christ. It is continuous with the old Israel, the people of God's Choice, called to be His peculiar possession, called to His peculiar mission in the world. The Church is the old Israel transmuted by what Christ did. He wrote no constitution; He did the things which constituted the new Israel: words and works that carried men into the very presence of God, an inner circle the nucleus of a ministry, the Cross, and the victory over death and the grave. These are His doings, and they are the foundation of the Church. Without Him the Church could not be; He came, and the Church could not but be.

That Church, the society of the redeemed, has been from the first the sphere of the Spirit's activity. He takes of the things of Christ and makes them live in men's minds and hearts. He broods over their gatherings, quickening their vision and sealing their commitment. In the language of an older theology He "applies" to men the redemption wrought by Christ, God working out within them His good purpose, making them new men in Christ. There has never been a moment from the beginning when God was not alive and at work, doing things in His Church.

The Church is the organ of His redemptive will, the body of which Christ is the Head. Under Christ the Church is called (1) to the proclamation of the ever-lasting Gospel with its offer of salvation (doctrine), (2) to the worship of God (cultus), (3) to the loving service of mankind (world mission), and (4) to the care and nurture of the flock (polity and discipline).

Let us consider how each of us is called of God to share in the task of the whole body, to share with Christ the Head, and how each as a member of the body is appointed of God to a peculiar service. (1) As Christ is prophet, declaring to men what the everlasting God is like and what His purpose for man is, so we are prophets too, to declare by our words and deeds, by our bearing and temper, by our sincerity and ardour, what God is like and His concern for man. (2) And as Christ is priest, so we are called in our worship to the praise of God and to strong intercession. (3) And as Christ is shepherd, so we are called to be shepherds to one another, not ministers only, but all of us, to be under-shepherds with the Chief Shepherd in the care of every sheep and lamb of the flock. A man is redeemed in the society of the redeemed. That is our high calling, with Christ (Col. 1:18). How many of us are sick or diseased members, a weakness or a poison to the whole body?

And let us consider the Church in relation to the world. If we mean by "world" what St. John meant, "the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life" (I Jo. 2:16), then we must hold that the attitude of the Church is one of unflinching opposition. We have turned our back on all that—or have we? But if we mean by "world" the people who live in it, then we acknowledge ourselves children of Him who "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son" for it. That is the root of all political and economic and educational criticism and endeavor; that is the root of our missionary enterprise. The redemption of the world is the Church's task—our task with Christ. Redemption is always costly. We must pay in the currency of the soul's own country, pay out of pain and toil and tears; the Cross for God Himself was a thing of nails and blood. If there is not much redeeming going on

What If They Say

What if they say, "Are not these higher powers ordained of God? Does it not say that, 'they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation'?" (Rom. 13:1-2).

The word power (Gr. Exousia) refers to the "right or privilege of having authority." Christians regard authority as essential in the home, in the school, in the church, and of course, in the so-called higher rule vested in state and national governments.

God is the author of authority. He delegates stewardships of authority to those who are either elected by the consent of those governed or to those who, as in the home or in a monarchy, rule by divine right. Certainly, all right to rule is from God. Jesus said to Pilate, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me except it were given thee from above." (John 19:11).

Even though Christians are "strangers and pilgrims" (Heb. 11:13) with their primary interest in the heavenly Kingdom (Phil. 3:20), their walk will not ordinarily conflict with regulations in civil life. Christians are careful to respect the divine authority vested in the state. To "resist" is to "despise government" (II Pet. 2:10), and deserves a penalty.

But to "object" when the government extends its sphere of dominion to the "realm of the soul" is quite another matter. When Jesus said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," He meant the church and state have separate realms of authority. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal" (II Cor. 10:4).

BRO. AND SISTER P. A. PENNER'S ITINIRARY CANNOT YET BE PUBLISHED

Since the middle of December Brother Penner has a rest period of about six weeks, except on Sundays. After that they plan to visit churches, showing the pictures in the evenings, where a projector and electricity are available. All churches will be visited as in Sister Fast's case. We may even decide to buy a projector, if necessary. So much to prevent unnecessary inquiries. —P. H. Richert, Secr.

OUR WORKERS IN CHINA AND THE PHILIPPINES

No further word from our workers in China and the Philippines. Only what the papers report, we know. But we have now word from Washington and New York that the Red Cross can get some information concerning the whereabouts and the welfare of the missionaries in the warring countries. We are now trying this. —P. H. Richert, Secr.

RELIEF

Word from Relief Worker in France

Friends of our relief workers in France will be glad to learn of Brother Joseph Byler's latest cable from France, dated December 17. This cable, received at the Akron, Pennsylvania, office on December 18, was as follows: "Have January supplies Lyon program stop all going well reassure families" —Joseph Byler.

Brother Schmidt Makes Purchases for Hospital

Besides planning for the construction of the hospital for the Mennonite groups in Paraguay, Brother Vernon Schmidt is also assuming responsibility for purchasing the hospital equipment. In his letter of December 14 he says: "I have enjoyed the past few days while working with Franz Heinrichs in purchasing supplies. I have improved my German talk and understanding very much since here, but I still have a long way to go. I have succeeded in obtaining most of the items I need for the building."

Brother Jesse Hoover on Speaking Tour

Brother Jesse Hoover, recently returned from France after nine months of relief work there, is at present touring the middle West and speaking at Mennonite churches on the relief program in France. Besides speaking in churches in Ohio, Brother Hoover will also give a talk to the boys at the Bluffton Camp. Plans are under way to have Brother Hoover speak to Mennonite churches in eastern Pennsylvania within a few weeks.

Home for Aged Continuing

In Birmingham, England, our relief workers have established a home for aged people whose homes have been bombed or for some reason are without a place to live. Brother Peter Dyck has charge of this work. In a letter dated December 3 he reports: "I am very happy to be able to report that at "The Woodlands" everything is running smoothly. The fire-watching problem has been favorably solved, though not without some difficulty; the number of inmates is now twenty-six; we have been most fortunate in obtaining for the hostel permanent wardens. They are Mr. and Mrs. Hodgkin, elderly Friends, endowed with gracious personality and pleasant disposition, experienced in welfare work, staunch Christians—two of their children are in the foreign mission field—and they themselves are most happy to be able to render this much-needed Christian service. I feel certain that the running of internal affairs of "The Woodlands" is in excellent hands."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Harold D. Burkholder, Quakertown, Pa.

JANUARY 11—"But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." Rom. 13:14.

The Christian life is a conflict. "We battle not against flesh and blood,... but against spiritual wickedness in high places." The armour with which we are to wage war is described in the sixth chapter of Ephesians. It can be applied in most instances to Christ Himself. For He is the "girdle of Truth;" He is the "breastplate of Righteousness;" He is our Helmet of Salvation; He is our Peace, as seen in the Gospel sandal. He is all that we need in these critical days. Therefore, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," if ye would stand firm and true.

JANUARY 12—"Jesus wept," John 11:35.

The shedding of tears is a natural way of expressing deep sorrow, love, and contrition. Would to God more people wept for their sins today! When "Jesus wept," it was because of sin. Not sin in His life, for "He was without sin," but for sin in the world. "Jesus wept" on two different occasions. At the tomb of Lazarus and at the outskirts of Jerusalem. In both instances sin was the cause. At the tomb Jesus saw what death, the result of sin, can do to a home. At Jerusalem He saw what "Christ rejection," because of sin, will result in. How we ought to weep over unsaved and lost souls. Has your heart ever been moved to tears for anyone's salvation?

JANUARY 13—"Ye shall let your children know," Josh. 4:22.

The child is confronted today with many doubts as he grows up in this enlightened and scientific age. In the modern educational curriculum he is taught to doubt the Bible as a final authority on the creation of man, etc. Our children must be armoured against such teaching. It is while the child is still in our home that we must "let them know" about the love of Christ, and their need of accepting Him as Saviour. We must "let them know" that the Bible is God's Word and can never be destroyed by the teachings of man. We must "let them know" that war is sin, and that a Christian cannot take up arms. Parents are you doing all you can along this line?

JANUARY 14—"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure," I John 3:3.

From the Word of God comes the assuring word that Jesus Christ is coming back again for His own. This coming cannot be death, as some would have us believe, for in I Corinthians 15:51 we are told that not all will die, but some will be changed who are living, "in a twinkling of an eye," when He comes. In I Thess. 4:17 those alive at His coming "will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air;" Jesus said Himself in John 14:3, "I will come again." These facts are as clear and as true as our doctrine in non-resistance. In view of His sure return, let us be busy winning souls for Christ, "purifying ourselves even as He is pure." "Even so come Lord Jesus."

JANUARY 15—"Silver and gold have I none; but as I have give I thee," Acts 3:6.

The Mennonites in general have never been very wealthy, materially. If wealth came it usually brought with it a change of denominational affiliation. God has entrusted wealth to some, and they have proven themselves good stewards as seen from the support they give our missionary and church causes. Peter and John, "at the gate beautiful," are typical Mennonites; "Silver and gold have I none." I trust however, that we can go on with them in saying, "But such as I have give I thee" O Lord. God is able to multiply the loaves and fishes. He is able to use what we have. Let us give Him our all today.

JANUARY 16—"And they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus," Acts 4:13b.

When Moses came down from Mt. Sinai "his face shone," for he had been in the presence of God. The Sanhedrin also took notice that Peter and John "had been with Jesus." Members in our home can often tell where we have been by the smell on our clothes. To walk among fragrant flowers, for several hours, cannot help but leave its scent on us. To spend much time at the feet of the "Rose of Sharon" will make our lives so radiant and fragrant that, not we, but others will take note that we have been with Jesus. In Exodus 34 it says that "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone," but the people, who saw him, did. Let us so live that Christ might be seen by others.

JANUARY 17—"For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that , though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich," II Cor. 8:9.

What condescension, that the Son of God, the preexistent One, should leave the realms of glory to come to this sin-cursed world, where He became "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." What love! What an unselfish spirit! And to think that He did all this for a hell-deserving humanity. Christ gave Himself willingly for the redemption of sinners in this world. All that the world gave Him was a cross upon which He was crucified. For us, the way of the cross of Calvary, leads home. It leads to riches in Christ, unfathomed by the heart. "For your sakes He became poor, that ye . . . might be rich." Why be a pauper when such riches are offered to you? Receive Him today.

LETTER FROM THE J. H. BROWNS

Taming, Hopei, China

October 11, 1941

Dear Friends in Christ:

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you all. The blessed message of peace on earth has surely not been realized these years, but it still remains our blessed hope. In the hearts of the believers, of course, peace reigns, and when our blessed Savior will reappear in His glory and might, He will do away with all that is evil, and then His peace will fill the whole earth. That will be a glorious time. The saints now have their trials and sorrows, but the day of redemption is coming. Let us lift up our heads and take courage. We can already see the dawn of the new day.

While we wait and labor, here too are signs of new hope in the work of the Lord. It was bad to have so many missionaries leave us during the last year. We had very trying times. But now we hear that already some missionaries of other denominations are returning from America to the China mission field. On the last ship from America at least three missionaries, that we personally knew, came back to China. This gives us hope that our dear co-workers now on furlough, too, before long, will return to their adopted country and God intrusted work. (Secretary's Note: This was written two months before the war with U. S. began. Now such hope has to look into the more distant future.)

We thank you all very much for your interest in the work and many prayers for the some. We thank you also for your faithful financial support. The Lord knows it all. You have great expenses at home in these trying years, but you are still bringing these sacrifices, so that the Lord's work may go on. He Himself will be your great reward.

We shall also covet your earnest prayers for the future. All work is beset with great trouble now, but prayer changes things. Through prayer the way for the message of life can be kept open.

Yours in Christ,

—J. H. and Maria Brown

W. C. VOTH LETTERS

Port Rowan, Ontario, September 23. Had a good meeting on Pelee Island and enjoyed my stay there. Came back to Leamington Saturday and visited some. Had a full house there Sunday. It is a good-sized congregation—around five hundred members, with another hundred scattered around, including those on Pelee Island. Had a good offering Sunday, and on the island also. There is good interest in missions around here. Crops are good—lots of tomatoes, cucumbers, etc.; and right now a good deal of potato digging is still going on. Arrived at Port Rowan on the bus Monday. The group here is not very large. People were interested, though, and meetings well attended. The Women's Sewing Society wants to contribute for a student for one year. I am on my way to Niagara Falls ,and from there I am going to Virgil, meeting there tonight. . . .

Waterloo, Ontario, September 30. It is a rainy day—started drizzling yesterday. It had been pretty dry here. I wrote last from Vineland. Have been in Waterloo and vicinity since Saturday. Wednesday I came from Port Rowan to Niagara Falls, so I got to see the falls a second time. It was a nice clear day and good for pictures.

The folks at Niagara-on-the-Lake, about fifteen miles north of the falls, are getting along pretty well. Quite a few bought small tracts of land, either with trees or without—mostly without—and planted their own orchards. It looks much like the fruit orchards in California. They certainly had lovely peaches. That is the principal crop. There are also apples, plums, and around Vineland, lots of fine grapes. Our Mennonites started a cooperative some years ago and thus make better profits than they used to when they sold to "truckers" and others.

Last week Thursday we had a big storm there. Many good-sized trees were damaged, many large branches being broken off. There was quite a loss in pears and apples. Rev. Kroeker, with whom I was staying, has a large five-year-old peach orchard, and they were very glad they had just finished the peaches. Some twenty or more of his trees just split apart from the storm.

Arriving at Waterloo by bus, I received a warm welcome by Rev. J. H. Janzen and family. For Sunday morning services the church was packed. By noon it rained. The afternoon meeting, though it was the Harvest Thanksgiving Festival, was not so well attended, partly due to the weather, and also because there was a large family reunion in the community. I was disappointed that there were almost no children there for the festival, and also that I was the only speaker. After the service the vegetables which had been neatly arranged for display on Saturday were sold. This brought around $130.00 for home and foreign missions.

A Bible school is a place where young people have the opportunity of coming together to study the Word of God. I will try to give a brief account of how the Lord, with the assistance of other hands, has brought me back to school again, wherein I so often have been blessed. Because of the continuous fall rains there was little opportunity to earn enough funds to attend school. In fact, I did not expect that there would be an opportunity at all. To me it seemed impossible, but the Lord had prepared the way.

The school had opened and I was still at my work. Having terminated with my work, I put the matter before the Lord again, and praise Him, He opened the way for me. I inquired at the school for admittance, which was granted. Because of prayerful hearts and voluntary hands this has been made possible, even though there is crop failure. The contributions to the school made possible the low admittance fee. Scholars that would otherwise not have been able to attend, now have the possibility. The Lord bless and reward your cooperation.

I would like to give a report of how I came to Bible school, and what we are doing here. I already wanted to attend a Bible school last winter, but due to a crop failure my parents could not make it possible for me to go. In the spring I went to work out, and a letter from my parents stated their interest in two different Bible schools, one of which I was to attend. This didn't seem quite proper to me, but I finally realized that this was best for me. After completing my work I was quite submissive when I came home. I made the necessary preparations and started for school. The school was to commence its term on the 27th of October, but due to circumstances, I left home to arrive at Bible school on the 24th. But what did I find here at school! (A new floor was being laid in the dining room at the time Miss Wiens arrived—Committee). I felt like turning around and leaving for home. This would have been too simple, though. I stayed! Now I would find it hard to leave this school indefinitely. Now for a picture of our daily school program.

When we rise in the morning we make it a definite part of our program to spend a quiet time with God in our private rooms. At 7:30 we have breakfast, which has been prepared by the matron. After breakfast the students have, except for a few minor duties, time off for final preparations of their lessons until 9:00 o'clock, at which time classroom hours begin. From 9:00 to 9:30 we have devotional exercises as a student body together with the teachers. At 9:30 we break up into three classes. The course comprises: Bible, Bible History, Dispensational Truth, Bible Doctrine, Church History, Speaking, Spelling, Bible Geography, Personal Work, Grammar, and Music. These subjects are very educative. Twelve-thirty to 1:30 o'clock is set aside for recreation. Class hours cease at 4:00 in the afternoon. Five-thirty is suppertime. There is another recreational period from 6:00 to 7:00. Study hours begin at 7:00 and continue till 10:00, at which time "lights must be out." Just before retiring, we girls have set aside a short period out of the study hours for united Bible reading and prayer.

As I look back over the weeks that we have spent here at school, it seems as though they are but days. I would invite my readers to come also, because I assure you that you will never regret having come. A person that has not experienced it does not know how much of God's truth we hear. When recess comes between class hours, I sometimes wish that we didn't have intermission.

I have already decided, that if it be the Lord's will, and He gives me life and health, I certainly will come again next winter. I hope that many more will come to the Swift Current Bible School.

—Johanna L. Wiens, First Class
Gouldtown, Saskatchewan

Thus far, words of the students. We, as workers among them, praise God for these testimonies and pray that more young people might be able to attend Bible schools.

Our youth today would attend Bible school; they seek after God. Will they find Him? Will they learn to know Him better in a Bible school? Would you, dear reader, assist by prayer and funds that some young man or young woman might show your children the way to God, after having found Him in Bible school?

Someone has well said:

> The children of today, will be the men and women of tomorrow.
> The children of today will be the missionaries of tomorrow.
> Will they be Christian men and women?
> Will they be missionaries of the cross?

We hear of young men and women, who, after attending this Bible school, are today men and women of the cross, serving Christ in Sunday schools and young people's endeavors, where before their coming no such work existed. Probably you, dear reader, have previously helped to make this possible. God bless you for it.

Young people would attend Bible school, and we pray not only for them, but also for those who, "shall believe on Him through their word." John 17:20.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

January 11, 1942
The Infancy and Boyhood of Jesus
Luke 2:25-35, 39, 40.

TOPIC: The Hopes of Men Realized in Jesus

Introduction

Our lesson context includes chapters one and two of Matthew and Luke. The birth narratives of Jesus as recorded here are wholly independent. Matthew tells about Joseph and the angel messages to him. Luke tells about Mary and the angelic message to her. Matthew tells about the wise men and the star. Luke tells about the shepherds and the angelic choir. Matthew does not mention the presentation in the temple and Simeon's song of rejoicing and his prophecy. Matthew's account is from Joseph's standpoint while Luke's longer account is from Mary's standpoint. These two accounts dovetail and give a consistent picture of the birth, infancy, and boyhood of Jesus.

The Infancy of Jesus

We know little about Jesus' infancy. If we had such a record, it would probably divert our attention from the more significant matters to the more unessential. It is important to know that Jesus was a real babe and developed in the way common to babes. He was fully dependent upon his parents as are other babes. Yet he was the Son of God from the beginning. In our lesson, as printed, we have the beautiful record of Simeon seeing the infant Christ when he was brought into the temple. Simeon, a just and devout man, belonged to the class of humble and devout Jews who looked for the redemption of Israel. They looked for the coming of the Messiah and the Messianic age. The Holy Spirit had revealed to him that he would see the Messiah, the hope of Israel. This surely was a great comfort to him. The Spirit wonderfully led him to go to the temple just at the time when the prediction could be fulfilled (vs. 27). This indicates that the Holy Spirit was operating upon the hearts of men before the time of Christ. The Spirit caused him to recognize the long-awaited Messiah in the little child. He experienced a great thrill when he took the babe in his arms and praised God (vs. 28). His supreme desire was now realized and he was ready to depart from this life. The promise to him (vs. 26) was now fulfilled. Simeon's "Nunc Demittis," vss. 29-32, expresses his joy of heart and definite assurance. He sees in the babe the salvation of God to be wrought out by the Messiah, as the Saviour for all people. Simeon gloried in the universality of the salvation to be provided. Through the Messiah, light came to the Gentiles (vs. 32), dispelling the moral and spiritual darkness in which they had lived for ages. Jesus, the Messiah, is the glory of Israel, even though the nation rejected Him. He, above all else, made the Hebrew race important. Simeon blessed Joseph and Mary and prophesied that not all in Israel would receive Christ. Some would oppose, reject Him, and fall. Some would believe in Him and rise. Jesus' rejection, anguish, and death on the cross pierced Mary's very soul. Joseph had died before Christ's public ministry began.

Boyhood and Youth of Jesus

The Gospel records tell of but one incident in this period of Jesus' life. He went to Jerusalem to the feast with his parents when He was twelve years old. His parents returned to Nazareth after the flight to

General Conference Y. P. Work

By John Fretz

Hand in hand
Across the land—

It is interesting and encouraging to pause for a moment and examine some of the mighty fine work our young Mennonites have been doing.

There is the support given to Ernst Harder, who is preparing to minister to his people in South America, by studying at our schools and colleges in the U.S.A. A fine missionary project.

The publication and distribution of the Prayer Fellowship Calendar, which opens the way for us to become acquainted with our missionary personnel and Mennonite institutions, and above all, to unite our daily prayers before God for a common cause.

A somewhat larger and far-reaching project was undertaken in the follow-up service, which is now getting a real try-out. As pastors and Y. P. workers become more familiar with the object and purpose of the undertaking, we will stand to benefit by its use. This project has received wide publicity and some splendid response; it is worthy of all the effort we can put into it even though it will require considerable time to show results.

The weekly discussion of the C. E. Topic Material for Senior, Intermediate, and Junior Societies is prepared for us by competent Mennonite leaders.

Most of us have had opportunity to see and read the various district papers, such as the Vine Press, Western District Tidings, and Workers Exchange. These meet a real need and are interesting to the young people and elders alike, who are looking in the direction of our future Christian leaders. An exchange of these publications will help us become better acquainted with Mennonite youth and our mutual problems throughout the General Conference.

One sees the Program of Standards, issued by the General Conference Y. P. Committee, on many bulletin boards of the meeting rooms. They are used as a guide in preparing our programs and as a check-up on our society's organization.

Through Retreats, whether day-long, week-end, or full week periods, an interchange of leaders, speakers, and retreaters has been successfully tried during the past years and should be continued on a larger scale. This "drawing apart" for meditation and Bible Study has brought with it a deeper appreciation of our Christian heritage and the place of our Lord Jesus in our everyday lives. It cannot help but bring forth blessed fruit in individual and church alike.

From East and West we have found rich fellowship in corresponding with young Mennonites in Canada.

The Mennonite Youth section of our church paper carries many excellent articles on current issues, and vital messages written by young people in colleges and active workers throughout the conference. News, publicity, and reports on rallies, conventions, and interesting activities from the Pacific to the Eastern Districts are always timely.

Now as the new triennium begins and the new officers assume leadership, we do well to add new projects to those sponsored or supported during these past years, seeking to serve the Lord in all things and to prepare young men and women for positive Christion leadership.

Denison Camp Enjoys Spiritual Life Meeting

On December 9, 10, 11, Brother C. N. Hostetter conducted the Spiritual Life Meetings at the Denison, Iowa, Camp. "The Olive Branch," camp paper, states that Brother Hostetter spoke on the following subjects: "Is Life Worth Living;" "God-Made Man;" "How Can I Live Triumphantly?" Of his visit to this camp, Brother Hostetter says: "At Denison C.P.S. Camp I found a large number of young men who wish to give Christ preëminence in their lives. It was a pleasure to enjoy their fellowship. God Bless Camp Denison!"

Grottoes Boys Fight Forest Fires

Boys in the Grottoes, Virginia, Camp were called upon to fight a fire in the George Washington National Forest on November 18 and 19. Three crews, numbering around twenty men each, battled the blaze on a mountain at an elevation of four thousand feet. One crew returned to camp after a thirty-hour vigilance.

Diectors of Mennonite Camps to Meet in Chicago

On January 1, 1942, a meeting of the directors of the Mennonite Civilian Public Service Camps will be held at the Mennonite Home Mission in Chicago. A period of devotion and spiritual fellowship is planned. In addition to this there will be a discussion period when camp programs and questions will be considered. This meeting will precede the annual meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee which is scheduled to take place on January 2 and 3, also at the Mennonite Home Mission in Chicago.

OUT OF THE FIRE

Program for January 18, 1942

This week we offer these meditations by S. F. Pannabecker, our China missionary, based on experiences in the hectic spring of 1938.

These days may help us to understand and evaluate mission work more truly. Let us pray that God's Kingdom may come, and peace may reign in our country and in mission lands everywhere.

Build your program around mission material found in our church papers. Have members give reports on various assigned letters and articles.

I. "Wait for Jehovah . . . Yea, wait thou for Jehovah." Ps. 27:14.

It was in the first days of 1938 as North China was rapidly being occupied. My brother and I planned to send our families, temporarily located near Hankow, to Hongkong and then hurry back to our field for the period of the disturbance. Ordinarily a two-day trip, actually it took us seven weeks, with delay after delay. Here are some of the delays we met.

Jan. 26-29. Four days train delay got us to Hankow on Saturday noon, just as the banks, business places, and consulates were closing for the week end. Monday was Chinese New Year, the biggest holiday on the calendar.

Feb. 1-12. Unable to get new passports because of the holiday, the families were sent off with our passports, while our inland travel had to wait their arrival in Hongkong and return mail. Eleven days we waited.

Feb. 14-Mar. 2. We arrived Chengchow, junction for the north, just before the city received a terrible bombing. No trains that day but one the next, and we got onto a freight car, changed to the roof of a box car to cross the Yellow River bridge and caught a train going north. Just before our destination, great commotion. The train had orders to return to Chengchow immediately. Twenty-four hours of gruelling travel found us back at Chengchow just where we started. There for two weeks we awaited military operations.

Mar. 18-25. Having reached the southern end of our field by a different route, our request to cross the river and proceed northward was met by flat refusal from the local military official. We decided to visit the general, twenty miles away, and did, after two days rain. Got the necessary permission and returned to find skirmishing on the river bank and bullets flying about,—two more days delay.

Finally on March 26th we were able to cross the river and enter the thirty miles of no-man's land separating us from home.

The next evening we entered our compound and were welcomed by our own Christian workers and friends. They on their part had been through troublesome times and were at the moment at the climax of a critical situation which our arrival helped to allay.

II. "Before they call I will answer." Isa. 65:24.

The nervous strain these days comes not from visible danger as much as the knowledge that we are in a situation where anything can happen. Bandits burned up a dozen villages less than five miles away; soldiers break into other places and demand women and valuables. Just occasionally uncomfortable incidents do arise, as if to give us a taste but not require us to drink the whole cup.

There is an evil Korean attatched to the troops here. He has a craving for opium that demands daily satisfaction and forces him to extortion wherever possible. I met him on the street one evening. His eyes peered out of a narrow, sallow face, through thick glasses as he called me aside.

"How many refugees have you down there?"

"About two hundred here in the city and three-hundred out in the suburb," I replied.

"That will never do, I will be down in a few minutes."

Shortly after arriving at the church the Korean put in appearance. He claimed he had made two previous visits to the compound and our workers had interfered with his examination. Turning to Mr. Chao he accused him of interfering and set upon to beat him.

Then turning to me he said, "Where are those young men?"

"What young men? We have no young men here, only those you see here."

"O yes, you had. I was here before and saw one hundred young men with my own eyes. You have protected them and allowed them to escape. Tomorrow you must produce fifty young men for me."

The whole accusation and demand was based on falsehood, but what difference did that make. Then followed another attempt to beat up one of our men as a parting shot, "I'll be back tomorrow morning."

The next morning he failed to appear and the day passed quietly. Later he did return, several times in fact. Once to demand money under threat of dire consequences, once to demand the loan of a rifle saying his was broken, and once to anouce that the garrison commander would visit us the next day. All of these were fabrications.

These visits were enough to show us that we were the object of attention of evil men, but each passed off without untoward incident. In some way all evil designs were frustrated, and though there must have been many who coveted the funds that flowed through our hands, no plan to harm us materialized.

We choose to think that "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them."

BE WILLING TO FORGIVE

January 18, 1942

Song: "He Leadeth Me."
Scripture Reading: Matt. 18:21-25 (Questions and answers on this passage).
Song: "Dare to be Brave, Dare to be True."
Leader's Talk:
Bible Story: "Joseph Forgives His Brethren"—Gen. 37:18-36; 50:15-21.
Song: "Jesus, I Have Promised."
Bible Story: "David Shows Mercy to His Enemy," I Sam. 17; 18:1-16; 19:1-18; 20; 24.
Questions:
Prayer Song: "Saviour Teach Me Day by Day."
Prayer Poem: "My Evening Prayer."
Benediction:

Leader's Talk: Over and over the Bible tells us we must forgive, and not let anger, jealousy or unkind thoughts stay in our hearts.

We all need to be forgiven, for we all sin. We all want forgiveness from our heavenly Father; therefore we must hold our own hearts free from malice so that we will be generous with those who have sinned against us.

Sometimes we try to be kind to those who have mistreated us, only to be abused and our kindness answered with foul wrong. Then we wonder what is the use of answering wrong with kindness; we are only thought of as foolish for doing it.

When we begin to feel that way we should remember death and eternity. After all, when we come to that final rest beneath some grassy mound, what difference do a few slights and hurts make? When we consider the endless ages of eternity, what do a few hours of pain amount to? On the other hand, even though it is hard to be kind at times, and we feel we are lowering our dignity to do it, we will be grateful forever when we stand before that final Judge, our heavenly Father.

Questions and Answers:

1. How many times did Peter think it was necessary to forgive?
2. How many times did Jesus say we should forgive?
3. How did Jesus make His meaning clear? By telling a parable of the kingdom of heaven.
4. How much is ten thousand talents? This sum is at least ten million dollars, for one talent was worth $10,000.
5. Why was the man to be sold? According to many ancient laws, a man and his family might be sold into slavery to pay a debt.
6. What kind of a man did the king show himself to be?
7. Did the servant appreciate his kindness? No, because he in turn did not show mercy to his servant who owed only 100 shillings, or about $15. According to the Roman law a creditor might drag his debtor by the throat into court.
8. Did the wicked servant deserve any mercy from the king? One should expect to receive mercy as he is merciful. God is a loving Father, but He is also just. If we forgive others their sins against us, we may claim God's forgiveness, but if we are hard-hearted, He must be just.

Egypt, and there He grew up. He was the Son of God and He developed physically and mentally as other healthy children do. He grew up without taint of sin. He was strong in spirit. His soul was endued with extraordinary vigor. He was filled with unusual wisdom by the operation of the Holy Ghost. He spoke and acted wisely above his years. The grace of God was upon Him, and He was greatly beloved and high in favor with God and man. The infant Jesus was a pledge of the redemption which God was about to provide.

Why did Simeon bless the parents instead of the child (vs. 34)?

For whom did the Jews think salvation was provided by Jehovah?

What hopes of men are realized in Jesus?

CORRESPONDENCE

ALEXANDERWOHL CHURCH

Goessel, Kansas

Thanksgiving week was one of the great blessings for our church, for the blind evangelist, J. J. Esau, of Ohio, conducted a number of services at night and also gave us the Thanksgiving Day sermon in the morning. The church was filled to capacity almost every time. Bad roads kept many away in the beginning of the week. The blessings of these meetings will dwell in our minds for a long time, but especially will they remain with the children because of the way they were given them, namely by means of the object lesson.

This fall, Aganetha Fast also spoke to us very interestingly about her work.

In the forenoon of the last Sunday of the old church year, we dedicated our services to the ones that have gone on to glory during the year, of which there were nine.

William Flaming left for camp on December 10. He is stationed at Henry, Illinois. This brings the total of the boys from our congregation to fourteen.

Three of these, however, have been released; two are subject to be called again at any time.

On December 7, the class for special Bible instruction, given before baptism, met for the first time.

Mrs. P. H. Unruh has recovered from her illness sufficiently to be able to worship with us again. Mrs. H. J. Reimer's recovery is very slow, and she, as well as her family, needs our most earnest prayers.

Mr. and Mrs. John Schmidt had the rare privilege of celebrating their sixtieth wedding anniversary on December 14. The whole congregation was invited to praise the Lord with them. Mr. Schmidt has served the church as deacon since 1905. They are still able to attend church each Sunday and to take care of their household duties.

We have been able to feed upon the Word of God uninterrupted. Whenever Rev. P. H. Unruh had to leave for the sessions of the committee in charge of the C.P.S. camps, Rev. C. C. Wedel and Rev. J. J. Banman have faithfully and joyfully proclaimed the gospel in his place, in addition to their scheduled Sundays. It is with regret that we notice that our ministers are not as strong and healthy any more as they used to be. Young men, who will be ready to assist them or to step in their places when the time comes? Are you ready to say, "Here am I, Lord, send Thou me!"?

The Sunday School and the three Christian Endeavors have elected their officers for the coming year, so that each one knows his duty with the coming of the New Year. —Corr

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Pandora, Ohio

On January 1, 1942, our church will have its formal business meeting. The young people of the church above high school age hold monthly programs in the different homes to increase fellowship. The Sunday School teachers and officers had a fellowship supper in the church basement. Dr. J. S. Schultz of Bluffton College spoke on the "The Principles of Teaching." Much interest is manifested in the weekly study and prayer service by those who attend.

October 14, Miss Agnes Warkentin and Allan Moore were married at Ottawa with Rev. Musser officiating. Our choir leader, Mr. Lorin McNeal was married to Miss Mary Francis Cohagen, on November 15, and the couple are now making their home in Pandora where he is high school principal. On November 22 Miss Esther Hilty became the bride of Vinston Bucker in a church wedding. On November 23 a double wedding anniversary of forty years was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Burry. The other couple was Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hilty. This was a rare occasion, and many were the good wishes of their friends.

On November 2 four of our young people took part in the annual peace contest. They were: Ralph Althous, first; Adah Lehman, second; Valeta Suter and Mark Hilty. On November 20 we lost one member by death, Mr. Isaac Zuercher, aged eighty-one a native of Berne, Switzerland.

November 15, the Women's Mission Society and the Dorcas Girls had their annual mission sale at the school building. Donated goods brought $240. for missions. Mrs. Floyd Pannabecker was the speaker at the mother and daughter banquet on November 18.

November 16, the Men's Sunday School Class (Gid Schumacher, teacher) had charge of the regular Sunday evening service. The theme was "Our Country." Haydn Steiner, who made a trip last summer, showed beautiful slides of North America, and two talks were given on the same subject. December 14, the young women's class had charge. Their subject was "Christmas." On January 11 another women's class will have charge. Their subject will be "The New Year." This is to give different members a chance to serve.

The "One Who Was Grateful, Giving with Thanks," was the sermon topic of our annual Thanksgiving service, and a mission offering was received. November 23, the Lord's Communion was celebrated. November 30, Mr. Alvin Beachy, student of Bluffton College, peached for us.

Miss Eddythe Badertscher and Philip Merril were married December 20. On the morning of December 21 the children gave us a Christmas program. In the evening, Handel's Messiah was sung by the church choir of sixty voices, with Mr. Lorin McNeal as director. —Mrs. L. A. Amstutz, Corr

SICHAR MENNONITE CHURCH

Cordell, Oklahoma

On the morning of November 19 Miss Aganetha Fast visited our church. We learned much about the work and conditions of our mission field in China.

Rev. J. J. Esau brought us a splendid Thanksgiving sermon on Sunday morning, November 23. Then he went to the two mile distant Herold church to speak.

This part of Oklahoma has received plenty of moisture during the year, which seemed very unusual to us after so many years of drouth.

On the evening of November 24 the Sichar Mission circle held a sale of articles the members had made during the year. A good crowd had assembled. The articles sold brought $114.25.

—From the Church Messenger of the Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa, H. E. Nunemaker, pastor, we glean this prayer of an African school girl, "O Thou Great Chief, light a candle within our hearts that we may see what is therein and sweep the rubbish from Thy dwelling place."

—The following resolutions were recently sent by letter to the city council of Reedley, California, by the First Mennonite Church of that city: “(1) That we request our church members to refrain from the use of any foreign language in public. (2) that we urge our church members to cooperate in Blackouts. (3) That our church members be requested to prepare to house refugees from evacuated territory. (4) That we offer the facilities of our church for emergency hospitalization and emergency housing. (5) That German church services be discontinued for an indefinite period of time.”

—From the bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, Rev. Walter H. Dyck, pastor, “Christian amusements are those (1) about which I have no doubt, (2) that I can make a matter of prayer, (3) that will be of helpful influence with others, (4) those at which I would not mind being found when Christ returns for His church.”

—Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel in the Christmas message to his people said, “May the dark clouds be a means of driving us toward the Saviour, for praise be to His holy name there is hope, and those who trust Him shall yet see a new day when they shall enter into the joy of the Lord.”

—Some layman of the East Swamp Mennonite Church, Harold D. Burkholder, pastor, recently had charge of an evening service. Three of these men brought messages. Should not our churches have more of this?

today, it is probably because we refuse to pay the price.

Subjects for Prayer

Let us pray

- For the Church that Christ may dwell in it and all its members.
- For the Church that it may appreciate its high calling.
- For the Church that it may be challenged rather than overwhelmed by the turmoil and distress of the world.
- For the Church that it may grow in unity.
- For the Church where it suffers persecution.
- For the Church which is rising in non-Christian lands.
- For the Church as it faces the need for a just and durable peace.

THE BOOK OF THE LIVING GOD

Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. II Pet. 1:21.

Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope. Rom. 15:4.

The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Heb. 4:12.

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. II Tim. 3:16, 17.

THE MEDITATION

We distinguish four stages by which the Word of God comes to us:

(1) God does things—the deliverance from Egypt, the calling of Assyrians and Babylonians to world dominion, the raising up of Cyrus, the appearance of Jesus, etc.

(2) God gives interpreters of His mighty deeds—Moses and the prophets, apostles and evangelists, Jesus, mighty doer Himself and chief of all interpreters.

(3) A record is made (piece by piece, Heb. 1:1) of the deeds (history) and of what the deeds mean (teaching); and that record, made within the Church, collected by the Church, and preserved by the Church, is committed to the Church as normative for her thought and life and as a means of grace, a help of good life for her members.

(4) Scripture becomes a meeting-place where the living God comes face to face with the soul of man. In such a meeting there are two elements: the written or spoken word, and the present activity of the Spirit of God. Reformed theology has made much of the testimonium Spiritus Sancti internum, the testimony of the Spirit within. That testimony does not mean only that a conviction is wrought within us that such and such a statement is true; it means even more that, using Scripture as a channel, God communicates some portion of His living self to us. Grace, as well as truth, comes by Holy Scripture. If by Scripture the affections are purged, the mind enlightened, and the will set afresh, it is on every occasion the new doing of God.

"What do the Scriptures principally teach? The Scriptures principally teach what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man." (Westminster Shorter Catechism, Q.3).

(1). What we are to believe about God and His Salvation (the theme of all Scripture) it is given to the Church to declare (councils, scholars, saints). The Church draws her creed out of Holy Scripture, setting forth in order, showing what is central and what is peripheral, the organism of Christian truth. But she does not do this by a process of logical deduction from the ipsissima verba of the Bible. The truth of God is spiritually discerned. Under the present active guidance of the Spirit she discerns ever anew the pattern and shape of the faith. It is the same faith as Peter's and John's and Paul's, but it is a living faith only as it comes fresh from the living God to every generation and to each Christian man.

(2) What duty God requires of man has also to be declared out of Holy Scripture. The pattern of the good life is there and abides; the Spirit opens the Church's eyes to see it. And it is the fresh work of the Spirit every day to show it in its sternness and its beauty, binding our conscience and our will.

How are we to use Holy Scripture? To study it like any other book is to find there the literature of an ancient people, a wonderful literature it is true, but no more. For the Christian it is a book of personal religion: God speaks to me there. If I treat the Bible as an object to be scientifically investigated, I do not find God, only the ancient literature of the Jews. But if I listen for the voice of God, He is not slow to speak. Of course I study diligently, with the strength of both head and heart; but I do not take the book into my hand as master of it, I put myself in God's hand as master of me. His living Word always transcends the letter of the Book.

It is this living Word that becomes effectual to salvation: "That the Word of God may become effectual to salvation, we must attend thereunto with diligence, preparation, and prayer, receive it with faith and love, lay it up in our hearts, and practice it in our lives" (Shorter Catechism, Q.90). Daily Bible reading with prayer is the manna of the soul: "Give us this day our daily bread."

THE WORSHIP OF THE LIVING GOD

And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Rev. 5:13.

I exhort therefore, that, first of all suplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men. I Tim. 2:1.

My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God. Ps. 84:2.

Sir, we would see Jesus. John 12:21.

Read also: I Cor. 1:4-9; 11:17-34; 12-14; Eph. 1:3ff; 3:14-21; 4:1-16; Heb. 10:19-25; 12-18-29; Rev. 4-7; John 14-17.

THE MEDITATION

Worship is what we say and what we do when we stand together in the presence of God, and what God does with us there. It is of the nature of response, response to what God has done, is doing, and wants to do for men. The initiative is God's, He moves first. The response is ours. Apparently worship has from the beginning included two movements in a single action. First, God comes to us anew in and by His Word; secondly, we make our answer in prayer. There are just these two movements in common worship; there can be no third to match them. We may say our prayers, or sing them (hymns are prayers set to music) or we may express them in silence. The words may be said (or sung) by one person, or by all. Word and prayer are the two elements that belong to every complete act of worship.

The celebration of the Lord's Supper has always been the normative act of worship. There the Word is read and preached; this first movement takes us to the Upper Room. The second movement is the great act of communion with Him there. Of course we are not inactive in the first part, nor is God inactive in the second. There is intense activity of the whole man in receiving the Word; and there is intense activity of God in and during our activity of praying. He does so much when He makes us free of His fellowship in the Upper Room. He gives Himself so generously to us there (John 13-17), that the Lord's Supper remains through the ages not only the highest act of common worship, but also the chief means of grace.

The two chief parts of prayer on this high level are thanksgiving and intercession. (1) Gratitude for what God has done comes first; gratitude and adoration are the heart of worship ("Eucharist" means "thanksgiving"). Thanksgiving begins about the third verse of the first chapter in St. Paul's Epistles and rolls through to the end. It is the strain that echoes and re-echoes through the Book of Revelation (esp. chapters 4-7). There is exaltation of spirit; but a glimpse of ourselves in the same moment means humiliation and confession. (2) From the same high level we look out on our brother men, we look at them through the Master's eyes and we see what God made them for and how far He has gone and will go to have them be at the last what He intended at the first. We look and love; we cry to God on their behalf (intercession), and we give ourselves up to their service (consecration).

Let us consider why we go to church. For what we can get out of it? And not rather to give: (1) to give ourselves in gratitude and praise and adoration to God, and (2) to give ourselves to our fellow men? Of course we receive, but unless we give we cannot receive freely. To give ourselves up, each with all and all with each, to God and to our brethren, that is common worship.

Let us remember that going to church is not like going to a concert. We go to do something, not primarily to have something done for us. It takes effort to yield our thought up to God, to yield our affections and impulses, to yield our personal purposes that God's will alone may be done. Then God, the faithful, living God, is active too, remaking the inner man after His own likeness.

Let us consider how we defeat God, enfeeble ourselves, and disable our fellows, if we are not in our place every Sunday, there for an act of utter submission and of great strenuousness.

And when we are there let us forget ourselves and see only God and our needy brethren.

A DAY WITH THE LIVING GOD

My times are in Thy hand. Ps. 31:15.

Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid Thine hand upon me. Ps. 139:5.

Casting all your cares upon Him for He careth for you. I St. Pet. 5:7.

I girded thee, though thou hast not known me. Isa. 45:5.

Thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling. Ps. 116:8.

Read also: Ps. 23, 37, 103, 121, 139; Matt. 6:25-33; Lk. 10:25-37; 15:11-32; 18:9-14; Jo. 13-17; Rom. 12, 13; I Cor. 13; Eph. 6:10-20; Col. 3:1-4, 12-17

THE MEDITATION

You awake to the day's work rested and expectant, for the Lord has been at work all the night keeping your heart beating and renewing weary muscles and nerves.

As you dress and eat, your ideas, affections and purposes are being sorted out and arranged for the day. In this process, which is only partly deliberate, your chief help is a little act of private devotion, a suitable portion of Scripture read carefully, reflected on, and turned into prayer. Then you go out fortified for the events of the day, they are God's events for you. You go out feeling at home in God's world and God's providence, saying, "This is the day which the Lord hath made." (Ps. 118:24).

You work diligently and with zest, for it is the Lord's work you are at. You know too well what matters to tolerate the notion that you are doing the Lord's work only by talking in prayer meetings or listening to a sermon. All parts of our on-going daily life are the Lord's work. Said an old saint to a young farmer: "Work your field well, David, it is the Lord's field." As Master-Craftsman himself he has satisfaction in every good piece of work you complete, a thing of integrity and beauty. Blessed are you, workman of God, when head and heart and hand are diligent and happy.

Some who work with you are like-minded, and each is a strength to all the others. But many are a trial to you, and bearing with them is part of the Lord's work for you. When they swear and tell foul stories you do not set up as censor of their talk. When they defame good people and impute bad motives, when they assail religion and say hard things of the Church, you know, though they don't, that they are probably on the defensive, and ill at ease. God expects of you patient and peaceable conduct and a kind deed or kind word some day in time of need, will tell on the gainsayers, for God is struggling with them all the time.

In family worship you listen to God's voice—no strange voice; and you speak to Him simply and openly, for you and yours are not strangers to Him. Many things are left unsaid, but He knows them, and new blots on each fair life, every budding ambition, the burden of this relative's poverty and that one's shame and the worldly success of a third. He knows and understands every kneeling heart, and He deals with every soul apart with the particularizing love of a mother.

"This is the day which the Lord hath made" for you, and you have been glad and rejoiced in it. When you go to bed and commit the day, and all your care to Him, your family, your fellow workmen, your work, and all the rest; you cast your burden on Him, for He careth for you. Because He neither slumbers nor sleeps, you can lay yourself down and sleep in peace.

Then when the day comes that crowns all your days, you will say:

"With mercy and with judgment
My web of life He wove."

Subjects for Prayer

Let us pray

THE MEDITATION

The first affirmation about God that we need to make today is that He is the great Doer, the living Doer, who made all things, who sustains all things at all times. The Bible is never interested in the mere existence of God; from cover to cover it is concerned for what He does, and what He means by doing it. The Bible knows that all things—men and nations included—belong together in one order because the hand of God upholds them. The common phrase, "He was, and is, and is to come" (not "is to be") gives a picture of God as up and doing, every moment bringing in something new. "The Coming One"—how poverty-stricken it makes the notion of the deists and mechanical materialists. "Am Anfang war die That" (Goethe). And His Providential maintenance of His creation is one work, past, present, future. Beginning and end belong together, and there is no point between where God is not active.

The first affirmation carries a second with it. Where does the end lie? What is the quality of this whole movement? The Bible is no less clear. His purpose for men and nations is character, character of a piece with His own. The words "In His image, after His likeness" define intention at the beginning (Gen. 1:26), fulfillment at the end, for we are "transformed into the same image from glory to glory" (II Cor. 3:18). It is above all in Christ that God has declared the coral purpose of His working, declaring it in His teaching, declared it in His struggle and victory over the world, declared it in the Cross—so far does He go to make men what He wants them to be. Jesus believed that God's providential order had a meaning, believed it to the uttermost. "Hereby know we love (what love is), for He laid down His life for us" (I Jo. 3:16). So we get an unforgettable view of the quality of God's concern for men (Jo. 3:16): He loves them, He will make them as nearly like Himself as finite creatures can be, and He stops short of no labour or suffering if only He may accomplish His purpose. The cross of wood has been taken away, but the Cross in the heart of God abides till men cease from their wilful and stubborn ways, and turn to Him.

It is because God is all in earnest about His moral purpose that the Bible has so much to say about judgment. For when man turns away from the chief good and seeks lower good or positive evil judgment is the answer, the inevitable answer of the living, loving, resolute God. As the Bible is full of sin, so it is full of judgment; in the meantime "His judgments are in all the earth" (Ps. 105:7), and the end is the Day of Judgment. The early Christians did not hesitate to speak of the "Wrath of God."

There were times in the past, not unlike this present, when men believed they saw the wrath of the living God blazing forth upon earth. Prophets of both Testaments beheld judgments coming upon men and nations. The present turmoil and fury—an episode in the whole on-going life of men—is beyond our comprehension; "His judgments are a great deep" (Ps. 36:6). But we understand enough to tremble in awe of Him who is Master of it all. We understand enough to know that "by terrible things in righteousness" He is answering us; (Ps. 65:5). "Clouds and darkness are round about Him; righteousness and judgment are the foundation of His throne" (Ps. 97:2). And we understand anew that the living God is wholly in earnest about His moral purpose. "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:9).

Let us humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God—and not ourselves only, but the whole sinful mass of mankind. However bewildered we may be, and unnerved by guilt, God stands sure; His world is not out of hand.

Let us look fixedly unto Him who worketh righteousness till His earnestness be lodged in us.

Let us look fixedly unto Him who has paid and goes on paying such a price for our righteousness, till we know "the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable to His death" (Phil. 3:10).

Let us look fixedly unto Him who was dead and is alive again, waiting for "the power of His resurrection" to triumph over every wickedness of man.

So shall we "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" (Eph. 6:10). "The Lord God is the true God, He is the living God, and an everlasting King" (Jer. 10:10).

The Mighty God

Isaiah spoke of the coming Messiah as "The Mighty God." He prophesied "the government shall be upon his shoulder" and "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." Many find it difficult to reconcile Isaiah's prophecy with governmental conditions as they exist in the world today.

That government which seems most real to many today, even to many Christians, is that of the fuehrer, the prime minister, the emperor, the president, as they command destroyers, tanks, and bombers to rush into battle. The general and his mighty army are very impressive, and the government of the Prince of Peace appears feeble. But is it?

No other power than the power of Christ can free man from his sins. The power of Herod, of Pilate, of Napoleon couldn't free men from their sins. Neither can any earthly power today. Sinful men can be subdued and restrained. However, that does not remove their sinful impulses which ever break out in some manner of sin. The fundamental problem in the world is the changing of men's hearts from selfish sinfulness to sacrificial Christlikeness. Only Christ, The Mighty God, can do that. The changing of a heart does not ring out in the world like the boom of a mighty cannon or as the explosion of a bomb. It is a mysterious act and a very thorough one. It makes men Christlike and powerful in His might "to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." —rw.

What If They Say

What if they say, "Isn't the government a 'minister of Gods' bearing all responsibility for the requests it makes of its citizens? Killing isn't murder when one does it for the government, is it?"

In Rom. 13:3-4 and related passages we find at least three references to the function of government. (1) As "minister of God," (Gr. Diakonos) meaning "servant" or "laborer"; it is to serve the good of people, and not as totalitarianism teaches, make people servants of the state. As man was not made for the Sabbath, neither was he to be slave to his "servant." Government is a servant "to thee for good." (2) As "minister of God," authorities are to "praise" them that "do that which is good," or as Peter says, "Praise them that do well," (I Pet. 2:14). Such Christian conduct is the back-bone of a nation's morality and its continued existence. Governments do well to recognize and reward its people through humble service. (3) As "minister of God" rulers are "a terror to the evil" (vs.3), acting in the "punishment of evildoers (I Pet. 2:14). It must see that the liberties of individual citizens are safeguarded. Criminals must be restrained for their own good, as well as for the good of the community life. Police are essential to the maintenance of order.

The prevailing principle, therefore, is: "Do that which is good," and the government is there to respect such "well-doing." Note, however, that even though the state administers accepted codes of civil practice, it is beyond its province to define the word, "good." When an individual kills at government command, it still remains an individual responsibility. Instead, true Christians want to "be ready to every good work," (Tit. 3:1) of both local and national importance.

Church Etiquette

1. Come early.

2. Never pass up the aisle during the reading of the Scripture Lesson. You distract others and destroy the effect of the Word.

3. If the sermon has begun, take a seat near the door, even if you are a prominent member.

4. Be devout in every attitude—the church is not a theater. You come to worship God, not to whisper, lounge, or sleep.

5. Be thoughtful of the comfort of others. Never make a haystack of yourself at the end of a pew and expect others to crawl over you to reach a seat.

6. Help strangers to find and follow the service in the hymnal. If they have no book, share your own with them.

7. Always remember that strangers are the guests of the church members. Treat them with the same courtesy as you would if they should visit in your own home.

8. Never put on your wraps during the last hymn —they will still be there after the benediction.

9. Never rush for the door after the benediction as though the church were on fire.

10. Remember at all times that you are in the house of the Lord.

RELIEF

PLANS FOR BUILDING HOSPITAL IN PARAGUAY

Recent letters from Brother Vernon Schmidt tell of his safe arrival in Asuncion, Paraguay, on November 16, where he was greeted by Brothers Heinrich, Legiehn, Friesen, and Braun of the Paraguayan Mennonites.

Brother Schmidt's letters speak of his eagerness to begin his work. He says, "I am very happy to be able to state that we have arrived at satisfactory working arrangements to begin work on our hospital." The several Mennonite groups will, according to plans, donate the labor for the hospital.

BROTHER M. C. LEHMAN REPORTS

In a letter to Sister Lehman, dated November 11 and received December 9, Brother Lehman tells of assuming more responsibility for relief in Poland and employing labor for handling the additional work. He says, "The Mennonites have an established reputation here in Germany for such work, and we are on the ground swell this time and someone will have to undertake heavy responsibility of an organizational and administrative nature necessitating accurate knowledge of conditions as they exist here."

He also says, "I had a careful look into possibilities at Geneva. I feel that in time we must have headquarters there. The Swiss Mennonites appreciate American contacts in a way that no other Mennonites in Europe do. I was in the Langnau congregation on Sunday and had a delightful time and was assured that most of the Swiss ministry favored a program from American Mennonitism of the very kind we talked about before I came."

RELIEF WORKERS IN FRANCE PURCHASE SIX TONS OF MILK

Brother J. N. Byler writes on November 16, that six tons of powdered milk were bought for the children in Lyon where he is working. This is a fine purchase of food though it will be none too large a one for the 10,000 chlidren of the city of Lyon.

HELP FOR NEEDY BRITONS

A letter dated November 11, 1941, from Brother John E. Coffman gives an interesting summary of the work which he and Brother Peter Dyck have been carrying on in England. Among persons benefiting from their work are children in Wickhurst Manor Nursery Home, the Basque Spanish Children in Plymouth, as well as many individuals in Coventry and other centers where bombings have been severe.

LETTERS BY REV. W. C. VOTH

Here in Waterloo many people work in factories, most of the men of the Mennonite church being on night shifts. A good many girls and some of the women also work. Consequently, we did not expect a large attendance for the illustrated lecture last night. Even at that, we had nearly a church full, though men were few. There was very good interest, and a lot of questions were asked at the close.

I have had a lovely time staying with the Rev. J. H. Janzen family. Visited others for several meals, but my nights from Saturday till this (Thursday) morning, were spent here. They took me by car back to Vineland this morning. Tomorrow I go to Toronto, and from there to Reesor, which is in northwest Ontario.

Nakena, Ontario, October 7. I am in North Ontario waiting for my next train. Really ought to be in Winnipeg right now. I had been told I could get a train on Monday, but when I got to Reesor, by telephoning to the next station (no agent at Reesor) I found that there was no train on Monday; so I wired Rev. Ewert that I could not be there Tuesday.

Rev. Benjamin Ewert sent me the program for Manitoba, and it is plenty close, but will take long enough at that—until November 10. At that rate it is a real question whether I can get home by Christmas. Then, too, I should get to Alberta as early as possible, because later one gets snowed in. There has been a lot of rain here. It started snowing this evening. It is now falling heavily, but it is still warm enough so that it melts as it reaches the ground. There have been only a few days of sunshine here since the first part of August, it is said. There is rain without end; the people cannot plow the little fields they have wrested from the forests.

My most lonesome day so far was Saturday at Toronto. I ran around some by street car to see some of our Nazarene missionary friends, but with little success. Saw part of Chinatown and went to a Chinese restaurant. Read some, figured my accounts, wrote letters, and so the day—a dreary, rainy day—passed by. Naturally my thoughts turned to the family circle. . . . The Lord has been kind and gracious to us. There is so much to be thankful for. I heard some sad conversations of unhappy people on the train. They worried about the possibility that others would outclass them in social circles, worried terribly about some money investments; then were perfectly miserable because airplane tickets had all been sold for a week ahead on the Montreal-Winnipeg line, and so they had to ride on that "idiotically slow creature," the train, which really, as trains go, is a pretty good train. I said to myself, "I am glad I am not rich—in the things the world calls rich." We have a precious Saviour, a home and family with the shining jewels of love and happiness in it, something to wear, food, and health, and something to do. Such riches are better than much gold.

Now here I am in Winnipeg again. Am finishing this in Rev. Ewert's home. I am to leave for McCreary early tomorrow morning. It is a question of how letters can reach me while up north, as connections are very slow. I am to go back through Winnipeg a week from Monday.

Oak Lake, Manitoba, October 20. It seems to me like it is a very long time since I left home. I hardly get time to write letters home. I have been 'way up north to Swan River, White Beach, and Swan Plain. Coming back to Brandon on Thursday by bus was a long pull. Left at 8:00 A. M. and arrived at Rivers at 11:00 P. M. Had three meetings Friday. Saturday I went eighty miles over poor roads and had meetings afternoon and evening. There were services Sunday at McCaully both morning and afternoon; from there I went sixty miles to Oak Lake for supper and an evening meeting. Had another meeting at Oak Lake this morning, and I am now on the train to Winnipeg.

I had a cold earlier in the week, but I am well over it now. I am rather tired, though. I got fine receptions and had very appreciative listeners. That makes up for much of it. For the next several days I am to have three meetings a day, so I am writing this letter on the train. . . .

Later . . . Just came through Winnipeg, where I changed trains and came on to Niverville. While passing through Winnipeg Rev. Ewert and Rev. J. H. Enns came to the train to see me and gave me several letters, two from home, which I was very glad indeed to get.

St. Elizabeth, Manitoba, October 25. This is again Saturday, and what a busy week this was! Had hoped to write several days ago, but didn't have ten minutes time. Thus far I have kept well, for which I praise the Lord. The interest for missions is good everywhere, but at a number of places folks are still very busy. In this neighborhood they grow a lot of sugar beets; there have been over-abundant rains all over, so they had to wait so long with harvesting. Even threshing is not over in lots of places. Much wheat and other grain has been lost. Several places still had shocks standing in the water.

I found some more of my relatives out here (among the immigrants). I often wondered about the family of my grandfather's brother. I knew that the folks used to talk about Wilhelm Voth, who, they said was elder of the Alexanderwohl church in Russia. Here I now came across five of his grandsons. Met two of them, John and George. At St. Elizabeth I met the third brother, Wilhelm—so I have a name-sake here. They are real nice folks.

John had the most trying experience in Russia before they came to Canada. He got chopped in the head and left lie. Later another soldier came along. John was still conscious, so this one beat him across the back of his head with the butt of his gun. Then John was unconscious for a long time. When he "came to" he managed to crawl to the house, where their then eight-year-old son washed the blood off as well as he could. The back of the skull had a gash two inches wide and four to five inches long. They could see the brain. What made it worse was that Mrs. Voth was very sick in bed. A little girl had been born just two hours before. They had no doctor or any other help in the house. The next morning a neighbor came over, and they took Mr. Voth to the hospital. There the doctor said they would put his bed next to the door, as he would not live more than a short while. He pulled through, though. He is crippled, and his voice is not natural.

Well, here it is the 29th. Sorry I did not get this off sooner. The schedule is just a bit too close; had to do my best to keep going for the last couple of days. . . . However, even at that we had a full house with very good attention, so I should not complain. The Lord has been very kind, and has blessed in spite of everything. I praise His name for it. This is the day of the Ministers' Conference. I am to speak on "Bewahrung in Anfechtung" based on James 1:1-12. That is tonight, and this is quite a day. Snow and more snow. This morning it was white with a five-inch blanket and falling fast. We finally got to the highway in Mr. Hiebert's car, and the bus being late, could still get it to Winnipeg. Now at 4:30 it is still snowing.

Winkler, Manitoba, November 5. . . . My next mail can be sent to Munich, North Dakota, General Delivery.

Munich, North Dakota, November 11. Am back in the United States once more. Came from Whitewater, Manitoba, this morning and got here at noon. . . . Next schedule—three days around Munich; Friday night I am to leave for Wolf Point, Montana; then I am to go to Bloomfield, one hundred miles southeast of Wolf Point; come back Tuesday, the 18th; then leave for Coaldale and Rosemary, Alberta. Love to all, and I hope this finds all of you well.

JOHN THE BAPTIST AND JESUS

Luke 3:1-6, 15-17, 21, 22

TOPIC: John's Testimony Concerning Christ

Introduction

John the Baptist is a unique character in Biblical history. He was the connecting link between the old and the new dispensation. He was a prophet who came in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke 1:17). He was the forerunner of the King. He proclaimed His coming and then His presence to the people. John spent most of his time until he was thirty years old in the deserts communing with God and preparing for his mission. God was his teacher, clearly revealing to him the nature of his work and his message. John was probably quite well known to the people by reputation. He was the son of a well-known priestly family, and the unusual circumstances attending his birth were widely known; his manner of life probably aroused much comment. Many came to hear his earnest and fiery message.

John's Unique Message, vss. 1-6, 16, 17

Luke gives a definite statement from history to help us in knowing the date of John's ministry (vss. 1, 2), probably, in the spring or summer of 26 A. D. He evidently moved about in the country bordering on the Jordan (vs. 3). He preached a message which needs to be proclaimed in every age. He called people to repentance and a change in manner of life. They were to repent of their sins, have a godly sorrow for sin, and leave their sinful ways. Such repentance is a prerequisite to the remission or forgiveness of sins. Those who expressed repentance and a willingness to forsake sins were baptized. To John a change of will and disposition and of heart to accord with God's way was altogether necessary for entrance into the kingdom. Baptism is the external symbol of the inward change.

John quotes Isa. 40:3-5 (vss. 4-6). He called himself the voice whose business it was to call upon the people to prepare the way into their hearts for the King. John's preaching was a preparation for Christ's coming. The people prepared their hearts morally and spiritually by forsaking their sins. Spiritual preparation for Christ's coming into our hearts is necessary. The high places of pride must be leveled. The valleys of spiritual indifference must be filled and all crooked and sinful places must be made straight. Christ will appear, and God's salvation through Christ is to be made known to all people (vs. 6). John awoke the slumbering conscience of all Palestine. He laid the foundation for the work that Christ was to do.

John's preaching aroused great interest and people wondered whether he was the expected Christ (vs. 15). He made it plain that the coming One was far above him in character and power (vss. 16, 17). John could arouse the people to repentance. He could baptize them with water, but only Jesus could give to them the true spiritual baptism which worked a permanent change in their hearts by the power of the Holy Spirit. Jesus' ministry would result in a purifying separation of the good from the evil in human life. Punishment is certain and severe for the evil in the day of judgment (vs. 17).

John Baptizes Jesus vss. 21, 22

Jesus was about thirty years old at the time of baptism (vs. 23). He took his place with other men in baptism and thus showed his approval of John and his preaching. His baptism was a very solemn induction into his public ministry. Jesus was praying while being baptized and the Holy Ghost came upon Him in a supernatural manifestation (vs. 22). God, the Father, spoke to Jesus, showing His full approval of His Son. Jesus entered upon his Messianic ministry with the Father's blessing and in the power of the Holy Spirit.

Why was John's message about repentance so urgent?

When is open-air preaching desirable?

Why, in your opinion, did John draw so large a crowd of hearers?

MENNONITE BIBLE MISSION

Dear Member:

We are summoning the members of our church to unite in a Church Prayer Crusade during the month of October. We believe that such a united effort in prayer will be a great blessing to the church. The early Christians, after the departure of the Lord, went to Jerusalem to an upper room and there continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. Acts 1:14.

Jesus says: And I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shallask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven. Matt. 18:19.

Will you unite with us to pray as given on the enclosed card. This is for each day of this week.

Kindly return the post card. It will encourage us to have the full support of our members. A new prayer card will be sent for the next week.

Your servant in Christ

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Harold D. Burkholder, Quakertown, Pa.

JANUARY 18—"We then as workers together with Him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." II Cor. 6:1.

The story is told of a boy mowing a lawn with his dog harnessed to the lawn mower. Someone came walking by, and as the dog noticed him, he stopped and barked. The man apologized for disturbing the mowing, but the boy remarked, "Oh well, you know, it's a lot easier to bark than to pull."

The Lord needs "pullers" and not "barkers" in His service. Success is imminent when people pull together. We have been called to be fellow-workers with God, whether we are Mennonites, Baptists, or any other group. It is only as we work together that we glorify Him. We never get very far by "barking" at one another when we fail to agree on some principles. If the interest for lost souls is there, then let us "pull" together.

JANUARY 19—"But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." II Pet. 3:18a.

A mother is always interested in the growth and development of her child. God is likewise interested in the spiritual development of His children. Peter did not say, "Grow into grace," but "Grow in grace." Grow in that grace you received by the new birth from above. It is impossible for one who is dead to grow; such are we without Christ. (Eph. 2:1, 5) Growth is associated with "life," and, in this case, our new life in Christ. Let us, "as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that we might grow thereby." An undernourished child is irritable; the undernourished Christian is the one that causes friction, barking, and other disturbances in the church. Too many of us are still on the bottle. Christian friend, "let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ," through the study of His Word.

JANUARY 20—"For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Luke 14:11.

A negro seated on a rail fence in Arkansas was intently looking at the telegraph poles. A man passing by said, "Watching the wires?" "Yes sah." "Waiting to see a message go by?" The negro smiled and said, "Yes sah." The visitor then tried to explain how these messages were sent, and concluded by saying, "Now I'm sure you know something about telegraphy." "Yes sah," replied the negro. "By the way, what is your work?" asked the gentleman. "I'm a telegraph operator at the Hazel Switch Station, sah."

(From S. S. Times)

JANUARY 21—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve: . . . but as for me and my house we will serve the Lord." Josh. 24:15.

Life is filled with its many choices, among them the choice of a life companion and the choice of a life work. Joshua speaks here of a choice which involves a Divine life companion, one whom we all need. This might be called the supreme choice of life. His choice was not determined by that of others. Even if in the minority, he and his house would serve the Lord. Each one of us are face to face with such a decision. Will it be "Christ or Barabbas?", God or mammon? Let us with the determination of Joshua choose to serve the Lord with our whole house. "It pays to serve Jesus each step of the way."

JANUARY 22—"Come, for all things are now ready." Luke 14:17.

A little boy who saw for the first time the sign "Common" in Boston, at the entrance of the great park known as Boston Common, called out joyfully, "It don't say, 'Keep off the grass;' it says 'Come on!'" This is truly the gospel invitation. Not "keep off," but "Come on" trust Christ as your Saviour. We need to come to Christ for salvation and to keep coming for daily cleansing, in order that we might go out and get others to come.

Just as I am, and waiting not
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To thee whose blood can cleanse each spot
O Lamb of God I come!

JANUARY 23—"See then that ye walk circumspectly." Eph. 5:16a.

The word "circumspectly" can be translated "accurately." It gives us a picture of a cat, on a high narrow wall, walking carefully over broken glass. As such, the Christian is always to walk. Satan has broken glass and other pitfalls along the way by which he hopes to injure our feet and thus hinder our walk before God and man. You are the only Bible the world reads. What kind of a gospel does your life preach to them? Two men were walking down the street of a western city when one remarked, "There goes a soldier." "How do you know?" asked the other. "I can tell by his walk." Beloved, can others tell by your walk that you are a Soldier of the Cross and enlisted in the Army of the Lord?

JANUARY 24—"My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me." John 10:27.

What comfort in the words, "My sheep," as they come from the lips of Christ, of whom the sheep can say, "My Shepherd." The Shepherd gave His life for the sheep, sheep that no one can now pluck out of His omnipotent hands, sheep whom He knows by name. We are not some insignificant individual unknown to the Saviour. Having lived among men, He knows our every need. This being true, are we on the other hand mindful of Him? Do we take time to hear His voice? If we fail in this, how then can we follow Him? Let us not run ahead of the Lord during this year. Where He leads us let us follow.

PRAYER FOR COMING WEEK

Our Father who art in heaven. We thank Thee for the Lord Jesus Christ and His death on the cross. We pray for a deeper understanding of the meaning of the cross in our lives.

Teach me what it means to surrender my life to Christ.

Help me to see some of the great blessings of a surrendered life.

Help me to make fully this surrender.

TO OUR PRAYING CHRISTIANS:

The united prayers of last week have been a real joy and blessing to us. We believe our Heavenly Father is pleased with these prayers uttered in sincerity. We are confident that you will continue with us in prayer during this coming week.

After we have prayed the prayer of consecration and surrender to Christ, we would want to pray for a greater trust in God as our Heavenly Father and in Jesus Christ as our Saviour and Guide. We want to feel that we can trust God in all things, in joys and sorrows; even in tribulations and distress. We want to fully believe that He will guide in the way of righteousness and the way of a victorious life.

Lord teach us how to pray.

PRAYER FOR COMING WEEK

O God, we pray for the grace to trust Thee as children trust their Father. All around us forces of evil are let loose which make men's hearts afraid. We look upon a world of turmoil and our spirits are filled with a sense of helplessness.

Give us therefore, O Lord, a trust in Thee that will create new courage in our hearts. Lift us out of our timidity and fearfulness into the realm of confidence, and courage, by faith in the Son of God. Send us forth with the armor of the Living God that we may be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might —And Thine shall be the honor and the Glory forever —Amen.

(What other churches are willing to follow in such a prayer crusade?) —A. J. Neuenschwander

CORRESPONDENCE

HEREFORD MENNONITE CHURCH

Bally, Pennsylvania

The holiday season is upon us and in spite of all conditions in the world we have a lot to be thankful for when we think of God's wonderful gift, Jesus Christ who came to seek and save all of us.

The Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pennsylvania, has been having services every Sunday morning. Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson, our pastor, spoke in the churches of Indiana and Kansas during the last week in November. He came back enthused with the reception he received in touring the country.

We have made some renovations in our church auditorium, outstanding of which is the laying of rich looking new carpet which was a gift from Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Hagen in memory of Mrs. Hagen's mother who was a member of our church.

Six young people took their stand for Christ on the first Sunday in November at our Fall Communion Service. At this service one baby was consecrated, and one small girl was also consecrated.

Death also took its toll when we laid away Mrs. Warren Leaver, Mrs. Ellanora Oberholtzer, Mr. Sidney S. Borneman, and Mrs. Irvin B. Bauer. Mr. Bauer was killed in the train wreck in Sandusky, Ohio, during November.

The Primary Department held its Christmas program on Sunday morning before Christmas, and on Chritmas Day, in the evening, the Intermediate and Senior Departments gave the pageant entitled: "The Christmas Quest." It was written by Mrs. Nevin Yost and her sister, Louise Kemp, who are members of our Sunday School.

New year is upon us and it behooves us that we make the most use of all time we have in serving our Master and following His teachings as we have them in our New Testament.

A Happy New Year to our editor and all the readers of The Mennonite.

—Mae Latshaw, Press Agent

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Aberdeen, Idaho

December 14 we closed a week of very inspirational meetings which were held by Rev. Homer Leisy, Dallas, Oregon. Each evening Rev. Leisy, with the aid of pictures, addressed the children. The meetings were well attended.

In December thirteen catechetical students were baptized. We were reminded of the promises which we had made to our Master at a similar occasion. Last Sunday we observed the Lord's Supper. These different services have helped many of us to realize in a new way God's great love and sacrifice for us.

May He grant that we may continue to grow in "grace and knowledge" of Him.

Previously we have had bazaars, but this Thanksgiving the True Blue and King's Daughters societies held special offerings. The Ladies Mission Society arranged a splendid fellowship supper at the church parlors after which an offering was held. Each offering was very generous.

This year many of our members are spending the Christmas holidays with friends and relatives away from home, some at the coast and some in Kansas and other eastern states. Mrs. Frank Wedel and children and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Wenger, and family are in Newton. Many students and teachers were able to come home for this occasion. This always gives joy to all of us.

The cantata, "The Christmas Glory," by Heyser, will be given Sunday night, December 28, under the direction of Gus Klempel, accompanied on the piano by Miss Margaret Giesbrecht.

After years of planning new pews have been ordered. Their installation is expected to be complete in about five months.

Miss Ruth Jezer, recently returned from Venezuela, South America, was with us for a few days visiting relatives and addressing different meetings. She has been a missionary there for three years. We are looking forward to a visit from Missionary Paul Wengers. We pray for their safe arrival. Paul's parents are awaiting them in a special way. Grandmother is not well, but Mr. Wenger is at church services nearly every Sunday. Their lives have been splendid testimonies of God's grace and goodness.

May we all show forth God's love in this unsettled state of national affairs. May we stand fast in the faith! —Mrs. Gus Klempel, Corr.

IN MEMORIAM

LINDA PENNER BARTEL, daughter of Henry T. and Mathilda Penner, was born near Hillsboro, Kansas, December 11, 1902, and died, together with her new-born baby daughter, on December 4, 1941. She was a faithful and active member of the Johannestal Church.

She united in marriage with Henry H. Bartel in the year 1927. Her husband and three small sons, twelve, nine and five years of age, mourn deeply their severe loss. She is also survived by her father, H. T. Penner, three brothers living near Hillsboro, Erwin, Herman, and Milton, and three sisters, Mrs. H. W. Bartel and Mrs. Walter Schmidt of Hillsboro, and Mrs. John F. Schmidt of Marietta, Ohio. She had a large circle of near relatives and many friends who mourn the loss of one whom they loved.

The double funeral was conducted in the Johannestal Church, which was filled to overflowing. Words of comfort were spoken by her pastor, J. M. Regier, assisted by Rev. A. E. Funk.

ALBERT I. NISWANDER was born March 6, 1888, in Richland township, Ohio, the son of Elias and Christina (Welty) Niswander. On January 1, 1916, he was married to Ethel Ream.

Mr. Niswander was associated with his brother C. F. Niswander in the implement business in Bluffton from 1912 to 1924 when he sold his interests to his brother but remained with the firm as a salesman.

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Letha, teaching at Celina; a brother C. F. Niswander; and three sisters, Mrs. Rhoda Hilty, of Bluffton; Miss Catherine Niswander, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Mrs. Menno Bixel, Bellefontaine.

FANNY FLICKENGER STUCKY was born in Russia April 23, 1859. There she spent her childhood days. During the last year of her life in Russia, she was baptized by Elder Jacob Stucky. In 1874, she, with her parents Jacob and Barbara Flickenger, came to America and settled in South Dakota. On October 28, 1879, she was united in marriage to Joseph Stucky. To this union, nine children were born, five of which the Lord called while in early childhood. In 1879 they moved to Pretty Prairie, Kansas. There they helped to establish the Pretty Prairie Mennonite Church. On October 23, 1901, they moved to Kingman, Kansas. There they helped to establish the Bethany Mennonite Church.

September 8, 1928, her husband preceded her to his eternal rest. As she then made her home with her children, she became a member of the Zion Church. She remained a faithful member until her death September 14, 1941.

She reached the age of eighty-two years, seven months, and fourteen days. She leaves to mourn her departure, four children: Mrs. Jonas Preheim, Mrs. Andrew Schwartz, Andrew Stucky, and Henry Stucky, all of Murdock, Kansas; eight grandchildren; two great grandchildren; three sisters, and one brother: Mrs. Mary Sauer, Lincoln, California; Mrs. Katie Shenkle, Lincoln, California; Mrs. Lizzie Junke, Miami, Florida; and Rev. J. J. Flickenger, Pretty Prairie, Kansas.

The funeral services were held in the Zion Mennonite Church in Kingman, Kansas. Rev. Jacob Unruh was in charge. Rev. E. J. Neuenschwander spoke on I Peter 1:3, and Rev. Jacob Unruh used Num. 23:10 as a basis for his remarks.

ANNA RATZLAFF, née Bergen, was born August 13, 1894, at Buhler, Kansas. In the fall of the same year the parents moved onto a farm near Corn, Oklahoma, where they still reside. The deceased received her elementary education in the O. K. school

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Life in Denison C.P.S. Camp

(Reprinted from The Mountain Lake Observer)

I have read the letters written by the boys in the various army camps describing the various maneuvers and army life. I want to tell you and your readers of another road in our Selective Service program. This is the road that many of our Mennonite boys have already taken, and I hope that more will join us in our stand as a conscientious objector. We, as Mennonites, will have to stand together if we hope to keep our principles and our religion.

Life in Camp Denison is very interesting, meeting the 138 boys from about eighteen different church groups, and about eighteen different states is in itself an experience which one will never forget. The boys live together as brothers in serving our country.

Work on Soil Conservation

The boys work on projects in cooperation with the soil conservation program. This work is headed by the soil conservation service men. There are six of these government men who direct the building of dams, concrete and sod flumes, terraces, and fences. The boys leave camp in government trucks at 7:15 a. m. They put in eight hours of work on these projects and then return to camp again at 5:00 o'clock in the afternoon. The boys have their lunches, which are brought out to them, on the projects. The boys work on these projects five days a week, having Saturday forenoon to clean up the buildings and camp grounds. In the afternoon the boys take part in the recreation program.

The trucks used on the projects and for transportation purposes are driven by the boys. Several caterpillars are used to build the larger dams and build terraces, and these, too, are operated by the boys. The government director or superintendent has appointed a number of boys to act as foremen on the projects. The boys are assigned to the various projects according to their abilities and training.

Educational Program

An educational program has been arranged for the evenings during the week. This will give the boys an opportunity to increase along intellectual lines. Staff members, government men, boys with degrees, and outside doctors will teach the courses in religion, soil conservation, first-aid, English and speech, music, typing and industrial arts. The boys are also given an opportunity to do some chorus work.

We have various musical organizations which help with the chapel meetings. We have our own Sunday School organization, and the boys are in charge. The group has been divided into six classes and the teachers have been elected. The various officers were also elected. The director has charge of the church service. Outside ministers are invited twice a month to give the sermon. The churches of Denison have shown a great interest in our work and our principles. The quartets and choruses have been invited to various programs; the director, too, has been invited to tell the people of our work and beliefs. The ministers in return come into the camp and conduct Sunday evening meetings.

On Survey Crew

Now a little about my work. At the present I am working on the surveying crew. I have been on this crew for six weeks now. It is very interesting work, making plane table maps of the various farms that are interested in joining the government program. Our maps include fence lines, field boundaries, contour lines and gullies. We also draw profiles of gullies and probable dam areas. This work requires much walking, often we cover from twelve to eighteen miles a day.

Our meals are very good and we always get enough to eat. Most of the boys have gained weight since they have been in camp; this is probably due to the regularity in meals and sleep. I haven't mentioned anything about our schedule. We have to roll out of bed at 5:30 on week days as much as we sometimes dislike to. We have our breakfast at 6:10 and report for work at 7:15. Our lunches are served at 12:10, and our main meal or dinner at 5:45. We have the period from 6:30 p. m. until 9:30 for our educational courses and letter writing. The lights are out after 9:30, which means bed time.

It's dinner time now so I'll have to say good afternoon.

I am very sorry that I have delayed writing. I started several times, but never completed the letter.

I shall try to do better in the future in informing you about the happenings here at Camp Denison.

Very sincerely yours,
Gerhard R. Buhr

Endeavoring for Christ

By Dorothy Dietz

There are three words which ably sum up what is needed in our Christian lives, and these can be applied not only to individuals but also to organizations such as our young people's societies. They are: Word, worship, work. When the first becomes real and precious to us, the others follow spontaneously.

The Word is our foundation. We are taught in John 1:1 that Christ Himself is the Word; other foundation can no man lay. Are we able to say, "Thy Word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee?"

When we begin to realize how much our Lord and Saviour has done for us—taking upon Himself our punishment for sin and preparing for us an eternal mansion in glory—there will be an inward desire for worship which is not easily suppressed. If we say we are too busy, how can our work be acceptable in His sight? When we do give unto Him our devotion and commune with Him, as it were, can it be said of us as in Acts 4:14, "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus?" We know that these disciples went out not to sit down somewhere and just rejoice in their past experiences, but to witness and to spread the good news, even though it meant many hardships and persecutions for them.

At the beginning of the year we should ask ourselves, what can we do in our societies to give more effective help to spread the Gospel, to render more acceptable service unto the Lord? Are we faithfully and unitedly praying for our missionaries? They depend upon our prayers more than we oftentimes realize? We are admonished, "preach the word, be instant in season, out of season," not, when convenient or when nothing else interferes. No conditions are included, and now as never before we need to be busy for the Lord, for we know not when "the night cometh when no man can work." There are those who are able and willing to preach the Word in neglected and foreign fields, yet how shall they preach if we do not uphold them financially and in prayer.

Other needs which call for our support are the Civilian Public Service Camps and war relief. We believe these also to be a part of the Lord's work and are glad to see that several of the districts have included them in their special projects. Many souls can be reached in ministering to those in war stricken areas.

We do not want to have our eyes fixed only upon needs far away and neglect the opportunities for service in our loyal communities. Everywhere there are those who have not the joy of salvation, others who are spiritually weak and need encouragement, still others who may be leaving home and we should regularly contact them to encourage their maintenance of a vital relationship with their Lord, as they will be faced with many new temptations.

In giving of our time, talents, and possessions in the service of the Lord, we will not only be a blessing to others, but individually we will "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

If your society does not have a Program of Standards, which gives many good suggestions for young people's work, or if the individual members do not have prayer fellowship calendars, be sure to send to your district representative or to the secretary of the Young People's Union for the number you need.

LOYALTY TO CHRIST'S CHURCH

Ps. 84:1-4, Heb. 10:22-25

I. Worship Service

1. Songs: "A Ruler Once Came to Jesus," No. 461; "Lord, Speak to Me That I May Speak," No. 296; "Faith of Our Fathers," No. 154.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Leader's talk: "One Fold, One Shepherd," Jer. 10:16.
4. Offering for missions.

II. Leader's Introduction

Christ's church is the fellowship of the saints. It includes men and women of all denominations, people rich and poor, learned and unlearned, red, white, yellow, and black—all those in whose hearts the Christ lives and dwells. They make it their business to know His will and to do it. Their life centers around Christ; they love Him. They serve Him. They sit at His feet to learn of Him. They look at Him and live with Him until their own lives become Christlike. They learn to say, "Christ only, always, liveth in me."

Such loyalty and devotion to Christ finds expression in various ways. One of these is in church fellowship. Those who are of one mind and of one heart will find increasing strength and deepened insight through the channels of the church. They will turn to the church for support and comfort in times of distress and need. They will draw near unto God through the avenues offered by the church, so that God through these avenues may speak unto them.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks

1. "Relief for Other Christians," Acts 11:29, 30.
2. "Each His Own Part," I Cor. 12:28.
3. "Glorifying Jesus Christ," Eph. 3:20, 21.

III. For Discussion

1. What may a church member expect to get out of his church membership?
2. What should a church member expect to put into his church?

IV. Facts for Study

The apostle John, it is said, had a brief word for his church in his old age. Again and again he would tell his people, "Children, love one another." It was his parting admonition, the summary of the faithful teaching of many years. Paul says, "And now abideth faith, hope, love—but the greatest of these is love." Christ says, "By this will all men know that ye are my disciples if ye love one another."

The early church emphasized prayer, united prayer, intercessory prayer. Prayer meetings and prayer groups have done much for the church at all times. Confidence in its power and efficiency is not lacking today. We say, "Prayer changes things."

The early church emphasized "teaching." Acts already tells us, "And they continued stedfastly in the apostle's teaching." Our own denomination has always emphasized the value of "teaching" through catechism classes, parochial schools, Bible study evenings, prolonged meetings, short courses at the colleges for ministers and laymen, S. S. teachers' training classes, and also through Bible courses in grade and high schools where that is possible.

V. Food for Thought

It may be possible to get across the ocean without the aid of ship or aeroplane, but it is not advisable. You can probably get to heaven without joining the church, but you will miss invaluable aid as you seek to travel the straight and narrow way, a very hard way at its easiest.

JESUS, THE SUPREME

Song: "The Light of the World Is Jesus."

Leader's Talk:

Prayer Hymn: "Fairest Lord Jesus."

Sentence Prayers:

Response: "Into My Heart."

Jesus, the Supreme—Host, Physician, Leader, Lawyer, Fighter.

Song: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

Jesus, the Supreme—Fisherman, Teacher, Prophet, Saviour, King.

Duet: "Jesus Leads."

Prayer:

Benediction:

"Fix your eyes upon Jesus;
Look full in His wonderful face,
And the things of earth will grow strangely dim
In the light of His glory and grace."

Leader's Talk

Christ is the supreme figure in the universe. There is no other character so well known and so loved. No one else has so many followers.

In studying about Jesus we find that everything He did was better and finer than any one else has ever done. While He was on earth He had many talents, and in every one He was superior to any one who has ever lived, either in the days of Jesus or now.

Today we are going to mention a few of His talents and show how he excelled.

near Corn. She later attended the Gotebo Bible School for two years. In the year of 1911 she was baptized upon the profession of her faith by Rev. John Flaming, and became affiliated with the Bergthal Church and remained a faithful and conscientious worker as long as she was able, taking active part in the Sunday School, sewing society, and other church and mission work, also teaching a number of years in the Bible school.

On June 12, 1919, she entered into the holy state of matrimony with J. A. Ratzlaff. Three daughters and two sons were born to them. For twenty-two years the family was privileged to share the sorrows and joys of life. As wife and mother she remains as an example.

In the summer of 1940 she found it necessary to submit to a cancer operation, which at the time seemed to have been successful. She was again able to attend church and also do some work in the home, but her condition again become worse. On July of this year came the decision by attending physicians that human help was unable to save her life. It was a heavy blow to the family, and the congregation joined in many determined prayers, but we learned to pray "Thy will be done." Although it become a hard struggle to separate from her loved ones and her work, yet God gave victory and the grace to calmly await the call of the Master. She departed quietly and peacefully on Saturday, November 29. She reached the age of forty-seven years, three months and sixteen days.

She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, J. A. Ratzlaff; her five children, Leonard, Hilda, Elva, Irwin, and Wilma; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Bergen; three brothers, Rev. George Bergen, La Harve, California, Rev. John Bergen, Villa Park, Illinois, and Rev. Sam Bergen, Wichita, Kansas; two sisters, Mrs. Cathryn Nickel, and Miss Elizabeth Bergen, and a host of friends. We mourn not as such that have no hope, but we have the assurance that she is with her Saviour where we hope to meet her on the great resurrection morning.

—The bereaved family

CARRIE EMMA ROTH, née Schaffer, was the daughter of Lovine and Alavesta Hess Schaffer, and was born in Upper Milford Township, November 27, 1889. As a young woman she was confirmed and became a member in the St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

On September 22, 1907, she was married to Erwin D. Roth and into this union seven children were born. Two died in infancy. Those besides the husband that survive are: Mrs. Evelyn Afflerback, Quakertown; Mrs. Mabel Harwick, Zion Hill; Mrs. Francis Kremer, Coopersburg; John of Limeport; and Elsie at home. Three brothers and one sister also survive; they are: Melvin, Wallace, and Reuben, all of Limeport, and Mrs. Maggie Baumgartner, Vera Cruz.

On April 1, 1934, she transferred her membership to the West Swamp Mennonite Church and has been a faithful member to the end.

After a brief sickness she left this world Friday, November 7, thus bringing her age to fifty-one years, eleven months and ten days. The text of the funeral sermon was John 16:16. Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander officiated. Interment was made in the West Swamp Burial Ground.

HIRAM S. LOCHER, prominent resident of the Bluffton, Ohio, community and director of its Citizens National Bank, died recently from a heart ailment. Formerly Brother Locher taught school and also operated a clothing store at one time.

He is survived by three children, Oliver, Ruth of Cleveland, and Mrs. Dwain Murray of Marietta; a sister, Mrs. Mary Diller of Bluffton; and three brothers, Samuel and Christ, both of near Pandora, and Milton of Washington, D. C.

VELDINE BUCHER, daughter of Ezra and Elvina Hilty Bucher died at the University Hospital at Ann Arbor, Michigan, where she underwent a major operation on Tuesday, November 25th. Her parents, who reside west of Bluffton, Ohio, were at her bedside at the time of her death.

Veldine left us at the early age of twenty-five, and she will be greatly missed by the young people of the Ebenezer church. She was a kind-hearted girl who never shirked her duties in singing or playing, and she faithfully attended the Christian Endeavor society. One summer she taught in the daily vacation Bible school.

Her pastor, Rev. A. C. Schultz, spoke fitting words on Christian character at the funeral service. Besides her parents she is survived by four sisters and four brothers.

MRS. JOHN BIXLER, née Catherine Diller, residing four miles west of Bluffton, Ohio, died at her home on November 30th at the age of seventy-six years. She was a member of the Ebenezer church and its missionary society. Although in ill health for several years she had the work of the church and the society at heart, ever ready to help whenever possible.

Surviving are her husband with whom she celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last February; a son Milton; (one son, Dr. Albert, preceded her in death several years ago when he was killed in an automobile accident.) three grandchildren, Albert Jr., Catherine, and Theodore of West Palm Beach, Florida; four sisters, and three brothers.

Her pastor, Rev. A. C. Schultz, officiated at the funeral service.

ADOLPH R. ESAU was born on May 9, 1894, near Plymouth, Nebraska. His parents are Gustav R. and Johanna Esau (née Wiebe). After completing his elementary education he attended the parochial school, then under the direction of Rev. J. K. Penner. Later he enrolled at the business college in Beatrice for one year. His home and Sunday School training was helpful in bringing him to an acceptance of Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour. On May 11, 1913, he was baptized on the confession of his faith by Elder Gerhard Penner, and was received into the membership of the Mennonite Church. He showed great interest in farming and helped his parents in this way. On May 29, 1919, he was married to Miss Gertrude Penner. The home was blessed with the coming of three children, Martha, Robert, and Harvey. Mr. Esau always enjoyed the best of health. On December 13 he was suddenly and unexpectedly called to meet his Lord. Mourning his departure are his grief-stricken wife and children, his parents, his mother-in-law, one brother, one sister, and many relatives and friends.

GERHARD (GEORGE) BARTEL, son of Peter and Helen Bartel, was born in Poland on March 16, 1868. At the age of nine years he emigrated with his parents to the United States and settled north of Hillsboro, Kansas, arriving in June, 1877. He went to school from his parental home at Hillsboro. After finishing his elementary education he attended Bethel College at North Newton, Kansas, in 1895 and 1896, and then taught in the Public Schools of Marion County, Kansas, for ten years.

He was baptized upon confession of faith in his Redeemer by Rev. J. S. Hirschler and received into the Mennonite Church.

On October 12, 1899, he was united in marriage to Susan Unruh. To this union were born four children: John, who died in infancy; Dora (Mrs. Marvin Linscheid); Arthur, of Tucson, Arizona; and Linda (Mrs. Elbert Gossen).

In 1904 he moved with his family to Newton, Kansas, where he was an employee of the Herald Publishing Co., laboring there until the spring of 1906. In the late spring of 1905 some literature was sent to Newton, Kansas, describing the irrigation tract known as Aberdeen. Mr. Bartel at once left with three others who were impressed with the possibilities and opportunities which the country presented. Consequently he moved with his family to the Aberdeen tract in the spring of 1906 and engaged in farming until 1913. Later he purchased stock in the Aberdeen Hardware and Furniture Co., and has been an active member of the firm for twenty-eight years, being manager for about twenty-five years.

He was a charter member of the First Mennonite Sunday School, which was organized in 1907 with a membership of thirty-six. He was always very active in church work and remained a faithful member until his death.

Mr. Bartel was highly esteemed in civic affairs of his community, serving as school board member many years, and as an active member of the chamber of commerce of this city, being treasurer of the organization at the time of his death.

His life was also marked with joys and sorrows. After many years of suffering, his wife died on August 11, 1934. The years following he shared his problems with his children.

On October 22, 1939, he was married to Mrs. Susan Linscheid, and was permitted to share life's blessings with her for a little over two years.

His ailment began in September, 1940, with a skin disease of the legs. In this he suffered until October 11, 1941. After consulting different physicians he finally relinquished his duties in the store and entered the Caribou Hospital at Soda Springs, where he stayed for six weeks. The excellent care which he received in the hospital made it possible for him to return to his home on Sunday, November 23, at 4:00 P. M. His health seemingly had improved greatly, and he enjoyed his immediate family for about four hours, fellowshipping with them at his home. At 7:45 he desired to go to church and again worship. When he attempted to enter the automobile that was to take him to the fellowship of his many Christian friends, where he could again praise God in his accustomed manner, his spirit suddenly returned to the One Who gave it. Our heavenly Father found him worthy to be taken to the celestial throng, where he is privileged to worship with the saints in glory. He reached the age of seventy-three years, eight months and seven days. He leaves to mourn his sudden departure his sorrowing wife, Mrs. Susan Bartel; three children, viz., Dora (Mrs. Marvin Linscheid) of Aberdeen; Arthur T. of Tuscon, Arizona; Linda (Mrs. Elbert Gossen) of Aberdeen; one daughter-in-law; two sons-in-law; two grand-children; four brothers; three sisters; and many, many friends.

Why should our tears in sorrow flow
When God recalls His own,
And bids them leave a world of woe
For an immortal home?

He resteth now, no more his breast
Heaves with its weary breath
Pain sits no longer on his brow
Where lies the calm of death.

Sunk to his rest like a tired child
He lies in slumber deep
Soft folded in the arms of Him
Who giveth His beloved sleep.

Funeral services were held on Thanksgiving Thursday at the First Mennonite Church. Rev. P. A. Wedel, his pastor, had charge of the services. Mr. Bartel was widely known, being one of the four men who founded Aberdeen.

BOARDING SCHOOL

Our mission school opened on the fifteenth of June. The rains had started early and some of the boys from the other stations had quite a hard time getting here. After a few days the students became acquainted with their daily schedule of work and study.

The primary group which comes to the sewing class includes twelve girls and two boys. Some of these are just beginning to sew. Gradually they learn to do the stitches and make simple things. Of the twenty-two middle school children in these classes, half are boys and half girls. Sewing is a popular trade in India, and tailors are mostly men. Since the middle of June these students have sewed by hand 117 shirts, 77 shorts, 91 pants and 8 dresses. Besides this they are learning to make buttons out of scraps of cloth and thread. The hardest thing for some of the students is to make good buttonholes, while others find difficulty in coming with clean hands.

Redeeming The Time

A Christian owes all of his time to Christ His Lord. God does not bestow upon any Christian half hours which can be spent in company which corrupts or in the indulgence of questionable habits and amusements. A Christian is a thief if he merely seeks to "pass" time or to "kill" it. All that which a Christian has, including his time, is to be used in the best possible way.

We need more creative Christians, who with their mind renewed through the Holy Spirit, will use their leisure time for making discoveries and inventions in the Kingdom of God. Edison, as a newsboy on trains, had to lay over at Detroit between trains. Instead of wasting this enforced leisure time he went to the public library and "read along the line of his interests." Ought not the growing Christian (and who shouldn't be a growing Christian?) to read "along the line of his interests?" To be a Christian all one's interests must gravitate toward Christ. A Christian in his leisure time can make great spiritual discoveries in the Bible and in such books as In His Steps, Pilgrims Progress, and others. The spiritual truths and laws which are discovered ought to be applied immediately and whenever possible in the attempt to relate one's daily work more definitely to Christ's program of saving the lost and "teaching them all things." Thrilling discoveries are yours, Christian, if you permit Christ to help you make them. Explore in the world of light to which Christ has admitted you. There one can discover that sweet, flowing water which will quench the thirst of dying men, the fruit which will prompt others to seek this realm of light, and the rest and peace which are so abundant in Christ's realm and which all Christians need so badly for the refreshing of their own body, mind, and spirit.

Christians need to make inventions in the realm of the spiritual as others do in the sphere of the material. Problems there are. What is a very good way to get a weak church member to be true to his conscience? Devise a workable means to accomplish this, and pastors will wear a path to your door. How to get everyone to prepare his Sunday School lesson is another problem which exists in pratically all churches. Certainly, Christ is the answer to all of these problems. The point is to find the way which Christ offers to us for the solution of these problems.

The very fact that these problems exist indicates that Christian workers do not hit upon Christ's methods as successfully as they should. Christ wants to give us light on these problems, but we need to do the seeking. As Christians we fall down on that. We must believe that God has the answer to all the perplexing problems which we constantly meet in seeking to build Christ's Church. We must apply ourselves to find them. How can I state better, in a clearer, more challenging way a certain teaching of Jesus? How can I approach this person so that I will have the greatest chance for success? Such questions should lead us to joyous inventions (inventions here stand for our finding of what God continually seeks to reveal to us) which will make for spiritual advancement.

Our leisure time can be the source of great satisfaction as we discover and invent through the grace of God and for the sake of Christ. —rw.

Recipe for a Happy New Year

Take twelve fine, full grown months; see that they are thoroughly free from all old memories of bitterness, rancor, hate and jealousy.

Cleanse them completely from every clinging spite; pick off all specks of pettiness and littleness; and in short see that these months are freed from all the past—have them as fresh and clean as when they first came from the great storehouse of Time.

Cut each month into thirty (or thirty-one) equal parts. This batch will keep for just one year. Do not attempt to make up the whole batch at one time (so many persons spoil the whole lot in so doing), but prepare one day at a time as follows:

Into each day put faith, courage, work, (some persons omit this ingredient and so spoil the flavor of the rest) hope, fidelity, liberality, kindness, rest (leaving this out is like leaving the dressing out of the salad—don't do it), prayer, meditation and Bible reading.

Be sure to include a generous quantity of consideration, patience and longsuffering.

Don't forget a pinch of the salt of candor; season well with grace, not forgetting a sprinkling of good humor.

Pour into the whole love without measure, and mix with a vim. Cook thoroughly in a fervent heat. Garnish with smiles of thankfulness and sprigs of joy; then serve with quietness, unselfishness and cheerfulness—and a Happy New Year is yours.

WHAT IF THEY SAY

What if they say, "You justify a police force, then why not an army? Is not the government a 'revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil'?" (Rom. 13:4)

It is highly improbable that the Apostle Paul had a "country at war" in mind when he said, "he beareth not the sword in vain". The individual Roman Christian was being reminded that "if thou do that which is evil" that there was to be "wrath upon him that doeth evil" (vs. 4). "Thou" and "him" did not refer to Greece and Macedonia. His thought was that an exemplary Christian conduct is a real aid to a police force.

Police are instructed to "catch" the individual lawbreaker in the most lenient way possible. The ideal police hates to inflict bodily injury upon the most desperate. The more efficient a policeman becomes the less personal injury will be inflicted. The lawbreaker is to be restrained. He needs correction for both his and the community's good. The community is anxious to reclaim him as a decent citizen.

War, on the other hand, kills the innocent, and that in the most cruel manner. The more efficient a soldier the better he kills. He acts as judge without knowledge of the individual case, as jury without fair trial, and as executioner on one he suspects to be innocent. The chief culprits escape, or if killed, they are made heroes by their people.

But what about a nation that makes a treacherous attack upon another? The height of army strategy is always to catch the enemy off guard. "Military necessity" always makes its own laws. All war is treachery. Then hatred and bitterness remain.

An Explanation of the Peace Bonds

Very probably many of our people have heard something about "Peace Bonds" or Peace Certificates. In a letter sent to each pastor of our conference by the secretary of the peace committee, information was given as to where these certificates could be procured. But further inquiry made by some of the pastors revealed that some people do not understand the exact nature of these so-called "Bonds."

These certificates are unlike the War Savings Bonds and Stamps in this respect, that they are not a financial investment. They will be outright donations toward our relief work in France, England, and Poland, or wherever war relief is needed. We do not forbid using them for our Civilian Public Service camps. But they will carry more weight with people if they are used directly for war relief.

These "Bonds" are made out in various size denominations from five dollars on up. You may show them to people, who press you to buy War Savings Bonds or Stamps, and explain that this is our method of working during time of war. We cannot fight or directly support the war with our money, but we can give money to war relief work in the war stricken areas, where homes have been destroyed and where people suffer for want of food and clothing. We will build up where others have destroyed.

These "Peace Bonds," as we have entitled them, may now be procured by writing for them to Rev. P. H. Unruh, Goessel, Kansas. They have been printed by the Mennonite Central Committee. If you desire them, speak to your pastor, in order that he may procure them for your church.

Report of Joint Session of the Church Unity Committees of the Central and General Conferences

The Church Unity Committees of the Central and General Conferences met for a joint session at the Mennonite Hospital in Bloomington, Illinois, on November 18. Neither committee was fully represented, but this was compensated by the presence of a number of leading men who sat in as guests and contributed helpful counsel. The Central Conference committee was represented by Rev. Allen Yoder, Rev. W. B. Weaver, and Rev. Emmanuel Troyer. The General Conference committee was represented by Rev. A. E. Funk, Rev. John E. Kaufman, and Rev W. F. Unruh. The guests were Rev. Ben Esch, Rev Harry Yoder, Dr. J. E. Hartzler, and Rev. H. E. Nunemaker.

The meeting was characterized by true Christian fellowship and brotherhood. Brother Harry Yoder led us in a short study of the union of believers. This was followed by informal sharing of light on this subject by various men present, and then we had a period of prayer. As we thus drew near to God we found ourselves drawn strangely close to one another into a real Christian brotherhood.

The brethren of the Central Conference reported briefly on a joint session which they had had recently with the Church Unity Committee of the Defenseless Mennonite Conference. Following this the resolutions of the General Conference Church Unity Committee, which were passed at the last General Conference session, were read. We then made a survey of what we already are doing together, and we found ourselves closer to each other than we had imagined. We found that we work together in the Mennonite Central Committee, in Civilian Service projects, in the relief work in Europe and Paraguay, in the support of Bluffton College, and in joint retreats for young people. There is an exchange of workers in mission fields. Our pastors go to and forth—"mostly forth" added a member of the Central Conference Committee with a grin and a twinkle in his eye. Doctrinely we are one, if we speak as conferences. Individual ministers may not all agree on all points of doctrine, but as conferences we are one in faith.

Brother Weaver gave us first hand information on why the attempt to merge the Christian Evangel and The Mennonite, which was undertaken some years ago, had not succeeded. It was not because of any misunderstanding or ill feelings that this venture was given up, but rather because of a better understanding of the fact that we were not ready for such a step at the time. A questionnaire which was sent out to all subscribers revealed the fact that they were not interested in news about people of whom they knew very little. To avoid a drop in subscriptions the wise thing to do was done; the project was dropped. It is evident then that that venture was not a failure, but rather an experiment which has brought valuable light to us. We should not look back to it as a failure but rather as a helpful step to something greater ahead.

Before we closed the morning session we agreed that in the afternoon we would consider the advantages and obligations arising out of a closer cooperation between the two groups. Following an interesting and hearty fellowship dinner in one of the cafes of the town, we reassembled to consider these advantages and obligations. The following were mentioned:

Advantages:

1. Closer cooperation would surely be a great satisfaction to our Heavenly Father, whose children we all are, and to our Lord Jesus Christ, Who prayed that we might all be one.

2. Through closer cooperation we would be able to help each other. The groups would contribute to the enrichment of each other.

3. Closer cooperation would intensify our testimony to the world.

4. Closer cooperation would meet the longing of our youth for a larger fellowship and for a more united front.

5. Closer cooperation would help to economize. It would avoid needless duplication.

Obligations:

1. If the Central Conference would affiliate with the General Conference as a conference, keeping intact its organization and leadership and taking the status of a district conference in the General Conference, one obligation would be to have each church send delegates to the General Conference session.

2. A second obligation would be for both sides to strive to coordinate their activities as speedily as possible.

Since these church unity committees were given authority by their respective conferences to act, we acted with this guiding principle that we would go only as far as we felt confident we could carry the sympathy and goodwill of our constituencies with us. The following three resolutions were passed:

1. Resolved that we recommend to the publication boards of the General Conference and the Central Conference to consider the follow suggestions with a view to action: that the secretaries of the church unity committees of the respective conferences furnish an exchange of material of vital conference interest to be published in the Christian Evangel and The Mennonite. In as much as The Mennonite appears weekly and the Christian Evangel appears monthly, it is recommended that the Church Unity Committee of the Central Conference be given one column in The Mennonite and the Church Unity Committee of the General Conference be given one page in the Christian Evangel.

2. Resolved that we recommend to the following boards of the General Conference and of the Central Conference: Foreign Mission Board, Home Mission Board, Board of Education, and Board of Publication, that they invite non-voting representation at the annual sessions from the similar boards of the sister conference for the purpose of a better understanding, deeper interest, and a closer cooperation between the conferences.

3. Resolved to recommend to the executive committees of the Central Conference, General Conference, and the Middle District Conference that they provide for an exchange of invitations to the sister conferences to their respective annual and tri-annual sessions.

Sincerely yours,
Allen Yoder, Chairman of the Joint Session
W. F. Unruh, Secretary of the Joint Session

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

Christian Missions in East Asia During War

(Published by request of the Secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference)

A Message to the Churches Issued by the Committee on East Asia of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

When we suddenly found ourselves involved in the war, the processes of cooperation among our respective mission boards and other agencies were immediately set in action for the sharing of information and united planning for the present emergency and the challenging tasks of the future.

Our thoughts turned at once to the missionaries. During the past year a steady withdrawal of personnel of most of the boards has been going on, especially from Japan, Formosa, Korea, Manchuria, and penetrated China. It is estimated that over three thousand have left the field in this way. Many of these have taken up work in other mission fields. Some are now engaged at home in tasks related to the world mission. Others are at work in the home church or are studying for future mission service. With few exceptions all are eager to resume their work.

Yet there still remain in these war areas a considerable number of our missionary workers. In general the figures are: Japan, 82; Korea, 29; Penetrated China, 862; Indo-China, 56; Thailand 83; British Malaya, 69; Netherlands East Indies, 59; Philippine Islands, 424; while 47 are enroute to and from the United States, a total of over 1,700. Besides these there are over two thousand missionaries scattered throughout Free China, three hundred in Burma, and a few in Oceania who may at any time be involved. The degrees of danger and likelihood of hardship differ according to the circumstances in these various areas.

So far as our information goes missionaries in Japan proper are being treated with consideration.

From the dependencies and occupied areas within Japanese control, the reports thus far are reassuring. In some cases missionaries are believed still to be permitted to carry on the work of their institutions, and in other instances they are understood to be detained within their own homes. There are evidences that the Japanese authorities purpose to exercise the same consideration in treatment of North Americans which our governments are said to be showing the Japanese within our borders. Those missionaries in the actual conflict areas are sharing the perils and sufferings of all the citizens of their communities, and cabled reports indicate that they are taking their full responsibility in serving those in need.

From Free China the word is also reassuring. Missionaries are vigorously pressing their regular work and are strengthening the interdenominational approach to the new opportunities for Christian witness. In addition, all are continuing their ministry of relief for war sufferers.

On December 22, the Church Committee for China Relief forwarded $150,000 for relief purposes and this will be administered for the most part by missionaries.

We rejoice in the courageous faith of these representatives of the Christian Church, who in the face of mounting danger and well knowing all the possible exigencies of their situation, have chosen to remain and give such witness to their faith and Christian fellowship as may be possible during this war. Several boards, realizing that war was imminent, advanced funds to the fields, and it is hoped that by this means missionaries are being saved from immediate financial need.

It is a source of profound comfort that there is a Christian fellowship in every war-torn land. A Christian Church has been planted. We believe that no war can destroy these Christian communities nor stifle their witness to our common faith and purpose. We of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America call the churches of this continent to daily intercession for the missionaries, that they may be kept safe and that their Christian influence may be increasingly effective, for our fellow Christians in these lands that their faith may remain strong and their witness true.

Our hopes are undimmed as to the fulfilment of God's purpose in bringing His Kingdom into all the earth. December 26, 1941

Tokyo Wants to Help Furnish Information to Relatives and Countries About War Prisoners

A bureau is to be set up under the war minister, Tojo, to which is to be "entrusted the supervision and treatment of war prisoners, and the informing of nations as well as families involved in the captures." But this will take some time. (Associated Press)

Our government also plans to make efforts through neutral embassies to exchange prisoners, and get them home, as soon as possible. But this also will take some time. —P. H. Richert, Sec.

THE ROSEMARY MENNONITE CHURCH

Rosemary, Alberta, Canada

This church was founded in 1929, a little over twelve years ago, by a group of Mennonites all of whom had immigrated into Canada from Russia the previous years. No one, or perhaps very few of our people, would have thought twelve years ago that, in a comparatively short time, the membership of our church would and could increase so rapidly; viz., from about fifty to sixty members in 1929 to well over three hundred in 1941. All are registered members. Today we have Mennonites in our midst from all parts of Western Canada. During the dry years, when crops failed almost everywhere because irrigation was impossible in Western Canada, many farmers, not only Mennonites, came to the so-called Eastern Irrigation District, in the south central part of Alberta, to try their fortunes anew. Some, no doubt, have been disappointed, but it must be said that the majority have met with success. Through diligence and good care the landscape near Rosemary has changed profoundly. This becomes more apparent when one has a chance to travel from the east to the west through Alberta. Not in vain has the Eastern Irrigation District been called "the Garden of Alberta." However, the object of this article is not to boast of the "deficiencies" of our district, it is about the church, the Rosemary Mennonite Church.

The building occupied by our church was erected in 1935. It is not in any sense a magnificent building; it lacks most of the modern conveniences. However, one thing I can say, it is a place of worship, a place where many times many hungry souls have found rest and respite from their everyday worries and troubles. God be praised. It is gratifying, especially in times like these, to see the large number of people congregate every Sunday to listen to the Word of God expounded according to the rites and customs of our forefathers. The young members of our church are also given a chance to participate actively in church activities. Once every month, programs are given by the Young People's Christian Association, and every other Sunday evangelistic services are held for the benefit of those who do not have a chance to attend other churches and also for those who do not understand German. To relieve the monotony in our work we have had visitors and visiting preachers. Notable among these were Brother N. Bahnmann of British Columbia and Rev. D. Toews of Rosthern.

One outstanding event of last year was the music festival held last June. Eight choirs participated, and one male quartet came from Saskatchewan. Although no great musical selections were rendered, the atmosphere of the festival, the old hymn, made it apparent that the time spent in preparation for this occasion was not spent vainly, neither for the choir members, nor for the extremely large audience.

It would be unfair not to mention the work our women do, especially now when everyone is called upon to help our country in the war effort, and also the work our women do to relieve the suffering of the poor refugees in Europe. I cannot now supply definite data on this work, but it would be worth while to have someone publish data on the amount of clothes and other articles sent to Europe.

All considered, we cannot be thankful enough for all the blessings God the Almighty has bestowed upon us, and may His hand guide us, may His mercy endure forever and ever. Amen.

—C. D. Harder, Nov. 11, 1941

He Had His Life

He had his life because he had health, fortune, and more than the allotted threescore years and ten. When his father died the seeming fortunate young man of whom we write inherited valuable real estate. And his only business in all the ninety-four years that he lived was the care of his inheritance.

Here was a man as free as one could ever expect to be in this world. He had his life to do with as he pleased. It is to his credit that he did nothing criminal. And yet, with health and fortune and ninety-four years it seems pretty piddling to sum up his achievements about as follows:

1. He was the town's most eligible bachelor long before the turn of the century.

2. He was noted as a Beau Brummell and cotillion leader.

3. As a youth he saw the Chicago fire, winning a wager that the blaze would not leap the river.

4. He was a confirmed globetrotter, having crossed the ocean sixty or seventy times.

5. He was a gracious and inveterate host, whose dinner parties were described as a gourmet's delight.

6. He was a friend of the Potter Palmers, Honores, Pullmans and Gen. Phil Sheridan.

7. It was not unusual to find him at important social functions, a small, elegant figure in top hat and frock coat, his long mustaches carefully waxed.

Yes, he had his life, but he did not know what to do with it. Before you criticize, think how futilely you might have lived with health and wealth and ninety-four years of time on your hands! —H.A.B.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Harold D. Burkholder, Quakertown, Pa.

JANUARY 25—"For he is our peace," Eph. 2:14a.

The world is in a turmoil. "People's hearts failing them because of fear." They are looking for a superman to appear and bring peace to this world. Of the many peace discussions in progress there must be very few who are considering the Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, as the source of all true peace. There must first be peace between God and man through a personal salvation experience (Rom. 5:1), before we can expect peace between man and man in this world. In the world crisis of 1942 Christ is truly an anchor to the soul. Thank God for the Lord Jesus Christ, Who is our Peace.

JANUARY 26—"What? Know ye not that your body of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" I Cor. 6:19.

Here are mentioned two things which every true Christian should know. First, "Your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost;" second, "You are not your own." Our daily life will be greatly affected when once we grasp this truth. What condescension, that God in Christ should leave heaven's glory to come and dwell among men. Greater still that God, in the person of the Holy Ghost, should condescend to dwell within His redeemed, blood-bought people. Christian friend, did you know that He lives within you and that you are His property? Yield to Him and let Him use you today.

JANUARY 27—"Then said Boaz to Ruth, Go not to glean in another field," (Ruth 2:8).

Let us think of these words as coming from a greater one than Boaz, the Lord Jesus Himself. He says to us, "Go not to glean in another field." The Bible says that the "field is the world." The Christian is said to be in the world but not of it. Within this world field is a field of complete satisfaction in Christ; a field of green pastures. Gleaning means getting something to satisfy yourself. Therefore the Lord is saying to us, "Go not to glean in the devil's pasture where you will never be satisfied." Have you been trying to glean in Satan's field? Let us be decidedly for Christ. The closer we get to Him, the smaller we become. He must increase and we must decrease. "Go not to glean in another field."

JANUARY 28—"Where hast thou gleaned today?" Ruth 2:19.

Connecting this with yesterdays thought, brings before us a forceful question which we ought to ask ourselves at the close of each day, "Where hast thou gleaned today?" Have you permitted Him to lead you in paths of righteousness for His name's sake, and beside the still waters? Or, have you chosen to walk and glean where you pleased? Let us remember that there is a way which seemeth right unto man, but the end is destruction. When Ruth, the Moabitess, was asked the above question she answered, "I have been with Boaz." Can you answer it by saying, "I have been with Jesus?" Beloved, "where hast thou gleaned today?" Spend much time at the feet of Jesus if you would become like Him.

JANUARY 29—"If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ." (Gal. 1:10b) "Am I therefore your enemy because I tell you the truth?" (Gal. 4:16).

As a Christian, Paul was one who desired to stand true to God at any price. He was branded by many as an intolerant preacher, but his policy was never to court popularity if it meant compromising the truth. God needs faithful servants in this day of apostasy. Christian friend, perhaps you have been labouring in a hard field. Many times you have had to stand alone. Take courage, the Lord Jesus, the Apostle Paul, Menno Simon, and many others have paid a dear price in uncompromisingly holding forth the Word of God. Like Paul you might also be considered as an enemy because you "speak the truth."

JANUARY 30—"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." John 8:36.

Liberty! Freedom! This has been the latest cry of the American public. They go on to tell us of the enslavement and bondage of the greater part of Europe by Hitlerism. The Bible speaks of a different kind of bondage and liberty. It is the bondage of Satan and the liberty of Christ. It is possible for people in enslaved nations to be more free than those in free America. To know Christ while chained in a dungeon is to enjoy greater freedom then the man on Wall Street who is in bondage to sin. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

JANUARY 31—"Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way . . . no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." (John 14:6).

Man has been devising ways of reaching Heaven. Every ladder he builds falls far short of the top. Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh, tells us of the one and only way to Heaven. It is not by good works, church membership, or baptism. All these have their proper place in life. It is not merely a "Jesus way of life," but it is Jesus Christ, "THE WAY," who is our "life" and only road to Heaven. He is not a way, but THE WAY to God. For "no man cometh unto the Father but by Me," and "Neither is their salvation in any other." (Acts 4:12) Have you come this way? If not, COME NOW, receive Him today.

". . . It has been a pleasure to bring these messages during January. I trust that the Lord will have blessed them to your hearts." —H. D. Burkholder

The Temptation of Jesus

Matt. 4:1-11 Read Luke 4:1-13

Introduction

Satan brought sin into the world and made the coming of Jesus necessary. He approached Jesus to tempt Him upon the beginning of His public ministry. Jesus emerged victoriously from the test. We lose much of the deeper meaning of Jesus' temptation because we do not understand the spiritual battle between good and evil. Satan met his first great defeat when he tempted Jesus. His final defeat will be when Christ comes again. Satan's attack is directed against Jesus in view of His coming work. This is the supreme conflict of the ages.

The First Temptation vss. 1-4

The three temptations of our lesson were temptations to secure worthy ends through improper means. Immediately after His baptism, Jesus went into the wilderness under the guidance of the Holy Spirit (vs. 1). Here He could be alone to think out how He could best carry out the Father's will and win His people to God. Here the devil is recognized as the source of the temptations of Christ. The devil is not merely an influence, but an intelligent being. Jesus, in His spiritual exaltation following His baptism, spent forty days in fasting, prayer, and meditation, giving little or no thought to food.

Then the devil suggested an easy way to satisfy His intense hunger. Use your power as the Son of God and change the stones into bread. Satan attacked Jesus at what seemed to be the weakest point. Jesus used Scripture (Deut. 8:3) in repulsing this temptation (vs. 4). Man has an inner, immortal soul which can not be satisfied with bread. We need both bread and God's word. Jesus did not work miracles for His own benefit. He was tempted as a man, not as a God. As man He could not use spiritual power. In becoming man He had taken on human limitations. He came to live the life of a real man and as such must not use miraculous power for himself. Jesus saw clearly where to draw the line between what is right and wrong.

The Second Temptation vss. 5-7

This temptation was a suggestion that Jesus could quickly win many followers by performing a dazzling sign (vs. 6). Satan calls upon Jesus to prove His Messiahship by a spectacular act, not by the inspiration of a higher life. Satan quoted Psalms 91:11 but omitted "to keep thee in all they ways," thus obscuring the true meaning. This temptation applies to all people and warns us of the danger that lies in courting danger. Jesus again answers with Scripture (Deut. 6:16). Trust in God is never evidenced by rash action. We can not expect God's protection when we needlessly expose ourselves in men's souls by spectacular deeds. Spiritual means alone can be used.

The Third Temptation vss. 8-11

The Jewish people expected a literal establishment of a universal Jewish kingdom. Satan tempted Jesus to yield to this "dream of His nation." This vision (vs. 8) was very real to Christ's spirit and made a strong appeal. The Tempter offers Jesus a crown without a cross, the expressed condition being homage to Satan (vs. 9). Satan tempted Jesus to compromise with him in such a way that Satan would be in control. Evil is a real power in the world and Satan could have given what he offered. Jesus did not want Satan's controlled nations. He saw that compromise would not do. Jesus' kingdom must be a holy kingdom. We are tempted to compromise at times, in order to advance God's work. Jesus sternly ordered Satan to go. This is the only attitude the true Christian can take toward evil, outright opposition. Satan, defeated, left Jesus, and angels ministered to His needs. The temptation was in triple form, appealing to the physical appetite, to the mental state, and to the ambition. "Jesus was tempted in all points like as we are." He can help us in our temptations.

Why is it not enough to say no to temptation?
Why are godly people frequently tempted by Satan?
What was Satan's purpose in tempting Jesus?

A PRAYER

By Florence White Willett

I do not pray that my desires
Shall all be granted me;
But if denial be His will,
I'll take it graciously.

I do not ask for some great work
To set the world on fire;
But only that His all-wise love
Will lead my heart's desire.

And when my thoughts are low and stale
And vision marred or dim;
That He will lift, refresh and clear,
And turn their source through Him.

I pray my words may always be Kept free from tearing, stabbing dart;
Oh, make them thoughtful, loving, kind;
A joy to someone's heart.

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

MENTAL HOSPITAL WORK FOR C. O.'s is a project that was recently approved by Selective Service. The plan provides for two work units of twenty to twenty-five men each. These are to be assigned to the State Hospitals in Elgin, Illinois, and Gardner, Massachusetts. The men who are chosen are to serve as attendant nurses, laboratory technicians, kitchen and dining room assistants, clerical workers, and psychiatrists. Volunteers at the Merom camp "were advised that patients would be extremely trying to the patience and that workers must be able to stand long periods of strain, and have the temperament to deal with subnormal people. In addition the hours—forty-eight a week—would be longer than in CPS camps and there would be little possibility of the community life enjoyed in camp. Men will live in the hospital which will provide maintenance." Sixteen men from the Colorado Springs camp have volunteered for this work. This project is the first one outside of the camps set up in cooperation with Soil Conservation Service, Forestry Service, and National Parks. Recently an individual was transferred from Cooperstown to Swarthmore College to work for the Fish and Wildlife Service.

CHINA AND ENGLAND are the countries in which C. O.'s are to do relief and reconstruction work. The Friends Service Committee has secured approval of a project to reconstruct damaged homes and relieve civilian suffering in England. The Brethren Service Committee has arranged for a service project along the Burma road. "Six men are to be selected from those nominated by the nation's CPS camps. They are to include three mechanics and truck drivers 'sufficiently skilled to operate motor equipment with efficiency over bombed roads in blackouts,' two first aid men, and two general workers." Howard Sollenberger, draftee at the Lagro, Indiana, camp, who did relief work in China for two and one half years, and will head a training program for the six men, says, "Hazards of every sort are numerous. I lost three of my associates, one by bombing, two by disease. Food is hard to get, living conditions very poor. Personally I know of no more rugged and uncertain life than war relief in China."

FURLOUGHING C. O.'s FOR FARM WORK has been talked about. This work done for individual farmers would be much like that done in the last war. If this plan should materialize it would offer opportunities to a larger number of campers than do the two projects which have been approved. Since the majority of Mennonite boys in camp are from the farm, many of them are showing interest in this proposal.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ALLOWANCES for men at six Mennonite Central Committee camps will net an annual saving of well over ten thousand dollars. The saving at the Colorado Springs camp will be $2,500. This is a significant part of a proposed yearly budget of thirty-two thousand dollars. "A portion of the money thus saved will be diverted into other channels of expense such as education and recreation. However, much of the savings will go toward a lessening of the total CPS financial burden. The response of the campers to the discontinuance of the allowance was favorable. Typical comments were the following: 'If they can find better use for the funds, I am glad to sacrifice' . . . 'This is a minor sacrifice which the men are willing to make rather than agree to government support of CPS camps.' "

Jesus Christ The Same Yesterday

The changelessness of Jesus Christ is a profound and comforting fact in a time like this. Everything else is changing and we seem lost. Political boundaries change over night; governments change, social and economic philosophies change; theology changes and so does the church and its work. Moral standards change and certainly not always for the best. Does anything remain the same today as it was yesterday? The answer is "yes." Jesus Christ remains the same. He is today and yesterday what he will be tomorrow.

In the first place, He is still the center of our religious faith. There is no other name under heaven whereby man can be saved. The early apostles believed this to be so and the early church was founded upon this conviction. He is still the Truth, the Way, and the Life. There is only one Cross, the Cross of Calvary; and only one Resurrection. The preaching of the early church centered in Christ and the church was built upon the conviction that He is alive. This remains so today and will be so tomorrow. Christ is the center of our faith today and He is the hope for the years to come.

Again, Jesus Christ remains today, as He was yesterday, the example of the good and perfect life. He revealed a new way of life. Our task and privilege is to keep our eyes on Him and to follow Him. He was not teaching and preaching a beautiful ethical code to be applied in some future and more perfect world. He taught men who lived in a cruel world; as cruel and full of hatred as ours is. His teachings were designed to show us how to live the good life in a bad world. He trusted the power of God above all human power. He trusted the method of God in dealing with evildoers. He knew only one way and that was the way of love and forgiveness and suffering. We cannot always see the way ahead and we cannot always calculate the outcome if we take His words seriously. What would happen if we should love our enemies instead of reducing them to shreds; or if we should pray for

Practicing the Presence of God

Some months ago in these pages Dr. Langenwalter recommended as a worthwhile book "Living Prayerfully" by Kirby Page. Merely to say that it is a stimulating or inspiring book is to underrate it: it is alive to difficulties which confront us as young people today, and it shows us how to "live creatively while civilization totters."

Not long ago it was my privilege to hear Kirby Page in a series of seven vital addresses, given in the course of one of his two-day spiritual retreats, more than 50 of which he has held in 25 states during the past few months.

I want to share with you some of the fundamental things Dr. Page told his audience. To me, one of his most inspiring addresses was "Practicing the Presence of God." He said at the start that prayer is not beating God down by our superiority; it is a combination of attitudes and relationships. Then he named four ways of praying, or practicing the presence of God.

First, we must see what God sees: look in on ourselves and pray for illumination to see both our weaknesses and our potentialities. A good way to pray is with our eyes open and with paper and pencil so that we can make a list of our shortcomings and our strength as God opens our vision to see all we can just as it really is. When we see our weakness, we will have a fervent desire to reform actuality; and when we look at the potentialities we will say, "What a life I can live—and will live!"

Second, we must watch God at work—in nature, in human beings, in Jesus. As we do this, we will realize our interdependence and our obligations to our fellow men. Realization of interdependence and obligation creates gratitude, and gratitude is a way of "opening doors."

Third, we must listen to God speak. How does He speak? Through the three avenues of mind, feeling, and will: by quickening our minds by enlivening our emotions, by giving us a resoluteness of determination.

And fourth, we must practice reaching out our hands to God and taking strength from Him.

The final check of the reality of prayer is in action with other people. When we have honestly seen what God sees, watched Him at work, listened to Him speak, and reached out to take strength from Him, our relationships with other people will be different than they were before.

This gives us something to think about, and it gives us something to do. —H.H.M.

AN ALPHABET FOR C. E. MEMBERS

A — Attend C. E. meetings, Sunday School, and church services regularly.
B — Be on time and begin on time.
C — Carefully plan each C. E. devotional and business meeting.
D — Daily study God's Word.
E — Endeavor to give your best when serving as a leader.
F — Familiarize yourself with the C. E. pledge.
G — Give generously of your time, talents, and money.
H — Help keep C. E. meetings reverent and helpful.
I — Invite others to join the C. E.
J — Join in Mennonite Young People's Union projects.
K — Keep smiling when others are pessimistic about C. E. work.
L — Love those who disagree with you.
M — Make your society known for its good fellowship.
N — Name responsible members for responsible jobs.
O — Open your mind and heart that God may speak to you.
P — Pray daily for yourself, others, and God's far-flung Christian enterprise.
Q — Quarrel with none.
R — Respond when asked to take part.
S — Support our mission work.
T — Tell others about the success of your C. E. program through church papers.
U — Utilize every member in some definite capacity.
V — Voice your ideas when you have clearly reflected upon them.
W — Work with a will to make your C. E. best in the conference.
X — 'Xamine yourself first before finding fault with others.
Y — Yoke yourself with pastor, official board, and all good Christians to make Christ's name known and revered in every heart.
Z — Zealously seek and follow God's plan in your life.

The Stuff Youth Is Made Of

What have you given your youth worth while,
Now he stands face outward to life?
You have given him wealth and leisure to play,
You have fed him on dainties to lighten his day,
You have prayed for hard things to keep from his way,
That his life may be free from all strife.

I have asked for my lad honor and right,
Clear brain, which will reason commend;
I have told him success is a laborious mile,
That all who achieved have suffered their while,
That one must fight on, and ever more smile,
To find life sweet in the end.

I ask for my lad a life that is strong;
I want him to do what he can;
With a vision of service, that life may be bold,
With wisdom to separate brass from the gold,
His ambition of life "to do," not "to scold,"
Honest to both God and man.

HOW TO USE OUR RADIOS

Phil. 4:8; I John 2:15-17

I Worhsip Service:

1. Songs: "Open My Eyes That I May See;" "When in the Maddening Maze of Things," No. 241; "Watchman Tell Us of the Night," No. 66.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Prayer Service: (a) Thank God for the great inventions placed at our disposal. (b) Ask God to help us use them wisely and (c) Pray that they may become instruments for His service more and more.
4. Offering for C. E. Union.

II. Leader's Introduction:

In advertising new model radios, the word "selectivity" is being used. It means that the machine will focus on one wave length and disregard others close to it. The vast amount of material broadcast brings with it the necessity of developing "selectivity" in the listener. This art of selection is no more important than that of choosing food, movies, books, and companions. People develop "radio appetites" just as they do preferences in food, clothing, and recreation. It is said that fully 90 percent of the people listen to the radio at least part of each day, and many radios are run for several hours each day. Surely anything that commands so large a part of time and attention should be handled with care. Here is a challenge to those who wish to cope with a present-day problem.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The Influence of the Radio on Life in the Home.
2. What Radio Programs Have Won Wide Favor? Why?
3. A Resume of Religious Programs on the Air.
4. The Educative Value of the Radio.
5. The Influence of the Radio on Politics.

IV. For Discussion:

1. On what basis should we choose the radio programs we listen to?
2. How can we exercise influence in radio programs?
3. What radio programs do you find valuable (Each member might mention one or two in response to Roll Call)

V. Facts for Study:

The radio reaches people at home, in the car, in the office, sometimes even on the street. The messages it brings—music, entertainment, advertising, politics, religion—have a large influence on our emotions and on our thought life. Its appeal is continuous and cumulative in effect. "Keep tuned to this station" is an appeal frequently heard. Experts in the radio profession have methods of checking the listening audience, and they know quite well how a program "goes over." One of their guides is the letters coming in. Some religious programs have proved to be wanted by large numbers of people. They never tire in sending in requests for songs and in expressing appreciation.

It is found in political campaigns that the personal voice of the candidate exerts an exceedingly strong appeal. In times of world upheaval the listener has to be on guard to sift carefully what the radio offers.

Along the line of entertainment and education there is much opportunity to hear really fine things. To "learn to listen" may offer wide opportunities for development.

VI. Question Box

1. Can we find guidance in the Bible for use of the radio?
2. How are radio programs financed?
3. Why do broadcasting companies choose a certain type of program?
4. What can the church do to make use of the radio?
5. What can one learn about the best radio programs? Some Christian magazines have pages where the best in radio is listed. Radio Digests on sale everywhere also offer some information. Suggestion: Your local church bulletin could call attention to good religious broadcasts.

VII. Food for Thought:

If radio's slim fingers can reach out in the air
And pluck the sweet melodies found lingering there
And send them at once to both you and me,
Direct to our homes, or wherever we be,
If "The Old Refrain" on the violin
Can reach us so clearly above the earth's din,
If the voice that is singing "Sweet and Low,"
Is not torn assunder by storm clouds of woe,
If "Whispering Hope" from the strings of the harp
Can travel for miles and speak to our heart,

If the strains from the organ we can hear through the night,
As it pleads in the darkness "Lead, Kindly Light,"
If all of those things we can hear in the air,
Then why should we doubt that God hears our prayer?

Make this a Little Jack Horner Meeting. Make a large "pie" inside of which are "plums" made of purple paper. Each member draws out a "plum" which is a question, talk, or scripture quotation. The talks, of course, have been given out in advance, but with a little trading the "plum" the talks will get to the right persons.

To advertise the meeeting give out large paper "plums' on the back of which are written:

Little Jack Horner
Went to ———————— meeting
To see the ———————— pie;
He stuck in his thumb
And pulled out a plum;
To do what it said, he did try.

Scriptures on Truth:

II Sam. 7:28a; Prov. 3:3; I John 1:8; John 18:38; I Kings 22:16; Prov. 8:7; Ps. 145:18; I Cor. 13:6; Ps. 15:1, 2; Prov. 12:17; Ps. 25:5; Eph. 4:15; Ps. 85:11; Prov. 23:23a; Ps. 57:10; II Tim 2:15; Ps. 96: 13; Zech. 8:16.

Questions:

1. What advise did David give us about our tongues? (Ps. 34:13)
2. What does God think of those who lie? (Prov. 12:22)
3. What does God think of those who are truthful? (Prov. 12:22)
4. How should we speak to our neighbors? (Eph. 4:25)
5. Is it ever right to lie?
6. Is "copying" in examinations a form of lying?
7. Who lived a perfect life of truth that we may follow as our example?
8. What did Jesus say of Himself regarding truth?

Talks:

1. One of the most valuable lessons which we learn at school is to tell the truth and play fairly. If we tell a lie, all our schoolmates know it, for sin cannot be hidden. The most outstanding pupils are the ones who are truthful and play games fairly and squarely. (Continue this thought).

2. Even if we should get no reward in this life, God will reward us if we live the truth. But the fact that we have told the truth, regardless of all else, brings us a peace of mind and happiness of soul which in itself is reward, to say nothing of the prize of eternal life with Christ Jesus. (Continue this thought.)

WHAT I LIKE ABOUT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Scripture Reading: Romans 10:9, 10

(A "Birthday Anniversary" Meeting)

This is the sixty-first birthday of Christian Endeavor all over the world. This is an invitation to all Junior boys and girls to attend one of the largest birthday parties they ever hope to attend. Dr. Francis E. Clark founded Christian Endeavor on February 2, just sixty-one years ago, and many people have been blessed in many ways through song, thought, quotation or prayer expressed at these meetings. Let each Junior ask himself what gift can I bring to this birthday party?

The Question Bee

Q. 1. What are some of the things we like about our Junior Christian Endeavor?
Ans. Christian friends, Bible study, learning to pray, and learning to help.
Q. 2. What gift can I give to Christian Endeavor?
Ans. My life, my talent, my service.
Q. 3. Give several Bible passages useful in this topic study.
Ans. II Tim. 2:15; Ps. 119:47; Heb. 6:10; Eph. 6:7.

Prayer Items for Our Prayer List

We should pray definitely for certain things at every service. Let us plan to put definite items on our prayer list each week. This week let us pray for (a) the blessings of the past sixty-one years of Christian Endeavor; (b) for all who have given time, and talent for this movement; (c) for all young people of the church; (d) forgiveness for past inactivity and lack of interest in Christian Endeavor and; (e) a great desire to do more for Christ.

JESUS THE SAME YESTERDAY—

them and do good to them instead of drowning them in the depths of the sea or starving them by blockade or bombing and burning their homes? We cannot know what would happen. The situation looks hopeless, as hopeless as the world looked on the first Good Friday. But the blackness of the crucifixion was followed by the light of the resurrection. The forces of evil had won temporarily but not permanently. Jesus did not change his way and attitude in the day of crisis. He is our example today as He was yesterday. Those who say that He is impractical and that other standards of conduct must be adopted in this time, assume a fearful responsibility.

Jesus too is our unchanging friend. He never forsakes us. Earthly friends may change and often do. A man is your friend today and tomorrow he is your bitter enemy. World leaders who yesterday exchanged messages of congratulation are today engaged in mortal combat. Jesus loved His disciples to the end, even those who erred grievously. They forsook Him but He never forsook them. Those who wander from His presence become the object of His special concern. He will leave the ninety and nine and search for the lost. He sticketh closer than a brother. Human friendship need not be disparaged. Where it is genuine it approximates the divine. But its fickleness is apparent and disturbing in a time like this. There are dark days ahead and we need the guiding hand of a Friend that is true and changeless.

The writer of the book of Hebrews lived in a time of great changes in the world and the church. Former leaders had passed on. But he was confident that the work would continue and that the church would not be carried away with strange doctrines if they remembered that ture, especially when we get an Indian doctor who knows his people and their ability to pay. The need is so great. Many need vitamins and other foods, for lack of which they are sick. To supply food and to treat these "deficiency diseases" is a task we can hardly begin to do. It is a big order we are called on to fill. "Ap hamari liye parmeshwar hain," they say; that is, "To us you are god.". What a responsibility! Pray with us that we may not fail them.

Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and today, and forever. Heb. 13:8.

CORRESPONDENCE

SECOND MENNONITE CHURCH

Beatrice, Nebraska

We praise the good Lord for the many blessings that He has bestowed upon us. The reports at our annual business meeting were evidence of His divine guidance, and we go forward with confidence into another year. The increase in membership has been largely offset by the number of members who have left our community. We now have a total of 172 members. There was one death, that of Brother Claass Epp Sr. Rev. Weinbrenner, our pastor, has faithfully served us during the year, and there is encouraging participation in our various church activities. We rejoice in that one of our members, Sister Helen A. Penner, is doing relief work in war-torn Europe at the present time. We also are thankful for being enabled to make extensive improvements of our church edifice. —W. C. A. Corr.

EICHER EMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Wayland, Iowa

In October ten young people were baptized. Our White Gift Christmas offering amounted to $94.08. Five dollars were given by the Junior C. E. and sent to the Mennonite Central Committee for relief. On January 1st the congregation met for a special prayer service as requested by President Roosevelt. In it we asked for forgiveness for our nation and that we might draw nearer to Him during this year than we did in the past. At the annual business meeting Bertha Graber was elected as correspondent to The Mennonite and Peter Widmer as correspondent to The Bundesbote. Deaths: Mrs. Lizzie Schantz Richard passed away on December 7th at the age of seventy-eight years. Mrs. Magdelena Wenger Rich passed away December 31, 1941, at the age of eighty-five years and two days. Marriages: Glen Yoder and Rosalie Widmer were united in marriage by our pastor D. E. Welty on January 1, 1942. —B. G. Corr.

WEST ZION CHURCH

Moundridge, Kansas

"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." Ps. 126:3. We gratefully acknowledge that God has greatly blessed us in sending us a minister and enabling our congregation to pay off its building debt. We have endeavored to be "good stewards of the manifold grace of God" (I Pet. 4:10).

Rev. and Mrs. W. F. Unruh and their two sons arrived in Moundridge the latter part of November. The ladies of the church had cleaned the parsonage and stocked the pantry a few days before. We are indeed happy to have this consecrated family in our midst.

December 7, 1941, is a date long to be remembered at West Zion. Immediately after the morning worship service, the first one conducted by Rev. Unruh, the congregation enjoyed a fellowship dinner in the church basement. There were over two hundred present. A short program followed the dinner. Several musical numbers were enjoyed as were also several short talks. Rev. C. E. Krehbiel installed Rev. Unruh as our minister with a few well chosen remarks based on I Pet. 4:10. Both Rev. and Mrs. Unruh responded with a few words of appreciation, each saying that they were certain that God had directed their steps to Moundridge and that they felt sure that they were in God's will. So we at West Zion feel certain that their ministry among us will be attended with great spiritual blessing.

An outstanding number on the program was the burning of the mortgage. We have enjoyed the church basement and other conveniences for five years, but it was not until this year that a united effort was made to pay off the debt. May this same zeal and interest be displayed by our people in the future in order that the Kingdom may be extended.

The Junior Choir sang a cantata on Christmas Eve, assisted by the younger folk. This group has been singing once a month in place of the mixed choir. The annual business meeting of the church was held on December 28. A resolution was passed giving the church council authority to work out a plan whereby The Mennonite may come into every home. This excellent paper should be read by every church member.

A BRIEF HISTORICAL SKETCH OF SACRED HYMNS

By Daniel Toavs

In Old Testament Times

Through the Old Testament period music played an important part in religious worship services. Singing was then looked upon as an expression of a natural desire to worship. Satan, however, soon snatched at this great instrument of divine worship and made of it a heathenish, soul-damning instrument. In spite of the devil's attempt to monopolize fully the field of music, hymns, psalms, and gospel songs have been sung to the glory of God through all the ages.

One of the earliest instances of the important place of music in the life of the people of the Old Testament is recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Exodus. The Children of Israel had just been miraculously guided through the Red Sea, and their enemies had been destroyed. "Then sang Moses and the Children of Israel this song unto the Lord, for He had triumphed gloriously." "Then sang Moses . . ." No wonder they sang! God had given a glorious victory, and they paused to give praise to Him. That same cause will always produce the same effect, no matter in what generation or in what dispensation. Spiritual, joyous singing will always follow a great spiritual victory. The Christian who is not winning victories is apt to be a songless Christian. Even so, the self-satisfied, unaggressive, cooled-off church is apt to be a church whose singing is formal, joyless, powerless, and half-hearted.

Another great song of the Israelites is recorded in Num. 21:16. "The Lord spake unto Moses, gather the people together, and I will give them water." "Then sang Israel . . ." No wonder they sang! Having gone without water for many days on their desert journey, they expressed their joyful emotion when God gave them water, by singing praises unto Him.

The fifteenth chapter of Judges records the complete song which Deborah and Barak sang after God had given a glorious victory. Deborah, as you recall, was the judge over all the people of Israel, and her land had been invaded by an army commanded by Sisera. She called Barak, an able leader, to lead the Israelites against the foe, and God gave them victory. "Then sang Deborah and Barak on that . . ." No wonder they sang! A victorious Christian is a singing Christian.

Another song of victory is recorded in the sixteenth chapter of First Chronicles. The Ark of God had been victoriously returned to Jerusalem, and David gathered his people together for a great time of celebration and praise. David prepared a large feast for all the people, and after this he appointed certain Levites to organize a great song-feast. "Then on that day David delivered his psalms of thanks unto the Lord." "Call upon His name, make known his deeds among the people, sing unto Him, sing psalms unto Him." I Cor. 16:7. Apparently this great song of David was sung responsively.

Much of the Old Testament singing was antiphonal. That is, one group or a leader would sing a line of a song, or several lines, and another group would respond with a repetition of a line or lines which the first group had just sung. Illustrations of antiphonal singing were found in Exodus, chapter fifteen, where the phrase, "The horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea," appears frequently. In Psalm 136 the phrase, "For His mercy endureth forever," is used twenty-six times. The 121st Psalm is also a splendid example of this type of singing.

The two outstanding songwriters of this period were David and Solomon. David's spiritual joy is evidenced in his many songs of praise. His remorse for sin is bespoken in his songs of confession and contrition. Solomon, likewise, possessed musical and poetic gifts which far exceeded those of his contemporaries. "And God gave Solomon wisdom, understanding, exceeding much, and largeness of heart . . . . for he was wiser than all men . . . and he spake three thousand proverbs; and his songs were a thousand and five." (I Kings 4:29-32)

The close of the Old Testament period was marked by apostacy and unbelief, and this apostacy was reflected in their singing. The joyful songs of Moses, of Deborah, of David, and of Solomon were heard no more. Instead, religious music became formal and mournful. The decrease of spirituality was accompanied by a decrease of wholehearted singing, and synagogue singing was confined to the ritualistic chanting of the priests.

In New Testament Times

Beginning with the time of Christ's earth-life Christian singing again became joyous and victorious. Christ sang with His disciples. In Mark 14:26 we read, "And when they had sung an hymn they went out into the garden and there prayed." The singing of a hymn before prayer creates a more worshipful attitude. Paul and Silas sang in their prison cell; God joined with a thunderous bass, and the prison doors flew open! God's messengers went free!

On many occasions Paul recommended the exercise of Christian song: I Cor. 14:15; Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16 (R. V.). There are various passages in Paul's writings which are perfect hymn patterns, and it is quite probable that many are quotations from hymns which were well known in his day, such as, Eph. 5:14,

"Wherefore He saith,
Awake thou that sleepest,
Arouse thee out of death,
That Christ may be thy light!"

I Tim. 3:16

"Manifest in flesh,
Justified in spirit,
Visible to angels;
Preached among the nations,
Believed on in the world,
Taken up into glory."

and II Tim. 2:11

"If we die with Him we shall live with Him.
If we endure with Him we shall reign with Him,
If we deny Him, He too will deny us,
If we are faithless, He abideth faithful,
For He cannot deny Himself."

James adds his words of approval, "Is any merry? Let him sing!" James 5:13. John writes, "And I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps; and they sung as it were a new song before the throne." Rev. 14:2,3. Again John writes, "...And I saw...them that had gotten the victory over the beast...stand on a sea of glass having the harps of God." And they sang the song of Moses and "the song of the Lamb...." Rev. 15:2,3. And again John writes: "The four creatures and the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having everyone of them harps, and golden vials full of odours which are the prayers of the saints. And they sang a new song." Rev. 5:8. Both vocal and instrumental music definitely receives divine sanction when used in worship.

The earliest Christian hymns which we have any record of are found in the first two chapters of Luke: The song of Elizabeth, "Blessed art thou among women;" the song of Mary, "My soul doth magnify the Lord;" the song of Zachariah, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for He hath visited and redeemed his people;" the song of Simeon, "Lord, Thou lettest Thy servant depart in peace according to thy Word."

At the first singing of Psalms was probably carried over from synagogue worship into Christian services. Gradually, however, as we have seen, Christians began writing their own songs, and very soon thousands were in existence.

In the Present Day

To get to the hymns of the present day we must skip over a period of about 1900 years during which time music and singing had many ups and downs. During the supremacy of the Catholic Church congregational singing was a thing of the past. With the coming of the Renaissance and the leadership of Martin Luther, congregations again began to use hymns in their worship services. Then we must skip over the glorious advance of Christian music made by John Calvin, the Wesley brothers, John and Charles, and Isaac Watts. It is interesting to note that the first book published in our land was a song book, the Bay Psalm Book, published in 1640. It contained psalms and hymns which were sung in the churches of the Pilgrims. As we get closer to the present day hymnology, we mention in passing the emphatic singing and song leading of men like Ira D. Sanky, Philip Bliss, McGranshan, Fanny Crosby, and others during the great revivals under such men as Spurgeon, D. L. Moody, Torrey, and others.

We have been talking about hymns. What is a hymn? A hymn is a prayer song addressed directly to a member of the Holy Trinity. Examples are: "Nearer My God to Thee," addressed to the Father; "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me," addressed to the Son; "Holy Ghost, with Light Divine," addressed to the Holy Spirit.

A psalm is a praise song. Christian hymnody in the twentieth century possesses very few such songs. There is a definite need for more songs of praise, for they are the vehicles of Christian worship. Most of our current Christian songs are either the songs of prayer or testimony.

A song of testimony is addressed to people as distinguished from a hymn which is addressed to a deity. There are two kinds of gospel songs, the song of testimony, "Since Jesus Came into my Heart" and the song of exhortation, "Work For the Night is Coming." The singer is preaching a sermon.

The distinction between the hymn and the gospel is very important in determining how the song should be sung and at what occasion. Sing a hymn with the same reverence and solemnity and humility with which a prayer is offered. Sing a gospel song with the same enthusiasm and earnestness and victory with which a testimony or exhortation would be delivered.

There is a time for all things: a time to sing worshipful, majestic hymns, a time to sing deeply spiritual hymns of faith and encouragement, a time to sing happy songs of joy and victory.

Every great hymn seems to have been the result of a definite spiritual crisis in the life of the writer. For example the author of the song, "What a Friend we have in Jesus," intended that the words should not only be seen by his mother, and in his letter of comfort he composed the words of this now world-famous song.

"What a Friend we have in Jesus
All our sins and griefs to bear
What a privilege to carry,
Everything to God in prayer."

The best known song of our day is the "Old Rugged Cross." George Bennard wrote it in Michigan in 1913. This song was also born through a testing of faith and has become more popular than any other religious or secular song. Other well known songs are: "Wonderful Grace of Jesus," "Softly and Tenderly," "I need Jesus," and many others.

We have countless songs with blessed messages—but however beautiful the song or however appropriate the message we cannot sing without a song in our hearts. Unless we have been "born again," we have no song! Christian people sing!! Singing will be our occupation throughout eternity. We shall sing the praises unto the Lord of Lords and King of Kings together with the angels. More than that we shall sing when the angels cannot sing.

"For when we sing Redemption's story
Angels cannot sing,
For angels never knew the joy
That our Salvation brings!"

The Ministry of Reconciliation

By Rev. Harold D. Burkholder

(Paper given at Second Quarterly Conference at Bowmansville, Pennsylvania, October 20, 1941)

"And all things are of God who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." II Cor. 5:18.

Introduction

Before enlarging on the subject it might be well to mention a few things about it to clarify our thinking.

There is no doubt in our minds as to the word "ministry," for it clearly means "the act of ministering, or the function of a minister." However, the word "reconciliation" may not be as clear to us as it ought to be. Webster defines it as follows: "to cause to be friendly again; to bring back harmony: to adjust; reunite; propitiate."

In the Scofield Bible, page 1263, the following definition is given: "The Greek word for reconciliation signifies 'to change thoroughly from.'" (Mr. Fausset adds that it is changing the judicial status of one under condemnation to that of justification.) "Reconciliation looks toward the effect of the death of Christ upon man, as propitiation is the God-ward aspect, and is that effect of the death of Christ upon the believing sinner which, through divine power, works in him a 'thorough change' toward God from enmity and aversion to love and trust. It is never said that God is reconciled. God is propitiated, and the sinner is reconciled."

In the light of these definitions, as well as other scripture which indicates that man in his natural state is at enmity with God and estranged from Him, (Col. 1:21; Rom. 5:10; Eph. 2:2; 2:11-15) it is clear that he needs to be reconciled—"brought back into harmony," as was true back in the Garden of Eden. All this will also, as Webster put it, "cause them to be friendly again."

In I Cor. 7:11 we have an illustration from scripture where a husband and wife have become separated and estranged. Paul, addressing himself to the wife says that she is to remain unmarried or again be reconciled to her husband. It is clear that before such could be true the cause of separation in the first place had to be removed. An adjustment was necessary if a happy reunion was to result.

Now, man was alienated from God. He had no love for Him. He disliked His law and government; although at one time he felt that he could obey and keep such commandments. However, in time he did not like such restraint and thus sought his own pleasure. He became proud and self-confident. He was not pleased with the claims or plans of God. On the other hand, God was also displeased with man's pride, self-confidence, and its by-products. He was displeased with the fact that His Holy Law was not kept. Reconciliation could thus not be made until these causes for alienation were laid away. When man was willing to lay aside his love for sin and receive pardon, God could then consistently treat him as a friend. The change necessary was evident in man only, and not in God, "For He changeth not." He is the "same yesterday, today and forever." It is man who has changed from God's original plan for his life. "All we like sheep have gone astray;" "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God;" "There is none righteous, no not one, there is none that doeth good." The change needed is in us, and not in God. He has remained holy, pure, and true.

There are those who feel that God was originally stern, but through the atonement was made mild. But, the fact is that He was always willing to pardon, and the plan of reconciliation is just an expression of His original willingness. By way of illustration, when a father sees his child struggling in the stream and in danger of drowning, the cry of that child does not change the character of that father toward his child, but so great was his former love that he plunges into the stream at the risk of his own life in order to save the child. So it is with God. His original love for man was so great that He was willing to sacrifice anything but justice and truth that salvation might be provided. Therefore He sent His Son to die on the cross—not to change His character, but to show His past love and readiness to forgive; for now it could be done consistently through Jesus Christ.

Although the words "reconcile" and "reconciliation" are used often in the Old Testament, yet "atonement" is invariably the true meaning. Reconciliation is a New Testament doctrine. The Old Testament sacrifices could not reconcile the sinner to God, for it only covered and did not remove sin. It was the "lamb of God," His sacrifice made once for all on Calvary's Cross, which for the first time provided complete reconciliation to God.

In this paper it is difficult to enlarge simply on the statement "ministry of reconciliation." I believe that it is necessary to have a clear understandnig of this New Testament teaching if we are to realize our God-given responsibility to humanity. It is my purpose, therefore, to give you a clear picture of the fundamentals of this ministry in order that each one of us may see the emphasis that God places on this message.

In II Cor. 5:18-21 there are five fundamental principles of redemption laid down. These seem to lie at the bottom of the "ministry of reconciliation." They are as follows:

1. Incarnation—"God was in Christ." (vs. 19)
2. Atonement—"Reconciling the world unto Himself." (vs. 19)
3. Revelation—"He hath committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation." (vs. 18)
4. Regeneration—"We pray you in Christ's stead be ye reconciled to God." (vs. 20)
5. Righteousness—"That we might be the righteousness of God in Him." (vs. 21)

We might call them the five R's—Redeemer, redemption, revelation, regeneration, and righteousness. These can all be summed up in one word rconciliation.

From these five points we see that ours is a clear message. There can not be omitted one link from God in Christ to man in Christ, from incarnation to imputation of His righteousness to our account.

In the same passage (II Cor. 5:18-21) we have brought to our attention the Author, medium, recipients, and agents of this reconciliation. First of all let us consider the Author:

I. The Author

"And all things are of God who hath reconciled us." (vs. 18) God is the Author of reconciliation.

As already mentioned in part, reconciliation is to change the relation of hostile parties into a relation of peace. In the scripture it is used of both mutual and one-sided enmity. It may be man's enmity against God, or even God's enmity against the sin of man. To understand this fact we must realize that according to Rom. 1:30, one of the characteristics of sin is hatred of God, and we must remember that sin is in turn hateful to God. God loves the sinner, but must hate his sin.

Our Duties and Privileges as Loyal Christian Citizens

By H. S. Bender

A few words regarding the situation in which we find ourselves as loyal nonresistant citizens of a country which is at war might be of interest and help to Herald readers, particularly in the light of the study which the Peace Problems Committee has been making of present problems. The following eight points touch some of the most urgent issues which face us.

1. Our country is at war, and we must remember that the situation is not the same as when we were at peace. New laws, regulations, and restrictions must be expected, accepted, and cheerfully obeyed. In no way should any loyal citizen seek to obstruct or oppose the war effort of the nation. Having always held ourselves aloof from affairs of state we should maintain the same attitude of aloofness now. The state takes whatever measures seem necessary to it for the defense of the nation, and in no sense, not even in appearance, should we oppose what is being done by the government for this purpose.

2. Our own nonresistant principles are based upon eternal truth as found in God's Word, and are applicable in wartime, not only as much as in peace time, but even more so. This is no time to compromise in the least our historic, Scriptural faith and practice. Our witness should be maintained, though deeds and life now should count more than words.

3. We have two loyalties, to two sovereignties—to God first, and second to the state. We rejoice in the fact that the state, our United States of America, has recognized the higher sovereignty of God over the conscience, and has made provision for liberty of conscience. There is no requirement of the state, as yet, which in any way requires us to violate conscience.

4. Our men of military age are fully provided for through the Selective Service Act and regulations. No sincere conscientious objector need serve as a soldier. Civilian service, financed and directed by the Church, continues undisturbed.

5. To date, no law or regulation has been passed compelling civilians (which includes all of us not in the army) to participate in any way in the national war effort. There is no governmental compulsion to buy war or defense bonds or savings stamps, support the Red Cross, work in defense or war industries, or participate in Civilian Defense activities. Therefore anyone who participates in the various phases of the war effort does so voluntarily. Pressures on our people to take part in these things may be strong, but they are no stronger than the pressures on our drafted men to accept service in the army. As sincere nonresistant people we should not yield to these pressures and thus compromise our faith and our conscience. We should not be less steadfast at home than those who are drafted to camp.

6. It is not necessary to "join" any organization, or "pledge" anything, or "sign" any statement—and it would be much wiser not to join, sign or pledge anything, no matter how great the pressure becomes. The safest way is to avoid all entanglement. It is easier to stay out now, than to get out later. Remember that what we have now is mild compared to what may come later, and things which seem harmless now may lead to serious complications further on.

7. We should be ready for positive and constructive service which Christians can perform without entanglement, or without compromising and violating our nonresistant conscience. If necessary, positive statements or pledges to this effect could be made, but they should be worded in our own language. A statement similar to the following might be used:

I desire to contribute constructively in the present crisis in such positive action as a sincere Christian and loyal citizen can perform within the limits of conscience, ability and governmental provision. Being conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form, I wish to offer my services in ministering to community needs and to the upbuilding of the nation, without becoming a part of the war effort.

Local leaders, bishops, and pastors might establish contact with civic or governmental organizations and explain our attitude, creating good will, and offering positive service when and as needed to relieve suffering, etc. Donations to our own relief work should continue and increase.

8. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Goshen, Indiana

What If They Say

What if they say, "If you want to be entirely consistent in your scruples against war, must you not refuse to pay your taxes?"

All tangible property is said to have at least three legitimate owners. (1) "The earth is the Lord's." (2) The governments of given nations own sections of the surface and resources of the earth. (3) Individuals are said to be rightful owners of given amounts of the world's goods.

Actually, God is the owner, and the other two are stewards. Either may act selfishly or willfully and, by the law of consequences, lose his stewardship.

God has set governments as guardians over the civil phase of the "life and pursuit of happiness" of its peoples. Jesus says: "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Paul adds: "For this cause pay ye tribute: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing." (Mk. 12:17; Rom. 13:6)

But for the Christian the problem does not resolve itself so easily. Seeking the Kingdom of God first places demands on revenue one derives from property. Life represents labor. Labor represents property. The Christian is concerned that revenue from his labors be used wisely. Both God and Caesar have the right to given proportions of it. A Christian protests against the idea that Caesar's levies are crowding God out of the picture, especially when Caesar destroys what God has set out to save.

A Christian pays taxes, realizing that the government is responsible for its use, but lamenting the fact that all of it is not being used for "protection through goodwill." —Walter H. Dyck

A MESSAGE TO NONRESISTANT CHRISTIANS

Submitted by H. S. Bender, chairman of Peace Problems Committee

Preparatory Statement by the Peace Problems Committee

Our country, which we love and cherish, is at war; a war which our President has told us will be long and hard. As we face this dreadful reality, we are keenly aware of the heavy burdens, grievous suffering, and great sacrifices which such a war entails; and from which none of us can escape, even if we would. As a part of the nation, sharing its lot of weal or woe, we must help to carry its present misfortune, and prepare to make our contribution as Christians to the restoration of peace and the reconstruction of the national welfare after the holocaust of war is past.

Our desire to contribute constructively in the present crisis must find its expression in such positive action as sincere Christians and loyal citizens can perform within the limits of conscience, ability, and governmental provision. We trust the leadership of the Church to guide us in our activity and to prepare constructive service projects for our participation and support, particularly in the relief of human need and suffering at home and abroad, in ministry to local community needs, and in the upbuilding of the moral and spiritual welfare of our country.

We are conscious of the fact that the human and material resources of the nation are being marshalled by our government in a total war effort, and that we shall be expected and asked, possibly in some matters commanded, to participate in it. In the light of our historic nonresistant position, which is well known to our government and our fellow citizens by repeated testimonies in recent times, and has been maintained with devotion for over four hundred years, and which we hold as a deep and sincere conviction of conscience based upon our understanding of the Gospel of Christ and the Word of God, we do not see how we can consistently participate in this national war effort, much as we purpose in all other respects to be obedient, loyal, and productive citizens.

We are deeply grateful for the continued recognition of our religious conscience which is contained in the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940 (Burke-Wadsworth Bill), and for the executive orders and regulations issued by the President and the Director of Selective Service under which this Act, as it applies to those conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form, has been so justly and considerately administered. We remember that this Act provides for complete exemption from military training and service, and that it requires an equivalent non-military service which has thus far been given without pay, and which has been financed by the Church. If in this supreme demand for participation in the total national war effort our democracy has honored the religious conscience to the extent of total exemption, we are confident that in all lesser demands a similar freedom and protection of conscience will be extended. This, we believe, will apply (1) to participation in war financing through the purchase of war or defense bonds and savings stamps, (2) to employment in war or defense industries, and (3) to participation in so-called Home Defense or Civilian Defense activities. We shall continue to plead before our authorities for deference to sincere conscience in the practical application of our nonresistant position in all these and similar points as need may arise, remembering that as yet in no one of the above matters has compulsion been exercised or even proposed.

We in turn desire in this time of crisis and need to contribute to the national welfare to the best of our ability and resources in labor, in finances, and in spiritual ministry. In all these things we wish to provide constructive alternative contributions, even as our nonresistant men in civilian public service contribute work of national importance to the country as an alternative to direct participation in war.

The designated committees and authorities of the various Mennonite branches, cooperating in the Mennonite Central Committee, are at work on practical measures which are designed to aid in preparing our people to meet the present crisis loyally and conscientiously, and which we trust will be satisfactory to our government, to our fellow citizens who do not share our conscientious convictions, and to ourselves. These measures and plans will be announced and put into execution from time to time.

Meanwhile we desire to appeal to our people on the following points:

(1) That we remember our official statements of times past on all matters relating to participation in war, and endeavor to apply them consistently in principle and in practice in current situations.

(2) That we be generous and sacrificial in support of wartime relief work and civilian public service, as well as in all the regular church activities of missions, education, etc.

(3) That profits resulting from war situations be consistently not used for personal benefit, but for purposes such as listed in (2) above.

(4) That we remain aloof from war and defense activities of all kinds.

(5) That we abstain from employment in war and defense industries.

(6) That we do not purchase war and defense bonds and savings stamps, but rather purchase civilian government bonds and savings stamps as they are provided.

(7) That we pray for our rulers and those that are in authority, and for the speedy restoration of a righteous and just peace in the world.

(8) That we continue "a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness," abstaining from all appearance of evil, and commending the Gospel of peace and love by our lives.

(9) That we endeavor to be more faithful stewards of the manifold blessings which God has given us.

(10) That we seek ever-deepening and widening experience and expression of Christian love to all men.

Appendix

Inasmuch as the question of the purchase of government bonds and savings stamps is now before many of our people, we suggest the following to meet this situation:

(1) That M. C. C. certificates of donation for relief and civilian public service, and M. C. C. donation stamps, might serve as alternates to defense bonds and savings stamp purchases, particularly for those with limited means and for children.

(2) That those who are able to purchase government bonds of substantial size might make use of a statement of readiness to purchase civilian bonds when they become available. The following form might be useful for this purpose:

Statement of Readiness to Purchase Civilian Government Bonds

"In consistency with my religious belief and conscientious convictions, I cannot aid or abet war or give voluntary support to the national war effort, and for these reasons cannot purchase government obligations the proceeds of which are used for war purposes. However, I do wish to support my country with such means as are at my disposal, for constructive ends and particularly in works or relief of human need and suffering, and am accordingly prepared and ready to purchase $__________ par value of government obligations that may become available for such purposes, when and as they are approved by the Mennonite Central Committee to this end. I will subsequently make additional purchases as my circumstances and the general situation may warrant."

The holidays, full of sunshine, love, and abundance of everything, have passed by again. They were days of peace for us here. It did not always sound like peace with children and children's children at the grandparents' home, as there were some among them who could not be considered as belonging to the "Quiet in the Land" (Die Stillen im Lande).

Loud rejoicing seems to be out of place in these trying times, but if we were unable to rejoice in spite of sufferings and trials, when then would we rejoice? Suffering is always with us. Did not God Himself sink His heavenly joy into the night of human suffering, thereby turning it into a "Holy Night?" He gave His only begotten Son to us into a stable and a manger, and into our human hearts. He told us thereby that our tribulations lead up to an unthought-of glory, and that our sufferings only stir up our yearning for that glory within our souls. And wherever that yearning awakens, there also a great joy enters the heart. This is a joy that cannot be quiet, because our yearning for the eternal carries in itself the assurance of fulfillment and thus provokes loud rejoicing. Our small human hearts would simply burst under the tension if we would try to check that rejoicing.

What delight, O what rejoicing
Brings the blessed Christmas time!
Gladness ev'ryone is voicing,
And a happiness sublime.
Glory to the heavenly King!
And peace on earth, good will toward all people!
Born was Jesus Christ, our Saviour,
The Lord, in Bethlehem!

That veritable storm of rejoicing has abated now. Stillness prevails and contemplation has seized me in this my little corner of our bed room that serves me as a study.

Has God ever blessed anyone without making him a blessing to others? "I will bless thee . . . , and be thou a blessing!" Thus the voice of Jehovah God rings out and comes to us through the ages.

Our hearts still want to sing because they still feel the blessings of Christmas. But our singing now turns into a question:

How shall I, Jehovah, praise Thee?
How Thy blessings all proclaim?
Let, O Lord, Thy Spirit raise me
To exalt Thy Holy Name!
For Thy love all else transcending
Passes all my understanding.
A thousand, thousand times I sing
Glory to the heavenly King

Someone asked the pupils of our Sunday Schools at this season what first comes to their minds when they think of Christmas, and in reply they cried out, "Santa Claus." And thereby the inquirer's heart was saddened.

But I must confess that my old heart was gladdened to learn of the sound feelings and the honesty of our oncoming generation. Of course you can teach the children to reply to your question with the phrase, "Jesus Christ, the Saviour," but that answer will be only a phrase and nothing else. It will not come from the fullness of a child's heart. "Good Friday" will much sooner provoke the thought of Jesus Christ, the Saviour, than Christmas. Where Christmas is comprehended rightly there it will proclaim to the children of men what God has done and given to them. God understands them and recognizes the least of their wishes, while we law-minded human beings always will put our trifling, little longings to the back and offer instead things which are too high for us to grasp.

At the time of Lent we see the Lamb of God who bears the sin of the world, and our sense of duty brings to our memory the words of Christ, "He that doth not take his cross and follow after me, is not worthy of me."

But at Christmas time there predominates the jubilant assertion, "God so loved the world that He gave. . . ." He gave you and me gifts for Christmas which we could touch with our hands and appropriate to ourselves. The eternal Word of God was made flesh and laid into a manger to make men witnesses of things which they have seen with their eyes, which they have looked upon, and their hands have handled, of the Word of Life. This is Christmas! At Christmas God gives without demanding.

But in silent contemplation of all that God gave us it bears more and more distinctly upon my conscience that I am indebted to God, to pass God's blessings on to them who did not yet attain to them.

God gave me the sunshine of His Spirit which illuminates my way and shows me the glory to which it leads.

An abundance of love has been showered upon me by the wonderful gifts, the cordial letters, and the thoughtful greeting cards for Christmas. I cannot

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

IN THE MIDST OF CHILDREN

We read that Jesus took a child and set him in the midst of adults. Those were pre-Christian days when the child was either pampered or neglected. The same is done in non-Christian society today. Jesus changed this. He teaches us that the child is the foundation of society, hence very important. On the mission field the children have received careful attention from the very beginning. This consideration of the child's importance has brought us to a condition where we feel ourselves in the midst of children, instead of having here and there a lone child in the midst. In the Basna Christian community there are nearly a thousand children. In the school on the mission compound there are about 250 children. These children are taught, among many other things, to be polite and greet people when they pass by. That means that they also greet me as I walk around among them when on the playground, in the work shops, the class rooms and the farm. Each child persists in a personal "salaam" greeting and desires a personal acceptance of that greeting. So, to nod to 250 children consumes a lot of precious time. But is it worthwhile? Yes, I believe it is. We glean from the gospels that Christ was willing to pay attention to each child, and we must not overlook that. This little attention shows them that somebody has faith in them. As they become older children they experience, among other things, that they do not want to be found guilty before the missionary of stealing, lying, or foul speech. From this desire to please men, they are being led on to a desire to please Him Who has given His life to save them. We, in the midst of children in India, have a fine chance to radiate Christ among the potential members of the Christian church. The backing given by friends in the homeland for this work with the children in India is greatly appreciated.

DISTRICT WORK

Only about one-fourth of the Basna district Christians live at the main station. The others are scattered in more than sixty villages. Six small primary schools have been started in places where there are larger groups of Christians. The work of shepherding these and reaching out to new inquirers constitutes the "district work."

The annual Bible Course was very encouraging. From July 15 to August 15 the district workers came here. They, together with other literate people of the community, were enrolled in one, two, and even three classes daily; they are studying Jeremiah, I and II Thessalonians, and a special class on "The Seven Root Sins." A young men's class took up the Gospel of John. There were eighty-five people enrolled in these classes. At the same time there were eight classes for illiterates with an enrollment of seventy-seven who came regularly, and many others who came occasionally. Since then these district workers have conducted small Bible courses in nineteen places with a combined attendance of 413. There are still a number of other places where the work will be carried on this month (October). That means that already more than half of the Christian community of our station have been doing intensive Bible study. We feel that this is very definitely obeying the "great commission." "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

DOES IT PAY ?

"Does it all pay?" The large amount of foreign funds spent on our schools, the time, the energy, and the worry? These were often my thoughts in past years. Yesterday as we spent the Sabbath with the Dhabakar village church these thoughts were again uppermost. What a change! What a growth! Not in numbers only, but spiritually. For over a year one of our own boys, now an evangelist and a graduate of our Janjgir Bible School, has had charge of this village group. He and his family have been living right in their midst. Last June a primary school was started here. The influence of this is most encouraging. How quietly and well disciplined the thirty little tots sat throughout the morning and the afternoon services. How heartily, with beaming faces, they sang from memory at least a dozen songs. How much more reverently the women entered and sat quietly on the mats. All three, the evangelist and the two teachers, have been our little boarding boys in our local school. Now, after these years of preparation, they are the leaders sharing with these village folks the advantages that have been theirs. There is still much room for improvement, but what a joy to see the influence of their labours and ours, all striving toward a higher goal. One of the teachers took baptism yesterday, thereby openly confessing his faith in a true and living God in the presence of the village owner and many other non-Christians who had gathered to satisfy their curiosity. It indeed was a most blessed Sabbath!

INSPIRATION

It has been my privilege to be in a number of the district churches and district centers the past year. I am firmly convinced that the Lord is building His church, and the powers of evil shall not prevail against it. The spirit of reverence and worship among these simple village folks is an inspiration worth having, even though it costs miles of cycling and walking to experience. Mr. Duerksen has traveled 3200 miles by cycle and on foot in ministering to these folks during the past year.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Russell L. Mast, Bedminster, Pa.

FEBRUARY 1—"Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark 1:14b.

Thus began a ministry which has influenced the course of history and has given life and hope to millions through the centuries. It was good news when Jesus told men that God was still at work in human history and that the Kingdom of God was at hand. "The Kingdom of God is within you," said Jesus. Men needed only to accept the principles of the Kingdom as the working principles of their lives and the great hope of the ages would find its fulfillment in them. Those who enter the Kingdom are they who know and do the will of God. In the many decisions which life calls upon us to make, are we conscious of the principles of the Kingdom? Do we seek first to know and do the will of God?

FEBRURARY 2—"Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee he saw Simon and Andrew... And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me." Mark 1:16, 17

As Jesus proceeded to preach the good news to the world, he began to call disciples. It is significant that we refer to those early followers of Jesus as disciples. A disciple is one who learns from another. Certainly those fisherman had much to learn at the feet of Jesus until their spiritual lives reached maturity. There was Peter, the rough fisherman, outspoken, impulsive, vacillating. He had to learn of Jesus till he became St. Peter, rocklike, stable, and powerful. There were James and John, called "The Sons of Thunder," fiery-tempered, impatient, selfish. They had to learn of Jesus till they became leaders in the early church. Before their lives could flower into spiritual maturity, they had to pass through a long learning process. What can we learn from Jesus that we may grow in mind and spirit?

FEBRUARY 3—"Enter ye in at the strait gate.... Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life...." Matt. 7:13, 14

Life in the Kingdom requires that we not only receive its teaching, but that we also accept its disciplines. From the same root from which we get "disciple" we get also the word "discipline." If you want to become a master at the piano you must not only receive certain teachings, but you must accept certain disciplines. You must spend long hours laboriously practicing finger exercises. That is a discipline. Thus Jesus speaks of a "strait gate" and a "narrow way." The strait gate is the restricted gate, and the narrow way is the disciplined way. The Kingdom is restricted to those who are willing to accept the disciplines of the Kingdom. How can we enter upon life in the Kingdom if we do not submit our lives to a rigorous discipline?

FEBRUARY 4—"In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." Isa. 30:15

One of the many disciplines we must accept for our lives is the discipline of quietness. The prophet suggests something which we in this age need especially to hear. This age in which we live is noted for activity and intensity. Yet if we consider the men and women of this day who make their activity count for the most, we shall discover that in their lives they have hours of receptivity. It is in quietness that we cease being active and become receptive. There is strength in that because then we can relate our small activities to the ultimate purpose of God. Living a Christian life is more than trying hard. It comes as the result of an open heart, open to the loving spirit of God. Do not begin another day without accepting the discipline of quietness and opening your life to the loving spirit of God revealed in Jesus.

FEBRUARY 5—"For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?" Matt. 5:46

Another discipline which a Christian ought to accept for himself is to love people he does not like. Christian fellowship often borders on the proverbial "mutual admiration society." We gather around ourselves only those who are congenial to our personalities, thanking God that we are not as other men are. Unconsciously we set ourselves up as the final standard, trying to run everyone else into that mold. To love those we do not like, to extend Christian charity to those with whom we cannot agree is not easy. But it can be done if we think not of ourselves but of the Eternal God who loves us even when we are often very unlovely! Set out this day to include someone within the circle of your friendship whom you have never included before.

He drew a circle that shut me out,
  Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But love and I had wit to win;
  We drew a circle that took him in.

FEBRUARY 6—"If any man will come after me let him deny himself, take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke 9:23

No one has plumbed the depth of Christian living who has not discovered the discipline of the cross. There are many things to be said about the cross, but let us now think on this: The cross of Christ must be for us a daily living experience. No teaching of Jesus has been repeated in the gospels more often than this. The way of the Kingdom is the way of self-sacrifice and the bearing of a cross. Luke records the word "daily" which makes it a discipline for everyday living. First Peter bears witness to this same truth in the statement, (2:21) "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow in his steps...." Make it a discipline of your life, that you will renounce self to find God and the Kingdom. Make the way of the cross your daily experience.

FEBRUARY 7—"... he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions." Matt. 19:22

Jesus came not only to bring us peace of mind but to disturb us and shake us loose from that which hinders our life in the Kingdom. It has been said that man is like an island. Sometimes you have to row all the way around until you find a place to land. When Jesus saw a man he rowed all the way around that life until he found the real problem; then he landed. With Zacchaeus he landed on the problem of corrupt business practices. With Nicodemus he landed on his need for spiritual rebirth. With the woman of Samaria he landed on the moral problem. With the rich young ruler of the text, he landed on the money question. Jesus could always size up a man, then point his finger at the weak spot in that life. That is always disturbing, but we need to be disturbed.

FEBRUARY 8—"....and the God of all comfort who comforteth us in all our tribulation...." II Cor. 1:3, 4

It was Jesus' genius that he could see both sides of the human problem. While some left his presence with heavy hearts, still others whose needs were different left his presence with a sense of inward peace. Jesus taught that God cares not only for humanity in general but for individuals one by one. "It is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones should perish." The God of comfort not only cares for us one by one, but he enables us to triumph in our sufferings. Witness the experience of Paul and see how one man turned his sufferings into a creative experience. The next time you are called upon to suffer, do not ask the well-worn question, "Why must I bear all this suffering?" But ask, "How can I use this suffering for the glory of God, for the enrichment of the lives of others, and for the development of my own character?"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

February 1, 1942
Jesus Calls Four Disciples
Luke 5:1-11

TOPIC: Why Jesus Calls Disciples

Introduction

The Synoptic Gospels all describe the long ministry in Galilee and leave the impression that it began immediately after Christ's temptation (last Sunday's lesson). John records in 1:35 to 4:54 a ministry in Judea which lasted about six months. This preceded the ministry in Galilee of which today's lesson is a part. In the beginning of the Judean ministry, John, Andrew, Peter, Philip and Nathaniel became acquainted with Jesus. They did not yet understand that being a follower meant full-time service. John, Peter and Andrew returned to their fishing business near Capernaum. This earlier meeting with Jesus helps to explain their readiness to follow Him when He called them as recorded in our lesson.

Jesus Teaching the People vss. 1-3

Jesus had become known throughout Galilee as a miracle-worker. Many came to hear Him proclaim the word of God (vs.1). He found many who had a real soul hunger and thirst for the words of life. Jesus spoke that which satisfied their heart's desires. People are very similar today. There is a soul-hunger for the Word of God. Because of the large crowd present, Jesus found it necessary to get away from the people so that they could see and hear Him. He entered into Peter's boat and used it as a pulpit while speaking to the people. This also took Peter away from his nets and made him Jesus' helper. Perhaps, Jesus did this mostly for Peter's benefit. Jesus threw out the gospel from the boat from which Peter had cast the fishing net.

Four Disciples Follow Jesus vss. 4-11

Peter had helped Jesus and had listened to every word of His teaching. Now Jesus is ready to help him in his fishing and in this way lead him into a life of much larger usefulness. He commands Peter to "launch out," away from the shore and let down the nets. The same daring spirit which helps to success in secular matters is also a potent factor in success in Christian work. Peter recognized Jesus as Master, and although it looked like a hopeless effort (vs.5), yet he was willing to follow Jesus' bidding. Peter showed his faith in Jesus. How slow we are to venture in faith. We follow our own reasoning and experience so readily.

Peter's faith was well rewarded (vs. 6). Jesus miraculously directed him to the shoal of fishes. The great abundance of the fish (vs.7) impressed Peter and Andrew. This is a symbol of the riches of God's grace. Peter recognized Jesus as "Lord" and prostrated himself in an attitude of humility and reverence (vs.8). He was overcome by a sense of his own sinfulness. He felt himself unworthy of Christ's presence in his boat. We must own ourselves sinful men. These experienced fishermen had never seen too great a catch of fish. They were moved to intense motion. Jesus quieted their amazement. He sets a real challenge before Peter. The other three took up this challenge as being for them too. Jesus saw the possibilities in Peter and called him and the other three into the high calling of being fishers of men. He gave them power in the lives of others. These four left their fishing business at the peak of prosperity, to enter into active service with Christ. They gave Him first place.

Calling and training disciples was a very essential part of Christ's work. Men had to be chosen and trained to carry on the work for which He laid the foundation. He gathered a group of followers and from this larger group He chose twelve men as apostles. These received matchless training from Him. Christ calls busy people, not idlers, to special tasks. Nothing can defeat the one who in a discouraging situation says, "Nevertheless I will do as Christ says."

Why do many people hesitate to obey God's call?

What did the four fishermen give up when "they forsook all" to follow Jesus?

Why did not Jesus choose more educated men to be His helpers?

CIVILIAN PUBLIC SERVICE NEWS

Camp Directors Meet

On January 1 the Camp Directors of the Mennonite Civilian Public Service camps met at the Home Mission in Chicago. This was the first time that the directors of our camps had the privilege of meeting together in one group. Brother Henry A. Fast, director of the Mennonite camp program led the meeting, in which also the Executive Committee of the Mennonite Central Committee participated.

The meeting was opened with a period of devotion led by Brother Harold S. Bender. Meditation and prayer followed the quoting of Scripture by members of the group. Lengthy discussions of important aspects in the C.P.S. program were held. Among problems discussed were those relating to standards of camp life, religious and educational programs, granting of leaves, community relations, and possible new forms of service.

The meeting was a helpful one. It enabled the camp directors to exchange experiences and enjoy true Christian fellowship. Without doubt this meeting gave the directors new faith in their work and courage to carry on our non-resistant testimony.

The following directors were present: John H. Mosemann, Grottoes, Virginia; Albert Gaeddert, Colorado Springs, Colorado; Gideon Yoder, Denison, Iowa; Raymond L. Hartzler, Bluffton, Indiana; John Schmidt, Marietta, Ohio; Leland Bachman, Henry, Illinois; Mark Schrock, Cascade Locks, Oregon; Sanford Shelter, who will replace James Steiner at Sideling Hill, Wells Tannery, Pa., (the latter resigning for health reasons); and Grant Stoltzfus, who will assume the administrative work of the Hagerstown, Maryland, project.

RELIEF

Appreciation for Milk Given to Children

A letter from Brother Henry Buller, December 2, describes the distribution of milk to the ten thousand or more school children in Lyon, France. Quoting from Brother Buller: "When our supplies of milk are taken against the large number of children found in Lyon, one realizes immediately that it is not enough to carry on an intensive program over a large period of time. Yet I am sure that even this little bit will do its part in helping the children through this difficult winter. We are passing through a period here when even a little bit counts for very much..... One begins to think more and more of the tremendous possibilities that could be realized if one had the almost inexhaustable supplies of food stuffs that we have in America."

The director and directresses of the Lyon schools cooperate in the distribution of the milk. Following is an expression of appreciation coming from one of the directors:

"The Director of the Public School Rue Smith No. 38
to
The Delegate of the Secours Mennonite aux Enfants.

Dear Sir:

I acknowledge receipt of this barrel of milk powder you kindly sent to the school of which I am director. I take this opportunity to express to you my heartfelt gratitude and that of my collaborators, also of our children, for the moral and material relief that your help is to us. With all our heart, thank you.

Signed J. Royer"

Mennonite Central Committee Meets

The Home Mission in Chicago was the place of the annual meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee on January 2 and 3. At this meeting the committee surveyed the work of the Relief and Civilian Public Service activities of the past year and projected a program for the future.

In the field of War Sufferers' Relief a summary of Mennonite relief work in England, France, Paraguay, and Poland was given by Brother O. O. Miller. Brother Jesse Hoover who returned in November from

The Love of God and the Judgment of God

In speaking of "The Love of God and the Judgment of God" Kirby Page reminded us that when we think of God, we must consider the meaning of four words: freedom, integrity, interdependence, and suffering.

When thinking of freedom, we should remember that only free persons are able to live in God's kingdom. The word integrity assures us that certain choices always yield certain results. When we think of the meaning of interdependence, we must acknowledge that the person who sows does not do all the reaping; we must reap also what others sow. Finally, God's suffering love is the only way God has of winning men to the right use of freedom.

What does God do when He fails to win men to the right use of freedom? He just goes on loving and caring as He has from the beginning. Love that sacrifices itself for the good of someone else is the most powerful power in the universe.

Dr. Page said we become good or evil by habit. He used as an illustration the parable of the sheep and the goats. The sheep were commended or rewarded because they had the habit of showing mercy to others. The goats were cast out because they had the habit of doing evil. Mr. Page said that the consequence of our action is the judgment of God and there is none beside. Heaven is a state of existence, an attitude. It is not a reward; it is a consequence—the result of accepting the conditions of salvation as set forth by Jesus. —H. H. M.

The House That Love Built

(A true story adapted from a Report of the Friend's Reconstruction Unit in France; reprinted from "Peace Crusaders" by Anna B. Griscom.)

When the war came to the little village in northern France, the old men, the women and children had to take what things they could carry, and go far away, leaving their homes, their farms, and most of their belongings. The strong men could not help them for they were all in the army.

After many months, the people came back to their villages again. But they scarcely knew their homes, for the shells had torn off the roofs and knocked great holes in the walls. Not a house in the whole village had escaped.

Little Jeanne was seven years old. She was a brave girl, who had helped her mother during the long journey. She helped her now to try to make a hut where they could keep dry and warm in the corner of their old home, now ruined by the war. It was hard and discouraging; the rain fell steadily, and found all the cracks in the poor hut. Little Jeanne kept cheerful in spite of all the discomfort.

One day some quiet men in gray clothes came into the village, bringing wood to build little houses. These men seemed kind, though they did not talk French very well and it was hard to understand them. Gradually the people learned that the men clad in gray had come from England and America to try to heal the wounds of the war, and to help the people who suffered. These men would not fight, but would do all they could to repair the damage done by the fighting. They were called Quakers, and on the sleeves of their coats they wore a red and black star.

Jeanne was very much interested in these newcomers, and watched and listened all she could. She heard the neighbors say that the Quakers were building houses for all who needed them; and that the people were paying what they could. She thought about it a long time, and one day she went to the tall, smiling man who was the leader, and whispered to him, "Sir, my mamma needs a house so much! Our shed leaks in the rain. See, I have six sous. Can you build mamma a house? I will pay my six sous."

The tall man smiled, thought for a few minutes, and said, "Yes, Jeanne, I think we can build your mamma a house."

Jeanne was bubbling over with excitement. And when the auto truck really came to her mamma's old house and unloaded the lumber she danced with joy. In a very short time the house was built and ready, and Jeanne and her mamma moved in with the few things they had saved. It was much better than the leaky, cold shed. Life seemed more hopeful when the fire crackled in the little stove, and they were warm and dry again.

Next day Jeanne went to look for the tall man with the star on his sleeve whom she had first asked about the house, and gave him the six sous she had so carefully saved. He took the coins, counted them and handed back two. "It will not cost as much as we thought," he told her. You can have two sous for something else. We built the house to show you that we love you and to help you to love us. In this way you and we will learn to love each other, and we will never need to fight. Remember that love is better than fighting. If you do that, you can pay us for the house better than you could with money."

Take time to work—It is the price of success.
Take time to think—It is the source of power.
Take time to play—It is the secret of perpetual youth.
Take time to read—It is the foundation of wisdom.
Take time to worship—It is the high way to reverence.
Take time to be friendly—It is the road to happiness.
Take time to dream—It is hitching our wagon to a star.
Take time to love and to be loved—It is the privilege of divinity.

HOW THE SPIRIT WORKS—John 16:7-11

Program for February 15, 1942

I. Worship Service

1. Songs: "Come Holy Ghost, in Love," No. 131; "Spirit Divine, Attend Our Prayer," No. 139; "Holy Spirit, Faithful Guide," No. 137.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Play, "White Unto Harvest." (Needs little stage setting; it takes about fifteen minutes. Six women characters.) Write for it to Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander, Quakertown, Pa., or to Mrs. A. E. Kreider, North Newton, Kansas.
4. Offering for C. E. purposes.

II. Leader's Introduction

"In this day of judgment, when so many of Christ's followers live on low levels—lives that are miserable and weak, and when as a consequence the Church falls far short of what it ought to be, the one urgent and persistent question is this: Have ye received the Holy Spirit?"

One great reason for the unhappiness, as well as the weakness, of many lives is that they are held in the bondage of fears, anxieties, and worries. Christ, through His Spirit, helps us to conquer them. We are led by the Spirit to trust Him, to rely on Him for guidance and strength. There is sweet comfort to know that the Lord takes care of us and of our loved ones at all times, and that includes days like our present ones. Jesus Himself called the Spirit the Comforter. His promise to send him has been fulfilled, and we should not forget to thank Him for it.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

"Prayer for Renewal." Ps. 51:10-12; "The Spirit in Action," Acts 2:1-4; "Be Filled with the Spirit," Eph. 5:18-20.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What change did the coming of the Spirit make in the lives of the apostles and the early Christians?
2. What change should it bring about in our own life and in the life of the Church?

V. Facts for Study:

We find that the Spirit meant power in some form. This power manifests itself in the usual and in the unusual. It is seen in the growth, development, and progress of the Christian character. It shows itself in the daily, prayerful life, taking the dullness out of routine activities, and lending zest and beauty to them.

And sometimes the Spirit works in more striking ways. It brings sudden insight, vision, revelation of what needs to be done. It kindles devotion and enthusiasm to go ahead fearlessly. There is power and an inner fire, a sustaining strength through days of trial, to do God's bidding and to bring life and new light to the world.

In our days of sin and darkness the world sorely needs spirit-filled men and women. The world's needs have always been met by Spirit-filled people—Isaiah, Hosea, Peter, Paul, Francis of Assisi, Augustine, William Carey, Savanarola, Luther, Wesley, Knox, Menno Simon, Moody, E. Stanley Jones.

VI. Food for Thought:

Not by chariots and horsemen, not by guns and bombs, but by the Spirit of Christ—by love and good will and kindness—will the problems of this world be solved. Christ has shown us the way.

THE DOCTOR'S ANSWER TO ALCOHOL

Scripture Reading: Prov. 23:29-32

(A "Medical Meeting")

Announce a week ahead that each one is to bring to the meeting a clipping from a newspaper, or statement by an authority, telling the dangerous effects of alcohol.

We are beginning a series of four lessons on alcohol and what it does to our mind, body and soul. In these lessons we shall try to prove that it is a poison, that it is better never to create an appetite, and that it has never helped on any occasion, but has brought sorrow to thousands of homes through the loss of loved ones, loss of money, and loss of love.

The Question Bee

Q. 1. What did Daniel purpose in his heart?

Ans. That he would not defile himself with the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank.

Q. 2. Why doesn't the doctor always take a large dose of alcoholic liquor before every operation?

Ans. Dr. Lorenz, a great surgeon of Austria, makes this statement: "I am a surgeon; my success depends upon my brain being clear, my muscles firm, and nerves steady, and no one can take alcohol without blunting these. As a surgeon I must not drink."

Q. 3. Give several Bible quotations on our topic.

Ans. Prov. 23:29, 30; Isa. 5:11; Job. 12:25; I Sam. 16:12.

Prayer Items for Our Prayer List

(a) Clean bodies to be used as temples for Jesus; (b) strength to resist temptation; (c) to believe the truth about alcohol; (d) purpose in hearts never to partake of this evil thing.

reciprocate appropiately. My heart is too small, and my earthly means are too limited for that. But my heart has been filled to the overflowing with the Love of God by all these love-tokens.

Peace! We may confess and live that peace in the midst of war. What a mercy of God! How could we escape if we would not make full use of the possibilities thus given to us?

How could we escape if our love would not bless our contemporaries who are being torn to pieces by envy and hatred?

How could we escape if we would not follow our Lord on the road of glory and lead the way for them who cannot see yet for themselves? To us the Morning Star has risen!

The great rejoicing has spent itself, but the silent, deep joy is still with us, and we two, my good wife and myself, would like to thank hereby God and the many people who have so liberally added to our joy during this Christmas season. The Lord has used you to shower His blessings upon us.

It is beyond us to react on all the good things which you have done to us. But we shall, by the grace of God, endeavor in all earnestness to pour out the balsam of love into the wounds of those whom the Lord will show us in our future life. We shall endeavor, in weakness but in faithfulness, by the grace and power of God, to follow Christ and to be guides to them who do not know their Saviour yet and are left to be deceived continuously by a cruel ununderstanding world, and on whom no one ever bestows a gift which would really make their hearts rejoice.

And we shall open our hearts more and more to the peace of God that passes all understanding, and which will finally deliver this war torn world from the fangs of human foolishness and from the unspeakable sorrows in which they now perish.

Thus we shall try in all earnestness to pass the blessings on which God has bestowed on us through you.

Gratefully yours, Eliese and Jacob H. Janzen

France submitted a brief report on the work in France. Mrs. M. C. Lehman gave an interesting account of her work of packing the clothing received at Akron, Pa., for shipment to England, Paraguay, and other points where it is possible and necessary to send. Recommendations moved and passed regarding the relief program for the coming year included:

(1) Continued relief program for England under the same arrangements as in the past fiscal year, which had a monthly budget of $3000.
(2) Continued relief program for France under the same arrangements as in the past fiscal year, which had a monthly budget of $3000.
(3) Continued relief program in Paraguay according to needs of Mennonites there.

Changing national and international situations may close certain relief activities, but may also open others. In view of this the committee made those preparations it considered necessary to meet opportunities in new fields as they may open.

Brother Grant M. Stoltzfus gave a report outlining his work in supplying the various Mennonite publications with publicity notes, articles, and pictures as well as preparing special pamphlets on the Relief and C.P.S. work of the committee.

The program for the Civilian Public Service Camps occupied a considerable portion of the business meeting. Brother O. O. Miller presented the budget for the C.P.S. Camp program for the fiscal year, beginning December 1, 1941, and based upon an estimated peak load of 800 Mennonite men, plus 150 non-Mennonite men. Brother Henry A. Fast, General Director of Camps, gave a report on the camp program. He also submitted recommendations for C.P.S. Camp personnel which were approved. Brother Harold S. Bender's report on the educational program for the campus was discussed and approved. This program will call for special emphasis on the Mennonite heritage.

Brother Jesse Martin of Waterloo, Ontario, reported on Civilian Service work in Canada, and Brother Cornelius F. Klassen of Winnipeg, Manitoba, gave a report on the relief activities of the Canadian Mennonites.

A procedure of selecting C.P.S. assignees for service outside of the camp was presented and approved. The procedure was recommended by Brother Henry A. Fast and Brother O. O. Miller in consultation with the camp directors.

One of the most important issues which the committee handled was the problem facing non-resistant people in civilian life as a result of the entry of our country into war. Brother Harold S. Bender presented a statement of position on this problem, "Our Attitude as Non-resistant Christians in the Present Situation," which was listened to closely by everyone and endorsed unamiously as the expression of the various Mennonite groups on this problem.

Besides the committee there were around fifty guests in attendance, including church leaders of the various Mennonite branches. The meeting was an important one to all those who are concerned for our Mennonite testimony, and its work was carried on with a deep desire to do the Lord's will in serving the Mennonite Church. —Grant M. Stoltzfus

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Shafter, California

When Mr. Toevs and I came to Shafter almost a year ago with our family, we found the First Mennonite Church to be a pleasant looking, new brick building, situated in a splendid new residence district. This building exemplifies what can be done by a small group that is willing to work.

The Sunday School last year was and now for the new year is under the able leadership of John Unruh. The mid-week Bible study likewise is under his supervision. He asks different members to lead as the pastor is here only on week ends.

The Adult Choir, with Vernon Neufeld as director, rendered a musical program at Christmas time. We enjoy this choir as it sings from time to time.

We have also added to our music department an Intermediate Choir which assists each Sunday morning in the worship service and renders a special number occasionally. This Intermediate age group is important to the present and is the church of the future.

Those serving as pianists are: Mrs. Thelma Neufeld, Miss Leona Reimer, and Miss Hulda Gaede. Mr. George Gaede is the chorister.

The church purchased a splendid new mimeograph and enjoys the use of the bulletin each Sunday.

The Women's Mission Society held its annual auction in November, and we are well pleased with its success.

As for the Christian Endeavor, we have a general C. E. program on the first and third Sundays when we all meet together. Otherwise the groups meet separately.

The Reedley Young People's Choir, under the direction of Miss Emma Ruth, rendered an inspiring program one Sunday evening in November. We enjoyed a fellowship supper together with them and other invited guests, the young people from the Federal Camp with their pastor and wife, Rev. and Mrs. Ummell.

Mrs. John Neufeld (Olga Unruh), a bride of less than a year, has been confined to the hospital for several months with a heart ailment and running of temperature. It's been necessary to give her a number of transfusions in an attempt to restore her to good health. She is not so well at the time of this writing.

This church, as other churches in these coastal regions, is to be prepared for use as a hospital in case of emergency.

According to former agreement our time here terminates about June 1st. Mr. Toevs has steadfastly felt drawn and called to serve in a certain field where we will be able not only to serve a church but also be able in the meantime to give our children the opportunity on the farm of developing for their own usefulness in the future in some constructive work.

Therefore, we can not say less than to express our deepest gratitude to God's children wherever we have served. We have been overwhelmed as we have again and again experienced their loving considration, generosity, and cooperation, and, indeed, the people here in Shafter have nowhere been excelled! We feel that we have received far more blessings than we have been able to give.

We conclude as the result of serving in many Christian groups that the church people are, indeed, the grandest people on earth!

—Mrs. Edgar Toevs, Corr.

SECOND MENNONITE CHURCH

(Formerly San Marcos Mennonite Church)

Paso Robles, California

At our annual meeting, held New Year's Day, it was voted to change the name of our church as above.

The church was originally located on the San Marcos Ranch, some ten miles north of the present location, that situation being more convenient to the majority of the members. With the removal of most of the membership to the district known as Willow Creek, near Paso Robles, the church was also moved, but up to this time had retained its old name. It was also voted to have a business committee to carry on the work formerly taken care of by the treasurer. The present committee is Henry Wiebe, chairman; Gerhard Dueck, secretary; Herman Claassen, treasurer. Will G. Dyck was reelected Sunday school superintendent for another year.

Our proximity to Camp Roberts has given us several opportunities to be of service to some of the men there, which we trust has resulted in spiritual benefits to them. On July 27th and again on September 21st groups of about eighty soldiers, accompanied by their chaplains, were entertained at an afternoon program followed by lunch. On each occasion several numbers were furnished by the guests. On at least three different occasions our choir has been invited to give a program at the camp.

On August 30th a group from the local Gideon organization spoke at our morning service, after which a collection was given them with which to help with the purchase of testaments for the men at Camp Roberts.

Over two hundred guests were present at the silver anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Claassen, September 12th. A fitting program was rendered, followed by a bountiful supper. They were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts. Out-of-town guests were Mrs. John Jantzen, Oregon; Rev. and Mrs. Wiebe, Shafter; G. D. Claassen, Long Beach; Mrs. Charles Barber and three sons, Santa Barbara; Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Schroeder and son, Madera.

a little over two weeks later to congratulate Mr. a little later over two weeks later to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Dyck on the golden anniversary of their marriage. Eleven children were born to this union, and all of them are living. All were present with the exception of one son who is living in Illinois. There are thirty-four grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. The guests were also treated to an appropriate program and a tasteful supper, after which Mr. and Mrs. Dyck were presented with many lovely gifts by their relatives and friends. Mr. Dyck's brother, Henry Dyck of Washington, his son Gerhard and daughter, Mrs. Christine Schrag and her daughter were present, also Mrs. Dyck's sister, Mrs. John Jantzen of Oregon.

Rev. and Mrs. P. J. Becker, (Gertrude Schroeder) are now located at Niland, California, and are working under the auspices of the American Sunday School Union. Their constituency is migratory in character and rather difficult, but they are working hard and the Lord is blessing their efforts.

Our choir gave a musical program, with Christmas as its theme, on the evening of December 21st. On the afternoon of Christmas Day the children of the Sunday School gave their program. In spite of the fact that it rained heavily most of the day, the program was well attended.

We are now observing the Week of Prayer as suggested and outlined in the Bundesbote, meeting Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights, doubling up on the topics so as not to miss any of the blessings offered. We are grateful for this opportunity to review and refresh our souls with the knowledge contained in these Scripture portions and trust that many may be strengthened in faith for the days that are ahead. On the threshold of the New Year we are reminded of the Israelites about to enter the Promised Land. "Ye have not passed this way before." —Corr.

WOODLAND MENNONITE CHURCH

Warroad, Minnesota

"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of God." Luke 21:36. I think it will do us all good to study this verse.

Again a year is past. As we look back to see what God hath done, we must say that the Lord has graciously blessed us. We surely can raise our ebenezer here, for hither by His help we've come. We as a church have had many blessed times and feel closer drawn to Him. We have had blessed times at our midweek prayer meetings and Bible study hour. Prayer changes things. Prayer is the source of a Christian's power. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15:7.

Six persons joined our church by letter during the year.

A year or so ago we mentioned in our correspondence about accepting gifts for a building fund, and we received quite a few gifts. The men of our church went and cut logs and had them sawed up for lumber. We have plenty of lumber for the building, but we haven't built because we haven't quite sufficient funds. We shall build as soon as we have the means to do so. It will be built entirely by volunteer labor.

On December 2nd the brethren of our church had their annual meeting. They came an hour earlier and put up enough wood for all winter for the church. Rev. Art Ortman came to church on the tractor with the sawrig attached to the tractor and sawed the wood into stove lengths.

In December John Unruh and Susie Geortzen of Alsen, North Dakota, were married at Alsen. On their honeymoon they came to Warroad for a visit.

Rev. and Mrs. Helmuth Ortman from Munich, North Dakota, were here on a visit New Year's Day, and Rev. Ortman spoke both at the morning and evening services that day. —Jake G. Quiring, Corr.

SALEM MENNONITE CHURCH

Freeman, South Dakota

The year of 1941 was of great importance in many respects to the Salem congregation. On the first Sunday in August, the church was privileged to welcome its new pastor, Rev. and Mrs. Willard Claassen to their new home. A program consisting of musical selections and addresses of welcome by members of the church, with a response by Rev. Claassen, was given. The Ladies' Missionary Society sponsored a grocery shower for the pastor's family.

The new addition to the church basement has been completed. The work which was begun the first week in September, and which was done by the men of the congregation, is a monument to the church of cooperation and Christian brotherhood among the church members. The attractive room is used for Young People's C. E. Meetings (the adult and Junior C. E.'s meet in the main auditorium), for choir rehearsals, for Bible study and prayer meetings, and, beginning with the New Year, for children's Sunday School services. The Y.P.C.E. is now engaged in a drive for a piano for the new room. A dedicatory service was held with the Rev. C. H. Suckau delivering the sermon.

Many of the families of the church have lost loved ones during the past year. Mrs. Ernest Schrag, Mrs. John J. Waltner, Mrs. Jonathan Graber, Mrs. Dan H. Unruh, Mrs. John Ries, Miss Alfa Kaufman, Mr. Henry Dalke, and Mr. Jacob J. Waltner answered the final summons during 1941.

The annual rendition, November 30, of Handel's Messiah in the Freeman College Auditorium, was enjoyed by many. Many of the singers of the church, as well as the orchestra, participated. Three of the soloists, Miss Gladys Graber, contralto; Mr. Robert Senner, tenor; and Mr. Willard Waltner, bass, are members of the Salem church. Miss Winifred Hoff, who was the soprano soloist, lives in Yankton.

On November 23 a class of twenty young people was baptized and received into the membership of the church. Also three new members were taken into the church by letter.

On the following Sunday, November 30, Holy Communion was observed by the church. The church was pleased on December 7, to hear the morning message from one of its sons, Rev. Erland Waltner.

EAST SWAMP MENNONITE CHURCH

Quakertown, Pennsylvania

The Lord laid His hand on the members of East Swamp during 1941 for which we praise Him. He has made it possible for us to do various things which will benefit us very much. We now have a well at our picnic stand. It was always an inconvenience to our farmer friends to loan us their milk cans so we could bring water over to the grove. Another big addition is the Single Manuel Orgatron installed December 29. This organ will be dedicated January 25 at 2:30 P. M.

Looking over our Sunday School attendance and offerings, we can see a marked increase in both. More of our people are feeling the urge to tithe; giving the Lord His tenth, then adding their offering to that amount. We must praise the Lord for people who feel the urge to do so, who give their talents, time, and money so that the Lord may be glorified.

In looking over the statement of January 1, 1941, and January 1, 1942, we see an increase in church attendance and in offerings. The offerings were nearly two thousand dollars more than the January 1, 1941, report showed. Praise the Lord in the highest for His many blessings.

Several months ago Rev. Burkholder appointed three laymen to talk ten minutes on any topic each would choose. The entire program was conducted by the laymen of the church. This kind of program is appreciated by the congregation. The Lord has blessed these programs, and we find the evening services are having better attendance. We cannot be found at a better place than the house of God. We remember Jesus as a boy was found in the temple by his parents. Then we should also be found in church by our God and Father. —Corr.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Ransom, Kansas

The young people of our church gave the Christmas pageant "The Lost Carol" to a full house on December 23. The Sunday School children gave their program on the same evening also. After the program about twenty young people gathered at the pastor's home to go caroling. After this they enjoyed a light lunch of coffee and doughnuts.

The annual business meeting of the church was held the first week in December. The matter of securing a parsonage was discussed. The matter was referred to a board which was asked to report their findings to the church at a later date.

Sunday School officers and teachers were elected December 28. The pastor instructs a class of eight in catechism. Ten of our young people attend college somewhere, three of them Bethel College.

So far none of our young men have been drafted, but recently several were called to report for physical examination.

We have had several weeks of severe, cold weather, the thermometer registering eighteen below zero. Considerable snow fell too, furnishing a nice covering for the wheat. The roads were badly blocked in places, however. The wheat, where uncovered, shows a healthy green, which gives rise for hope of a good crop next summer.

Colds, measles and scarlet fever are unwelcome visitors in various homes.

We are looking forward to having Miss Fast, returned missionary from China, with us in the near future.

Our prayer is that war might soon cease, and that love might unite the nations again. —A. A.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH
Reedley, California

Since we were on a three months' trip before Christmas, I have neglected to send in my last report for 1941. I will relate a few items as I have been informed.

In this time of unrest, the verse found in Isaiah 26: 3 brings comfort to my soul. It reads: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." We should remind ourselves where we have failed to do our part in bringing peace and harmony between us and our fellowmen. May we trust Him more fully and keep our thoughts centered on Christ, who is our true example of peace.

November 2 was our annual All Church Day, when everyone is welcome to participate and contribute to a fellowship dinner.

Clothing for Canada was sent in December. On our trip to Canada we had the privilege of visiting the office where these clothes are sent. Quite a number of coats, dresses, shoes, and underwear were sorted and stacked, ready to be distributed before cold weather set in, but they were looking forward to getting many more clothes to supply the need. We visited some of the homes to which clothes had been delivered. When we see such places and notice how happy and contented the people are, we have much to be thankful for, and should have a very warm place in our hearts for them when it comes to sending relief to them in any form.

On December 21, following the morning worship hour, communion services were held. In the evening a candle light service of Christmas carols was greatly enjoyed by a large audience. It was sponsored by the Young People's Choir under the direction of Miss Emma Ruth.

The Week of Prayer was observed January 4 to 11. It was directed by the chairmen of the various church activities. Meetings were well attended. At the close of the meetings I felt that we should be more thankful for the past blessings enjoyed, and be ready to go on with new courage, taking Jesus as our guide and example at all times.

We have nearly reached our goal of getting enough money to purchase three hundred copies of the Mennonite Hymnary. There are so many places to give that one doesn't have to worry where to put the tenth and more. Freely we have received, and we should be willing to give freely as well.

We are wishing everybody a blessed new year. We may feel more uncertain than ever as to what the year has in store for us as Christians, but our God still reigns above. May He strengthen us all to live according to His will.

A travelogue of our three-month's trip may appear in The Mennonite as soon as I get around to writing it up. There is more time now that Christmas and New Year's celebrations are past. —Helen E. Penner

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH
Burrton, Kansas

The Christian Endeavor of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church of Wichita, Kansas, gave us a splendid program in October. On November 7th Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Penner celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. The week of December 1st to December 8th Rev. J. J. Regier, the minister of our church, held meetings near Medford, Oklahoma. Soon after his return practice was begun on a Christmas play entitled, "Christmas with Aunt Cynthia." During the Christmas vacation we were happy to have Miss Ella Pankratz of Beatrice, Nebraska, with us for a few days. Miss Pankratz is taking nurse's training in the Mennonite Hospital at Beatrice. —Ella Enns, Corr.

A Helpful Morning Song

By Mrs. Adelaide S. Johnson

"Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee," is a good slogan to insure a happy day. The writer has found wonderful help each morning by reciting to herself Miss Havergal's hymn:

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee."

This first couplet promises consecration of the whole life to the Master, while the following couplets mention specific points:

"Take my hands and let them move
At the impulse of Thy love."

As I prepare for the performance of the day's duties, I feel that it is a joyous privilege to ask Him to take my hands and use them as He wishes all through the day.

"Take my feet and let them be Swift and beautiful for Thee."

As I plan the day's tasks, I think of errands I can do to help those in my home circle who are overburdened with care, and I rejoice in the opportunity of doing something to help them. I think, also, of some suffering shut-in, and I treasure the glad thought that I can visit her and speak some word of comfort and cheer that may bring a ray of sunshine into her darkened life.

"Take my voice and let me sing Always, only, for my King."

To this petition I add the words, "and my pen and my typewriter and 'let them move at the impulse of Thy love.'" Also I pray that all my words, written, sung or spoken, may be such as my King will approve. I ask Him to help me give the "soft answer" when I am tempted to be impatient, the strong true answer when it would be easier to keep silence, and at all times to offer songs of praise and thanksgiving for the blessings He has showered upon me.

"Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold."

With this thought in mind, I will strive, as a faihtful steward, to use all the wealth entrusted to my care. I will give not only my "tithe" for God's service, but, after meeting my own needs and those of my family circle, I shall rejoice in the opportunity to use my money to help some worthy cause. I shall be happy in sharing with others.

"Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise."

With this prayer in my heart, I shall not be tempted to waste any time by frittering it away in idleness or harmful amusements. I shall not be guilty of "killing time" by attending bridge parties or reading trashy novels. As an earnest Christian, I shall ask my Master, day by day, to help me to "redeem the time."

"Take my will and make it Thine,
It shall be no longer mine."

If we can truly offer our wills to God, we shall find life's truest happiness in serving Him, as we do His bidding. We find deep joy in our hearts when we give up our own wills and ask Him to reveal to us His will in things great or small.

"Take my heart, it is Thine own,
It shall be Thy royal throne."

If I give the dear Master my heart's devotion, if I truly love Him who first loved me, life's deepest joys will always be mine as I follow where He leads me.

"Take myself, and let me be Ever, only, all for Thee."

This closing couplet is not always found in collections of hymns, but I treasure it. When I come to these lines, I look at a little copy of Henry Stanley Todd's, "The Nazarene," which I possess and I say these words with my whole heart and mean them every one. There is not time to analyze these words each morning, but I love to say them as I know they will help me through the day. In these brief thoughts I have given the inmost meaning of this hymn as it has spoken to my heart.

WHAT IF THEY SAY

What if they say, "Is there any difference between the payment of taxes which go for war purposes and the voluntary financing of war operations?"

A true Christian pays "tribute to whom tribute is due" (Rom. 13:7). A tax is a "charge laid upon a person or property for public use" (Webster). Refusal to pay taxes brings the eventual and rightful confiscation of property. In this sense taxes are compulsory. In general, all other causes appeal to the willingness to contribute, and are supported to the extent that interest is aroused for them. Appeals for foreign and home missions, war sufferer's relief, civilian public service, as well as appeals for help in the propagation of the war remain voluntary.

The state is responsible for the use of funds collected by taxes. But so is the Christian for every other dollar asked of him. He is willing to render services for his country and contribute financially to causes not contrary to the spirit, life, and teachings of Christ. He will give so that methods of love may abound. He will give to those in need, distress, or suffering. He wishes to sacrifice positively. To him "Christian liberty" means "permission to do" what others neglect, regard as unimportant, or even scorn as "helpful to the enemy," such as the feeding of innocent women and children in conquered lands.

This may be the cue to our answer. If it is a tax, then the state is responsible. If it is an appeal, then an enlightened Christian conscience will dictate whether we may "lend" a helping hand in the name of Christ. —Walter H. Dyck

Thursday, January 15, 1942

Attorney General Francis Biddle today announced new regulations affecting the conduct of German, Italian and Japanese nationals throughout continental United States.

The new regulations, issued under authority of the Presidential proclamation of January 14, 1942, relating to alien enemies, require all German, Italian and Japanese aliens to apply at the nearest first or second class, or county seat, post office for a Certificate of Identification. The requirement applies to all enemy nationals 14 years of age or over who have not yet taken the oath of allegiance before a Federal judge, the final step in acquiring American citizenship.

The identification program, which will affect approximately 1,100,000 German, Italian and Japanese non-citizens, will be directed by Mr. Earl G. Harrison, former Director of Alien Registration and now a Special Assistant to the Attorney General advising on alien problems.

The regulations provide for two separate periods for the submitting of applications for identity certificates, as follows:

1. All German, Italian and Japanese nationals residing in the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, Montana, Utah and Idaho are required to file applications at the nearest first or second class, or county seat, post office between February 2 and February 7, 1942, inclusive.

2. All German, Italian and Japanese nationals residing elsewhere in continental United States are required to file applications at the nearest first or second class, or county seat, post office between February 9 and February 28, 1942, inclusive.

Failure to comply with the new regulations may be punished by severe penalties, including possible internment of the enemy alien for the duration of the war.

The regulations require enemy aliens, in applying for identification certificates, to provide a photograph of themselves (to be attached to the identity card), and to answer a number of questions concerning their current activities. Printed directions for the filing of applications will shortly be available at post offices.

The regulations provide that after a careful check has been made of each application, the applicant will be provided with a Certificate of Identification bearing his photograph, index fingerprint and signature. He will thereafter be required to carry the certificate with him at all times.

AUTO TIRES FOR MINISTERS

Word has just come to the Federal Council of Churches from Mr. Leon Henderson, administrator of the Office of Price Administration, that ministers of religion are to be included in the group eligible to purchase automobile tires under the rationing system. Mr. Henderson's announcement says:

> "Clergymen in many communities, particularly where the population is scattered, are compelled to depend upon their cars to reach the bedside of the sick or dying, or to conduct services that are essential to the spiritual welfare of the public.
> "As amended, the tire order will place the needs of clergymen on a par with those of doctors, nurses and other occupations and professions whose services are essential to public health and safety."

This modification of the regulations for rationing tires is gratifying recognition of the importance of the work of the Church in the life of the American people.

EDUCATIONAL WORK—

The third quarter of the year marks the opening of our schools after the summer holidays, although promotions are made around April 1st. Here in Janjgir, the Primary school with an enrollment of 105 children, the Middle school with 96, and a Normal Training class of four girls, all opened for work on June 20th, when the weather was still very hot. Freedom from epidemics or illness has marked the year thus far, and how thankful we have been to the Heavenly Father that this is true in spite of very difficult times. Little rain came; field work came to a complete standstill, and some of the children came to school hungry and underfed. At the worst time we handed out gram at recess once or twice a week. In the boarding hall we economized as much as possible by changing the diet of the girls somewhat. The price of wheat and rice had come closer together, and more wheat in the diet has preserved the health, it seems, better than before. The attendance has averaged about 90 % for the first three months of school. The teachers show great interest and eagerness in the school, but there are few really bright children. For the most part their school work is difficult for them and they study harder than American children. I have given much supervision to the teachers because a number of them are untrained and need help and guidance. A group of older girls are steadily meeting for prayer and going out in bands to witness as there is opportunity. The Christian Endeavor Society also is engaging in some fine Christian activities, and we can hope to get some leaders from among our local young people. —Miss H. E. Nickel, Principal,

"Praise God from Whom all blessings flow"

Classes with the nurses at the Leper Home have again begun. In the first year class there are seven leper nurses, and in the second year class there are five nurses. Ten of these are illiterate and find it very difficult. In spite of their physical and educational handicap they are willing to learn and serve their fellow sufferers. I thank the Lord for them.

Because of the cholera in the near-by villages this year all the lepers had to be inoculated. Many deaths were reported in the villages, but we thank the Lord that the Christians were protected; though a few were sick, all got well.

At the General hospital a new graduate nurse has been employed. Because of the drouth and a partial crop failure the patients all want free wards and free medicines. Some are in a miserable condition and at the point of starvation.

My vacation this year was spent in Landour during the rainy season.

Sincere greetings, Eva Pauls, Champa, India

JOYFUL SINGING

Every morning from the bungalow we hear the hearty singing of the school children as they have their devotional services. Indians, generally, sing lustily in a very high pitch and that with plenty of volume. But the children out-do their elders, especially in the matter of volume. They go at their singing as though it were a time of deliberate lung exercises. And, I dare say, they do derive just such a benefit from it too, although unconsciously. So you can imagine what we hear when four different classes of boys sing four different songs all at the same time. Of course, each one of these classes is in a separate room and they cannot hear each other. But we can hear all of them. It makes one think of Psalm 100, which begins by saying, "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord." We can observe that their singing is certainly joyful. And I must admit, to us who have not been here long enough to learn to appreciate genuine Indian music, it sounds like a noise too. But to them it is real music, and they sing it joyfully unto the Lord. —Harold Ratzlaff

SAFE HOME

Brother and Sister P. A. Wenger have just arrived safely on the California coast, from where they wired on the morning of January 21. Brother and Sister Isaac and Sister Augusta Schmidt had also planned to come home with a ship that was to leave about December 15. But since the war broke out before the ship's date of departure, it is very doubtful whether they will come now.

Our government is now working through the Swiss embassy in China to get in touch with our missionaries. P. H. Richert, Sec.

NOTE TO TREASURERS

. The publication board plans to publish all future financial reports in a quarterly supplement. Therefore, all treasurers of the General Conference should take note and send in their reports accordingly. The first quarterly report begins with January, 1942. In this way valuable space in The Mennonite can be used for other material. The editor would be interested in hearing from those who enjoy reading these reports. —Editor

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Russell L. Mast, Bedminster, Pa.

FEBRUARY 9—"Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord." Mark 12:29

In these words Jesus began his summary of the meaning of the law and the prophets. Although when we quote that summary, we usually omit these words and begin with the idea that we shall love God with all our mind, soul and strength and our neighbor as ourselves. To us the affirmation that God is one God is far too elementary to notice. Perhaps that assumption was current in the first century because two of the gospels do not include this important preface to the summary of the law. As in our thinking, so in our living we have a tendency to ignore this basic conviction of a belief in one God. We try vainly to love God with our whole personalities and our neighbors as ourselves and we fail because we are trying to serve many gods. The gods we serve in this day are many and diverse. Where do you give your supreme loyalty? There is the god you serve.

FEBRUARY 10—"....Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory." Isa. 6:3

Two words can be used to describe the holiness of God: 'separateness' and 'uniqueness.' Between God and man there is a great gulf separating them. It is not a gulf of geographical space. It does not mean that we cannot have personal fellowship with the Eternal. That gulf is one of moral quality. When man confronts God he confronts absolute goodness, absolute moral purity, and absolute perfection. When Isaiah experienced the holiness of God in the temple he, too, confronted these "absolutes." "Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." There is an experience which is universal. Whenever man comes in contact with perfection he feels his own unworthiness. Peter experienced that when he came into contact with Jesus; "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man." Our own feeling of unworthiness must come not by musing on our failures, but by looking into the face of God and beholding absolute perfection.

FEBRUARY 11—"Thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged." Isa. 6:7b

His experience in the temple did not leave Isaiah brooding over his sins. As he had fellowship with God his iniquity was taken away and his sin was purged. That is the second phase of the experience of the holiness of God. Perfection always has a cleansing effect upon us. The first symphony concert which I ever attended had such an influence upon me. I went there with my soul defiled by depression and weariness. But before many bars were played I was carried away from myself into another world. The precision and perfection of that world-famous orchestra, as well as the great music which they played, made a new man out of me. I left that hall with my soul cleansed from depression and weariness. Such is always the impact of the divine on the human, the perfect on the imperfect.

FEBRUARY 12—"Lord, teach us to pray." Luke 11:1b

Do we resent the implication of this text, that we need to be taught how to pray? The disciples understood their need correctly when they asked Jesus to teach them how to pray. As far as the record goes this is the only thing they ever asked him to teach them. Perhaps they understood that the secret of all that he did was through his prayers by which he maintained fellowship with his Father. Prayer is too often a sanctimonious act by which we try to buy our future reward. Such praying is meaningless. But praying as Jesus prayed opens channels of spiritual power which can transform our lives. Let us consider our praying and see if it measures to the fulness of Jesus' fellowship with God.

FEBRUARY 13—"Two men went up in the temple to pray." Luke 18:10a

The impulse to pray is so deeply ingrained in human nature that it can safely be said that prayer is as important to the human soul as eating is to the human body. Man will no more outgrow prayer than he will outgrow eating. But it is sad to relate that we are usually far more successful in gaining physical power through eating than we are in gaining spiritual power through praying. The same pettiness we exhibit in our living we exhibit also in our praying. The life of that proud Pharisee was reflected in the quality of his praying when he said, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are." It is a truism that great praying makes for great living. But it is also true that great living makes for great praying.

FEBRUARY 14—".....tarry ye...until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke 24:49b

Part of our difficulty in receiving power through prayer comes from the fact that we are not convinced that we need a power greater than ourselves. We live the way it is easiest for us to live. No great goals of living challenge our lives; no high ideals of a better society stir our consciences. We are satisfied. Such living requires no power greater than ourselves. But when we set before ourselves the goal of Christian living and the ideal of the Kingdom of God then we run into the stubborn fact that we cannot fulfill our expectations on the strength of our own power. We need a power greater than ourselves. Realizing that need, let us pray expectantly, waiting for that power which is on high.

FEBRUARY 15—"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret." Matt. 6:6a

For vital praying we need to shut out of our minds all that is trivial and unimportant and focus our supreme attention on God. It is so easy to clutter our minds with the trivialities of the moment and crowd out the Eternal. Apropos to this thought is the psychological principle, 'Whatever gets your attention, gets you.' If we pray and do not win the battle over the lesser things we will block the channel to God's power. Jesus must have known all this when he suggested that we enter a private chamber where nothing lesser could command our attention. Let us give this aspect of prayer our serious consideration, so that in our fellowship with God we may have an open channel to Him.

FEBRUARY 16—"My soul, wait thou in silence before God only. . . . ." Psalm 62:5

In thinking of a clear channel to God let us consider also that all thoughts of self block the passageway to his power. Ask yourself candidly, "When I pray, do I think more about myself than I do about God?" Let us not fool ourselves about this. Most of the sins we commit in trying to live the Christian life come as a result of giving ourselves too much attention and God too little. What we are really doing in self-centered praying is asking God that He might bend His Eternal Will to do what we want done. Rather let our prayers be that God might so reveal His will to us that He might do in us what He wants done.

A BUSY SABBATH IN CAPERNAUM

Mark 2:21-34 Read Luke 4:31-41

TOPIC: Christ's Use of the Sabbath

Introduction

The Synoptic Gospels give a detailed account of Jesus' first Sabbath in Capernaum. This was doubtless a sample of His activities on many Sabbath days. It well indicates the manner in which He spent many days of His active ministry. It shows that "He went about doing good." The Sabbath, consecrated by God as a day of rest from daily toil, was not a day of idleness according to Christ's teaching and practice. He did not sleep until very late and then read the Sunday paper until noon. He went to the morning worship service in His church. He declared that the Sabbath was ordained to promote man's highest welfare. This is the central point in our lesson today.

Jesus' Authority as Teacher vss. 21, 22

Jesus, and the four disciples of last week's lesson, attended the Sabbath worship service in the synagogue. Jesus, as a distinguished religious leader, was invited to teach by the chief ruler of the synagogue. This courtesy was usually given to prominent visitors. His address made a deep impression (vs. 22). His whole manner of speaking arrested their attention, for He spoke with a definite note of "authority." The teaching of the scribes was dry and legalistic and largely quotations from prominent rabbis. They enforced the letter of the Law; Jesus brought out the spirit. His teaching was vital and spiritual. His authority was real. He IS authority.

Jesus' Authority over Unclean Spirits vss. 23-28

An amazing thing took place in the synagogue service. A demon-possessed man had come to the service. He was deeply aroused and stirred as he heard Jesus speak. He felt very uncomfortable in His presence. In his much perturbed and depraved nature, he felt the pure presence of Jesus. He raved against it (vs. 24). He recognized Jesus and demanded to be left alone, for he had nothing in common with Jesus. He felt the power of Jesus to destroy him. The devil is well aware of Christ's power and authority. Jesus did not want the unclean spirits to bear witness to His deity. At Jesus' word of command the man held his peace and the evil spirit came out of him. Jesus' word of authority amazed those present. The evil spirit was vanquished by Christ. The man was fully healed. Satan's power is as nothing compared with Christ's power. Jesus set the people to thinking along new lines. They recognized a new power, a new teaching, a new revelation.

Jesus' Power over Diseases vss. 29-34

Jesus and the four spent the Sabbath afternoon in the house of Peter and Andrew who gladly welcomed Jesus and His friends into it. We may well spend the Sunday afternoon in friendly fellowship with others in the home. Peter's wife's mother lay sick with a fever, probably the so common malarial fever. Jesus took her by the hand, lifted her up and she was healed (vs. cf. Luke 4:39). Her restoration was immediate and complete. She ministered to those in the house. Jesus did not use any definite formula of words or ceremony, or acts in His healings. He demonstrated His super-natural spiritual power over disease. Jesus was always sympathetic to suffering and pain.

That same evening after sunset, the end of the Jewish Sabbath, many came to Peter's house bringing the sick, helpless, and demon-possessed to Jesus that He might help them (vs. 32). The healing of the demoniac in the synagogue that morning had become widely known. Jesus showed that He was able to help all who came to Him (cf. Luke 4:40). The people CAME to Jesus. He heals us only by our consent. He will come in ONLY on our invitation. Truly this Sabbath day was a memorable one in the history of Capernaum and in the ministry of Christ. It was devoted to worship, prayer, fellowship, and to service. God gave the Sabbath (Sunday, Lord's Day) to us. It is a day for Christian effort. It should be a sacred day in the family circle. It should be a day of personal meditation about the unseen and eternal things. It is THE day appointed for public worship. In the CHRISTIAN HOME the question, "Shall we go to Church today?" is never asked. It is the CUSTOM TO GO. It is NOT A DEBATABLE question.

How can we improve our Sabbath observance by better topics to talk about?

How do you account for the man's knowledge of Christ?

If We Knew Each Other Better

Alfred S. Rotz

If we knew each other better
We could always find some good
In our neighbor, friend and brother,
And be better understood.
Could we sympathize more fully
As our Lord would have us do,
We could work for God more truly
And we'd love each other too.

When we bear with one another
In our daily toil of life,
Ties of love grow deeper, stronger,
And relinquish sin and strife,
Fervent love will always conquer
And will shine as bright as day.
When we live for one another,
And God's Spirit has full sway.

If perchance, some folks misquote us
And our motives misconstrue,
How much better to sing God's praises
Than be angry . . . miffed and blue.
If some folks don't understand us
Let us love them all the more,
Bear with patience all our crosses
And for grace divine implore.

Let us learn to know each other
Not in harsh and cruel modes,
But by love let's serve each other
With kind, smooth and loving words
Then with Christ, our Elder Brother,
We shall all united be,
And at last shall know each other
In that grand eternity.

The Responsibility of the Mennonite Church Toward Her Civilian Public Service Camps

By David C. Wedel

Several months ago, Brigadier General Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, made the statement that it may be worth a year of a man's time and callouses in his hands to know where he stands. General Hershey is right. Too many of us live from day to day with many hazy ideas but without firm convictions. In our present world we do not only need knowledge, that is, ideas. We also need beliefs and convictions. The world is rich in ideas but bankrupt in convictions.

Three Hebrew lads who were confronted by the threats of Nebuchadnezzar in the days of old, had firm convictions. They had convictions that could not be shaken. When the king's decree went forth that everyone should bow down to the golden image that had been set up for that purpose, they refused. They were summoned into the royal presence of the king and charged with insubordination. These three lads looked straight into the king's eye and said, "Our God is able to deliver us, but if not, be it known unto thee, O King, we will not worship the golden image which thou hast set up." Convictions as deep and as strong, convictions deeply rooted in God are needed in our day. We need a strong faith in God and His righteousness.

It is my conviction that the Civilian Public Service camps grew out of such a faith, a faith that was strong. They grew out of a faith that was not concerned with what men would say, but with what God would say. Into these camps have come men who had convictions. They believe that love and good will and kindness and even suffering are a way of life that is effective and in harmony with the moral principles of the universe and the teachings of the Christ. They have chosen to make these convictions known not only to the church groups from which they come but to the whole world. These men are in the lime light. The men in our camps are being watched closely. Are we who have had a part in the creation of these camps also watching? Are we as churches carrying out our responsibility toward our camps as we should?

After an enterprise has been started there is always the tendency to sit back and watch it. Those churches and groups which did not have a direct hand in the establishment of these camps, perhaps, even feel that they have little responsibility toward the camps. What is the responsibility of the Mennonite Church toward her Civilian Public Service camps? Does the church have any responsibility toward these camps?

Let us begin to answer that question by recognizing that the Mennonite churches everywhere have been teaching and holding to a doctrine that has given these boys the convictions they now make known to the world. We have taught them in the home, in the church and Sunday School, that there are certain fundamental principles by which we live. One of these is the principle of love and kindness, and good will toward our fellowmen. As we sowed this seed in the hearts of these young people who are now grown, it took root and finally blossomed forth in a definite conviction. We rejoiced that our teaching had not been in vain. We were glad that what we had sown was now coming forth as a strong plant. Our teaching was bearing fruit. We saw in this the perpetuation of our own particular denomination, which traditionally has taught this doctrine. We saw in it a way of life coming to reality which we believe Christ taught his followers. We as churches have taught this principle of nonresistance. We have rejoiced when it took root in our young people. We should, therefore, recognize that we, the churches, the homes, the teachers, the ministers, the parents, have made these young men, now in the Civilian Public Service camps and those classified to go there, conscientious objectors.

It would seem as though we ourselves did not believe this principle if now we would say that we have no responsibility toward our young people. We would, in fact, be saying that we were willing to teach something, but we would not go so far as to carry out the implications of that teaching. We would be saying that we were content to have a classroom doctrine that we were not willing to see taken into actual life situations. We have taught these young people the principles we hold. Now it becomes our obligation to live with them the implications of this doctrine. We would actually repudiate what we were teaching if we should now waive our responsibility toward our Civilian Public Service camps. No doctrine will long command the respect of those who are being taught if it does not hold within itself a truth that can be translated into life. We believe that the use of nonresistance in actual life situations is not only possible, but that it is practicable. In the limited areas where it has been tried it has worked without fail. This is not someone's foolish idea. It is the great life principle taught and lived by the great Master himself.

Do we really believe the teachings of Jesus when we do not carry them out into life situations? Are these teachings really effective in our own lives if we give them lip service now? Do we not repudiate the teachings of Christ if we fail to translate into life what he has taught? The Mennonite Church is now being challenged in a wonderful way by her Civilian Public Service camps. It is as though the camps were saying: "You have said much about the peace principle and about the teachings of Christ on nonresistance. Here is a great opportunity also to prove that you mean what you have said. Here is a definite field of action. Now you can demonstrate as never before that this principle is of great worth. You have taught for a long time. Now there is a great opportunity not only to teach but also to act. And by that action to teach perhaps as never before."

I believe there is no doubt in the mind of any of us but that we as churches are responsible for perpetuating a doctrine from which have come these camps, which the government has generously given us. It is perfectly clear then, that we have received a definite responsibility from the teaching of this doctrine. We have taught our youth that good will, love, and humanitarianism, yes, even suffering, is the Christ way of life. We have created the conscientious objector. Now we must give him our loyal support. To stop now would be to break faith with our own selves. It would mean that we were breaking with the past tradition that has been so nobly given us at such tremendous sacrifices. We dare do no less than assume the responsibilities thrown upon us by the teaching of the doctrine of nonresistance. One of these responsibilities lies in the direction of our Civilian Public Service camps.

If we have a definite responsibility toward our Civilian Public Service camps, what is it? Naturally, we think at once of financial support. That is a definite responsibility. Every great venture of faith must have its financial program; so it is with the camps. I believe it was providential that we were brought to the place where we undertook to finance this program ourselves. The fact that we were willing to pay for our camps has helped wonderfully in getting them established. It has made a deep impression upon every community where camps have been set up, that here were people who were willing to pay cold cash for what they believed. It has helped to establish the sincerity, not only of the boys who came there as campers, but of the church. People have been amazed that a church or group of churches was willing to undertake a program of such magnitude in addition to all the other fields in which churches are active.

We have launched out on this program. We have made a good beginning. It would, indeed, be a tragedy if now we would fail in our financial responsibility. As yet the financial burden is not so great that we cannot carry it. We can. If we stop now the world might well ask whether we had been sincere in the first place. To fail in our financial responsibility would mean that we would lose at least to some extent the testimony we have given so far. Would we not thereby say that this program costs too much? Once we say that, we also say that it was not worth too much right from the beginning.

I am struck by the fact that this particular tenet of our faith has cost our people money also in other days. Our forefathers sacrificed their prosperous farms and homes for the sake of religious freedom. Their migrations from one country to another were always costly in terms of money as well as in many other ways. They did not count the cost as being too great.

When a program similar to our own was set up in Russia, the Mennonites raised large sums of money for this work. Even in this country they have repeatedly contributed money so that in various ways their right to claim exemption from military service might be honored.

By strong financial support of the camps we will say that we honor what our forefathers have done. We will say that we believe that this program is worthwhile. We will say that we believe this way of life, a way of peace and good will toward our fellow man.

The church also has the responsibility of lending these camps moral support. That is such a general statement that I shall try to clarify what I mean. At present, the Selective Service Act of 1940 does not require many of us to leave our daily task. It has not called many of us away from our daily pursuit. We are permitted to continue our farming and other economic enterprises which we have undertaken. It has called to service only men of certain age limits and physical qualifications. These boys the world sees as conscientious objectors. We, even though we are members of one of the historic peace churches, can act and sometimes even conduct ourselves as though we were not conscientious objectors. We are not confined to service in camp. We feel that we have the privilege of doing as we please.

This is hardly right. We are conscientious objectors as much as the boys who are in camp. The only difference is that we are at home and they are in camp. We should come to regard these boys in camp as our representatives. They are not in camp as individuals alone. They are there as a part of the church. They are there as a part of the body to which we belong. As church members we should keep in contact with them. We should regard them as being a part of the church as much as though they were in our midst. Let us encourage them. Let us send them information about the church. Let us pray for them. These young men would welcome such wholehearted support. Sometimes they feel alone and lonely. How a word from someone in the church would encourage them! Some of these men stand alone. Their church or denomination does not support them. We have a definite responsibility to such men in our camps also. Some of their friends have left them because of their particular position. They need the friendliness and kindness of those who are in the churches. I know of no finer service than to encourage such an assignee. Let us be generous with our kindness and friendliness.

There are those times in camp life when a boy comes to feel that perhaps this whole program, and his stay in camp in particular, is, perhaps, of little consequence. He loses the significance of the whole enterprise by being so closely tied in with it that he cannot see it in its far-reaching significance. How helpful it would be to that boy to have someone come and interpret the whole program anew, to point out its values, to explain the implications of the position he has taken.

That man does not live by bread alone is particularly true in the camps. There must be words that proceed out of the mouth of God. We must have a concern about the spiritual welfare of these men. Our administration has taken particular care to have leaders in every camp, who are spiritually minded. There is, however, some work which the church can do. It can release its own minister to visit the camp. It can send a group of young people with a special message or worship program. We can all pray without ceasing. We should realize that this is not only a place where men go when they are called for service. We should realize that here is a place to build men for God. I have the faith that a good number of the leaders of the church of tomorrow will come from the Civilian Public Service camps. The church has here a great opportunity to call men to a close walk with God so that they may become tools in his hand.

The church also has the responsibility of interpreting these camps to the public. Never before have we had such a splendid opportunity to make known our belief in non-violence. Not only has the government given us recognition as conscientious objectors, but it has given us publicity by that recognition. People who had never before heard of conscientious objectors now know that there are those who will not participate in war. But too often they do not know why we object to war. They think we are afraid to fight. We merely want to save our own lives. The public needs to know why we object to war. Too many people do not know. Too many only know that we object to war. There are still many strange interpretations of a conscientious objector.

Two boys were playing in the street in a town near which one of our Civilian Public Service camps was located. They were playing a game of war. Said one of the boys, "You can't shoot me. I'm a C. O." We need to interpret the whole camp program to the public.

The church has the responsibility of assuming the financial burden of maintaining these camps. It has the responsibility of lending its moral support to this program. It must interpret what we are trying to do by these camps. But there is also the challenge which faces both the church and the camps of continuing in the development of a technique of non-violence. We need to work out the details of this way of life. This is the task of both church and camp. May the Prince of Peace guide us in this difficult task.

Hushed are the stars, whose power is never spent;
The hills are mute: yet how they speak of God!"

SONS OF GOD

by Orlando Wiebe

"That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." The Apostle Paul writes these words to the Philippians admonishing them to live in such a way that men shall know what they stand for and that they may be lights to the generation in which they live.

This verse brings to our mind three questions: (1) Does this verse apply to us in our time? (2) What has been done by men in the past to live without rebuke and be lights in the world? (3) What can the youth of today do about the future?

Does this verse apply to us? The Reader's Digest Magazine recently carried a series of articles entitled "The Repair Man Will Gyp You If You Don't Watch Out." In this survey made right here in our own nation, in big towns and small, in all sections of the country they found that over half of the repair men would actually be dishonest. Do we live in a crooked and perverse nation?

The past summer was spent by the writer working in Detroit for the Ford Motor Co. One morning while driving to work we came to the parking lot where thousands of cars were parked. The night shift had not come off of work yet. As we entered the parking lot, we noticed that there were a great many cars with men from the day shift waiting to get the places of the men who had worked all night and would soon be leaving. Rather than take our place in line, we thought we would get ahead of the crowd by going around the other end, and when a car left, pull in from the opposite side. This was done, and immediately, I was on the receiving end of a barrage of curses. Realizing that I had broken a rule I backed out and apologized. The man was literally dumbfounded. He had expected me to curse back, and when I did not he did not know what to do. This small act paid dividends the next morning when the same man went out of his way to show me a parking place.

One other time as three of us were leaving work, we noticed a rather well dressed gentleman who had a flat tire in front of the factory. He asked us if we would fix his tire, which we did. When we were through he offered us a rather large sum of money for the little work we had done. We refused it, and then he said something that characterizes the type of world we live in. With an oath on his lips, and looking at us as though we must be slightly lacking in gray matter he said, "Well what kind of a world is this?" It makes one stop and think. This is a world in which hate, greed, dishonesty, love of money, are the expected things. Love, goodwill, kindness, helpfulness are not expected, and when they are shown, people are literally amazed.

Truly the Apostle Paul might as well have spoken those words to us. We who are Mennonites then have a great heritage to give to the world. As we examine men in the past who have let their lights shine in the world we are reminded of the early martyrs in the history of the Mennonites. Felix Manz comes to us as a shining example. We remember how he was placed in a small boat and taken out on to the lake with a priest, how a stone was placed on his body, how he was given one last chance to recant, but true to his convictions Felix Manz found a watery grave and became a shining light for us to follow. Few people have let their lights shine so consistently over such a long period of time. Let us not take their heritage lightly, for it is a thing that has come to us through much suffering and pain.

Thirdly, then, what can the youth of today do about the future? Certainly the first and most important thing to do is to follow the teachings and examples that Christ gave us. We must make Christianity a "way of life." It's easy to say, but making Christianity a way of life is the most challenging and difficult task we may have. It may lead us into areas of conflict or strife to spend a summer in trying to bring the message of Christ to people through a Work Camp. It may lead to ridicule, to unpleasant experiences. But throughout it all, we must keep that peace and inner poise that comes through knowing that we are a part of a group who shall be the "light of the world."

Bethel College

Looking Ahead Fifty Years

I have just read Rev. Walter H. Dyck's short article "What If They Say" in the January 13 issue of The Mennonite. It strikes the same chord sounded by Kirby Page when he said, "Government is a gift of God; and when it is right it should be obeyed, and when it is wrong it should be disobeyed."

In his address "Looking Ahead Fifty Years" Dr. Page said things which I consider of special moment for all conscientious objectors. Here are some other pertinent statements he made.

Man's extremity is God's opportunity. In periods of tyranny and severe social convulsion people live more vitally than at other times. What can the individual do? How can he live with power and how can he understand the nature of God and His dealings with men? What is the primary business of a disciple of Christ? It is to live the way of suffering love now; to find the mind of Christ and live that way in terms of behavior. If we remember this, we will not turn to a God of vengeance and a God of war.

It is the belief of many people that resort to armed action is both necessary and right. Or, they argue that while war is wrong, failure to stop tyranny is also wrong; that tyranny can be stopped only by war; therefore, we must have war. Jesus showed us that the way of suffering love was the right way even though it did not end tyranny.

We may ask the question, "Is it legitimate to think of the minority in war time?" If we do not sanction totalitarianism, we make room for dissention, and in making room for dissention we admit a place for the minority. But we must also recognize the function of the minority. It is this: to live with confidence in the way of suffering love, not a life of protest, but a life of affirmation and illustration, and to speak with confidence where we do see clearly. Our business is not to do evil but to realize the way of love and practice it. It is the duty of the innocent to bear the burdens of the guilty.

When we face a situation that offers no solution, we should commit ourselves to the thing that offers eventual solution. If we do the right thing at the right time, we get the right result. We now have the wrong result; so what shall we do? We must do the right thing now to get the right result later: we must choose the Jesus way of life. If we reject the way of Christ, we get the way of war. —H. H. M.

READING OUR NEWSPAPERS

Eph. 4:25, 29-32; 5:15, 16

I. Worship Service

1. "Open My Eyes That I May See;" "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," No. 222; "I Love to Tell the Story," No. 494.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Talk on: "The Influence of the Press Today."
4. Offering for relief work.

II. Leader's Introduction

Newspapers and radio are largely responsible for public opinion today. A very large number of people read the daily paper, a considerable group the weeklies, and a smaller number the magazines like News Week, Time, Current History, Reader's Digest and others. The papers and magazines present the news with varying degrees of truthfulness—important events may be reported in a few lines, or on the inside pages, while the spectacular is given space and emphasis; the editor may give a misleading slant to events by leaving out some information; a suggestive word or phrase may give rise to a wrong interpretation. It is well to read more than one paper or magazine in order to get a more balanced judgment on what is reported.

Newspapers can be a powerful tool in the hands of those who desire to bend the minds of their readers for unworthy aims; they are equally potent for influencing people to approve and work for that which is fine and noble. As Christians and as citizens we want to be careful what and how we read.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks

1. Fulfilling God's Word.	Exodus 24:3-8.
2. Reading and resolution.	II Kings 23:1-3.
3. News from the Lord.	Hab. 2:2-4.
4. Ineffective reading.	John 5:37-40.
5. Explanation required.	Acts 8:26-35.
6. God's precepts our criterion.	Ps. 119:97-104.

IV. For Discussion

1. How much time is to be spent reading papers and magazines?

2. What does the press of today do to promote science, health, art, understanding of other peoples, good will relations to our near and distant neighbors?

3. What magazines espouse the cause of missions? of peace?

V. Facts for Study

Our dailies and our weeklies bring us information not only of the sensational and of the war and of politics; they also tell us of new discoveries in the field of science, new remedies being tried to combat disease, of new methods being applied in the field of education, of fine things in the line of music and art, of pioneers in the area of good will relations among nations. Let us lend our support to those efforts which are constructive. It is always easier to criticize unfavorably than to help build up constructively. It may not be amiss to write to the editor of a paper to tell him of an article which you have appreciated. To a large degree they offer what the public wants, and it is up to the readers to help form their policy.

In regard to our own church papers, which bring us the news of our conference churches, all those who want to cooperate intellingently with the endeavors of our churches will feel the need for reading them. They inform us about missions, home and foreign, about our peace and relief work, about our Civilian Service Camps; the correspondence columns tell of the life in individual churches; the Young People's pages speak of their work and ideals. Editorials are on timely topics; some articles are offered by our leaders as well as comments on the Sunday School lessons and helps for the Christian Endeavor programs.

The Endeavor will do its church a good turn if it tries to interest the families of the church not only to keep it, but also to read it. Each church should keep one set of copies on file in its library for reference purposes. Let the C. E. leader occasionally call attention to a good article; this will do much to promote interest in reading the papers.

A Newspaperman's Work

When Jacob Riis became a newspaper reporter in New York City, he had experienced the dreadfulness of life in the tenements. Because he was so familiar with the cruelty and suffering he wanted to make things better and so decided to enter the ministry. A friend with whom he discussed the matter said: "God needs Christian reporters as much as ministers." This remark so impressed Jacob Riis that he decided to dedicate himself as a reporter to the Lord's work. Through his zeal tenements were torn down and rebuilt in sanitary fashion. Year after year he kept up the fight until at his death he had accomplished more than anyone else to make living sanitary and comfortable for the poor of the city.

VII. Found in the "Readers Digest"

A little Scotch girl made a list of "My Twelve Loveliest Things, People Not Counted." They were:

The scrunch of dry leaves as you walk through them
The feel of clean clothes
Water runnng into bath
The cold of ice cream
Cool wind on a hot day
Climbing up and looking back
Honey in your mouth
Smell of a drugstore
Hot-water bottle in bed
Babies smiling
The feeling inside when you sing
Baby kittens

—Douglas Horton, The Art of Living Today

"Are we afraid to speak our religion? Some sing it and stir souls, some write poetry or music. Others live it day by day. That is being about our Father's business." —Dorothy J. Magee

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

THE LADDER OF LIFE

(Have the room dark except for the light which comes from candles. Place a home-made ladder in Christmas-tree candleholders. There should be two candles for each round. The steps for the "ladder of life" are printed on white cardboard so that they can be plainly seen from all parts of the room. As each Intermediate gives his talk he goes to the ladder in front of the room, places the cardboard on the ladder and lights the candles.)

Leader's Talk:

If one is to become a Christian, he must spend some thought on the question of how to become a Christian.

After one has become a Christian it also takes thought to continue in the right kind of life. Every Christian should help his church by attending its services. Young people, as Christians, should be interested in the whole program of the church. We should read our Bibles and try to live a Christian life every day.

The purpose of our meeting tonight is to teach what is necessary for becoming a Christian and for continuing in the Christian life. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." That way may be represented by a ladder which we climb in our progress to God.

In our meeting tonight we are going to show the steps on the "Ladder of Life" which lead us toward God.

Jesus Christ came to earth to establish a way from this world to heaven. By His life and His death and resurrection He established the way, and now He is the Way.

(The following Bible talks should each be three minutes in length. Sing one verse of each song.)

Leader—"And he dreamed; and, behold, a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven."

Round I—Faith (Heb. 11:6)
"Faith of Our Fathers"
Round II—Repentance (Acts 17:30)
"Just As I Am"
Round III—Confession (Matt. 10:32, 33)
"I Must Tell Jesus"
Round IV—Baptism (Acts 2:38)
"O Happy Day"
Round V—Union With Christ (Rom. 7:4)
"Jesus, Lover of My Soul"
Round VI—Wearing the name of Christ (Acts 11:26)
"Precious Name"
Round VII—Continue stedfastly (Acts 2:42)
"He Leadeth Me"
Round VIII—Christian Graces (II Pet. 1:5-7)
"Give of Your Best to the Master"

Leader—If we do these things we will safely climb the ladder all the way form this world to heaven. (Quote II Pet. 1:8-11)

(Voice from a hidden person:)

"Heav'n is not reached by a single bound,——
But we build a ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And reach its summit round by round."

THE WORKING MAN'S ANSWER TO ALCOHOL

Scripture Reading: Isa. 28:1-4, 7, 8
(A "Labor Meeting")

This Sunday we are taking the second topic of our series in alcohol instruction. We are acquainted with laboring men, those who do many jobs about us. For instance, there are the carpenter, plumber, airman, businessman, teacher and minister. Since God does not want His special workmen to partake of any strong drink, surely we do not want to trust the drunkard to do our work.

The Question Bee

Q. 1. Why do so many businessmen refuse to employ men who drink?

Ans. Because the smallest amount of alcohol affects the powers of the eye, brain, and hand.

Do You Know Me?

I am the greatest criminal in history;
I have killed more men than all wars;
I have turned men into brutes;
I have made millions of homes unhappy;
I have made children hungry;
I have ruined millions, and shall try to ruin more;
I ensnare the innocent;
I destroy the weak and weaken the strong;
I am Alcohol.

Prayer Items for our Prayer List

(a) Thank God for fathers and mothers who are temperate and never touched liquor; (b) ask for strength in times of temptation; (c) courage to tell our friends we will never touch strong drinks; (d) boys and girls who "dare to stand like Daniel."

IN MEMORIAM

ANNA ELIZABETH BAUMAN, daughter of Samuel W. and Clara Rosenberger Bauman, was born in Milford Township, February 15, 1915. Early in life she manifested an active interest in the Lord's work. She was baptized upon confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, October 3, 1930, and was admitted into the West Swamp Church. From that time on she was a faithful worker in the church.

She taught in the summer Bible school two terms. For more than a year she served as president of the Young Women's Missionary Society, which office she held to her end. For the past four years she served as correspondent to The Mennonite. Last year she served as one of the officers of the Eastern District C. E. Convention. Wherever and whenever she was called upon, the work was well done.

Sickness and hospital experiences were well known to her, but she "endured, as seeing him who is invisible."

She was relieved from her suffering when she departed from this life to be with the Lord, on December 23, thus bringing her age to twenty-six years, ten months, and eight days.

She leaves to mourn her early departure, her parents and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Emma Boyer, Henry, Wilmer, and Alverda, Quakertown; Harvey, medical missionary, Champa , C. P., India; Laurel, Hoytville, Ohio; Horace, Hickman Mills, Missouri; Amos and Bertha, Philadelphia.

Text used by her Pastor, Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, Matt. 5:8.

BENJAMIN A. KOEHN, the son of Ernest and Lena Koehn, was born in Poland Russia, February 26, 1865. He passed to his reward December 20, 1941, at the age of seventy-six years, nine months, and twenty days. At the age of eight years he came to America with his parents and settled near Moundridge, Kansas. At the age of seventeen years he realized that he needed a saviour, was converted, saved by faith in Christ Jesus, baptized by Elder Johann Ratzlaff, and joined what is now the Emanuel Church.

On October 30, 1886, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Ratzlaff. This union was blessed with three sons and five daughters. Two daughters have passed on before.

He made his home around Moundridge, Kansas, working as a laborer and having to face many hardships. When the Cherokee Strip opened in Oklahoma, he was in the run without success. In 1907 he and his family moved to Taloga, Oklahoma. After living in different places he finally bought a place which he made his home for the remainder of his life. Here he joined the Kidron Mennonite Church. He was always helpful in the church.

Several years ago he noticed a sore below his left ear. After seeing different physicians it was finally pronounced cancer. No relief could be had. When he saw that he was not to live long, he spent much time in prayer and was ready to submit to the Lord. He was bedfast for six weeks. To his family and friends he was always kind; he extended a helping hand wherever possible.

He leaves to mourn his loving wife and six children, Mrs. Nettie Hostettler, Oakland, California; Adam and Lincoln of Meno, Oklahoma; Anna at home; Jonas and Marie (Mrs. Frances Koehn) Taloga, Oklahoma; eleven grandchildren; three great grandchildren; one aged sister, Mrs. John Decker, Moundridge, Kansas, and many other friends and relatives.

Dearest father, since you've left us
Now we miss your face so dear;
Often while our hearts are bleeding
We should call thee to our side.
But, we know that God has called you
And with Him you now abide.
When the day is just beginning,
That is when we miss your face.
It was then we gathered 'round you
And learned of God's redeeming grace.
We are glad we had you, father.
But when God calls we cannot stay
Here, on earth with those who love us
E're our spirits have flown away.
So dear father, as we journey
May our lives some soul inspire,
May we all be true to Jesus
'Till we hear God say, "Come Higher."

—The mother and children

THOMAS J. KENNEL was born in Tazwell County, Illinois, March 9, 1869. He died on December 29, 1941, attaining the age of seventy-two years, nine months, and twenty days. On December 29, 1892, he was married to Lavina Mosiman. The six children born are all living. In addition to his immediate family he is survived by twenty-eight grandchildren, one brother and three sisters. At the funeral services in Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio, Rev. J. E. Amstutz based his remarks on I Cor. 13:13, a favorite verse of Mr. Kennels.

AGATHA CLAASSEN passed away at her home in Newton, Kansas, on December 29, 1941. She reached the age of fifty-eight years, seven months, and five days.

Agatha was the daughter of Aaron and Anna Kliewer Claassen. She was born in Harvey County. Except for six years spent in Oklahoma she always lived in this county.

At the age of eighteen she was baptized by Rev. Jacob Toevs at the Gnadenberg Church of Whitewater. Later she became a member of the First Mennonite Church of Newton.

She is survived by her aged mother, Mrs. Anna Claassen, and the following brothers and sisters, C. M. Claassen of Westwood, California; F. E. Claassen of Oakland, California; Carl A. Claassen of Kansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Ruby Keller of Arkansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Gussie Edens, Pocatello, Idaho, and Edna at home. Funeral services were held at the home and at the Newton First Mennonite Church.

MRS. AUGUST HAHN née Carrie Baumgartner, was born November 1, 1872, and passed away January 10, 1942. She leaves to mourn her, her husband, two daughters and two sons with their families. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. David C. Wedel, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas.

DAVID P. DILLER died suddenly of a heart attack on January 5, at his farm four miles west of Bluffton, Ohio. He was seventy-eight years old. On January 10, 1889, he was married to Elizabeth Althaus. Into this union three sons and three daughters were born.

JOHN DILLER, brother of David Diller, died at his farm home four miles west of Bluffton on January 10, at the age of seventy-five. He was stricken on Monday evening, the same day on which his brother died, and suffered until his death. His wife, the former Elizabeth Luginbill, preceded him in death six years ago. Surviving are two sons and six grandchildren.

These brothers with their sister, Mrs. John Bixler, who died only a month previous, were born and reared on the old Diller homestead. When they married they started housekeeping only a short distance from their home and remained there until their death. They were life-time members of the Ebenezer Mennonite Church and were faithful attendants until their death. Rev. A. C. Schultz, their pastor, officiated at the rites. One brother, Albert, and four sisters survive. The sisters are: Mrs. Peter Nusbaum, Mrs. Peter Herr, Mary Diller, all of Bluffton, and Miss Fannie Diller of Chicago.

MRS. ADELLE DEPPE, daughter of Abraham S. and Carrie Hirstein, was born near Summerfield, Illinois, on December 8, 1916. She came to her untimely death near her home in Fairview on November 7, 1941, at the age of twenty-four years, ten months, and twenty-nine days.

On March 29, 1931, she was baptized by Rev. Adlolf Friesen and received as a member of the First Mennonite Church at Summerfield. On December 13, 1936, she was united in marriage with Lloyd L. Deppe. This union was blessed with one son. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, one son, her parents, five sisters, and two brothers.

JOHN E. EICHER, son of John and Mary Eicher, was born in Summerfield, Illinois, on September 28, 1859. On the Day of Pentecost, 1875, he was baptized by Rev. Christian Krehbiel and received into the fellowship of the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield.

He was united in marriage with Emma Mallman in 1886. Three daughters were born to this union. After living on a farm near Trenton, Illinois, they moved to Granite City, Illinois, about twenty-five years ago. Brother Eicher attained the age of eighty-two years.

He leaves to mourn his departure three daughters and three brothers. His wife preceded him in death in 1923. Rev. Elmer Basinger had charge of the funeral services.

CORRESPONDENCE

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Dallas, Oregon

"If God be before us who can be against us." As we look at the picture before us, it looks very dark. If we depend upon God to lead and fight our battles we can say again as of the past year that our blessings have bountiful, of good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over.

Our Sunday school has had an average attendance of 165, a gain of 33 over 1940. The average church attendance was 238, a gain of 51 over 1940. Thirty-four members were added to the church by letter and baptism. Our membership is 182.

On December 29th we enjoyed the installation of the new officers of the Young People's C. E. The candle light service was impressive. Dorothy Leisy closed the service by singing "Seal Us, O Holy Spirit." In the evening worship services Rev. Leisy spoke on "The Blessed Possession," Deut. 11:11.

On October 15 we observed our second church anniversary. The home mission board note was burned. The church is now debt free. After the services we fellowshiped around God's table in the basement.

Two beautiful weddings were solemnized in our church this fall. Married were: Marie Janzen to Peter Gossen and Lanora Adaline Dyck to Abram F. Schierling.

In November the Mennonite Oregon Bible Conference was held in our church. The theme was "Evangelism." (See The Mennonite of November 3rd for program.) The Ladies Aid Mission Sale held during this month netted $719.65.

Eight Dallas churches joined in a union Thanksgiving service, which was held in the high school auditorium. A mass choir and orchestra furnished the music.

The Ladies' Aid and the King's Daughters class are busy sewing for the Red Cross. Two offerings have been held for this worthy cause. Dorothy Leisy is the director of the newly organized ladies chorus. Twenty-four have enrolled. —Helen Thiessen, Corr.

APOSTOLIC MENNONITE CHURCH

Trenton, Ohio

During December our church had the pleasure of having at our annual thank-offering Sunday Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker and family of Bluffton, Ohio. Both gave us very interesting messages telling of their work and conditions in China.

We were happy to have Mrs. Rodolphe Petter from Lame Deer, Montana, give the message on December 28th. Mrs. Petter suprised her sisters by coming in on Christmas Eve. This was the first time in forty-six years that she had the privilege of being home for Christmas. It gave us all a great deal of pleasure to have her in our midst.

We also regret to report that Miss Elesa Holly of Hamilton, Ohio, who was ninety-two years old last September and who is one of our very active members met with an accident on January 5th. She fell on a slippery sidewalk while on her way to attend a Woman's Meeting at the Y.W.C.A. She is laid up at Mercy Hospital in Hamilton. We hope that her injury is not so serious and that she may soon recover and be in our midst, as we all miss her very much.

We again had the business session of our annual congregational meeting following a covered dish and social hour. Rev. Amstutz spoke on "The Church of The Living God". He said that the Church is the servant of God, the living body of Christ. During these trying days we are to keep on doing the most important things as a Church, only do them better. We have our faith strengthened and render practical service to those in need at home and abroad. We must lay aside all selfish thoughts and bitterness. What kind of a testimony do we as a church have for a war torn world? May we be more loyal to the Church and have undying faith in God.

—Lydia A. Augspurger, Corr.

JESSE TOAVS ORDAINED

The Lord was honored on the last Sunday of the old year when Jesse Toavs, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Toavs of Wolf Point, Montana, was ordained into the ministry.

After the congregation, led by Dan Toavs, had sung several hymns, the pastor, the candidate, and the American Sunday School Union missionary from Glasgow, Montana, took their places on the platform. After reading Malachi 2:1, Arthur Fast pronounced the invocation. The A. F. Toavs family sang the song, "True-Hearted, Whole-Hearted." It is the desire of the family that their son and brother be true to the Lord.

Rev. Albert Ewert, who recently became pastor of the Bethel Wolf Point congregation, officiated in the ordination. As the basis for the charge he used the tenth verse of the sixth chapter of Ephesians which reads, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

Since Jesse Toavs has taken up work as a missionary for the American Sunday School Union and is stationed in the southwestern Minnesota field with headquarters at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, it was appropriate that the A. S. S. U. missionary for this area gave a message on this occasion. Rev. McLean's message was based on Luke 14:23 which says, "And the Lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." Since the aim of the American Sunday School Union is "Every child in America in Sunday School, and a Bible in every home," the message by this missionary, who has been on the field for fifteen years, was instructive and encouraging.

Rev. J. F. Thiessen, of the M. B. Lustre congregation, gave an instructive, five-minute message on John 3:30, "He must increase, but I must decrease." Clarence Bartel of the local church spoke for a few minutes on Isa. 40:3. The offering received will go to the field in which Mr. Toavs has taken up his work. Peter Wie read Joshua 5:13-15 at the close. Jesse Toavs left soon thereafter for his field in Minnesota.

Proposed New Church, Wichita, Kansas

LORRAINE AVENUE MENNONITE CHURCH

Wichita, Kansas

It is now about six months since we first made the acquaintance of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church in Wichita. That is sufficient time in which to reach some conclusions regarding the group with which we are now affiliated.

Above all, this is decidedly a youthful church. The percentage of young people is unusually large, with a goodly number of children and babies. This results in an active, energetic, forward-looking congregation. Many of these young folks come from our surrounding Mennonite communities, and hardly a Sunday passes but what some go home to see their parents, with the result that our attendance is rather fluctuating. This has its drawbacks, but how commendable that old home ties are strong! This church is truly a child of our older churches around Wichita.

Again, this is a growing church because Wichita is a rapidly growing city. The membership has increased from 17 to 160 in a few years, and prospects for future growth are unusually promising. Our present place of worship is over-crowded. It is a home, and is intended to be the parsonage when the new church becomes a reality. For the present a loud speaking system helps out when overflow attendance necessitates the use of the basement.

It may not be generally known that this church gives religious instruction each Wednesday to about 150 pupils from the nearby public school, in cooperation with the city-wide system of week-day Bible schools. None of these children are Mennonites. Four teachers are now employed, but the scope of this work could be enlarged if more room were available, since some of the grades in this particular school are denied the privilege of religious instruction at present.

We have been impressed with the earnest and sacrificial endeavor of the local membership to make the new church a reality. They know we must have it or lose much. They have pledged heavily financially. The women's organization alone has pledged one thousand dollars toward the new building, and are working hard to raise that amount by means of "penny-a-meal" banks, birthday calendars, collecting of old papers and magazines, special programs, serving of church dinners once a month. (These dinners are for the purpose of planning and reporting on the building project.)

Despite all these efforts we know we must have help. This church is still a mission church, even though it has been self-supporting for the past year; but to provide for the rapidly growing membership of the future must be a conference undertaking.

Our expansion committee has delegated the choir to give programs in the nearby churches to acquaint them with our urgent need here, and to enlist their help. We pray earnestly that this help may be speedily forth-coming. —Mrs. P. E. Frantz, Corr.

WHAT IF THEY SAY

What if they say, "Why doesn't every conscientious objector to war accept non-combatant service in the army?"

A socalled "non-combatant" believes that "thou shalt not kill." He is willing, however, to serve in any capacity other than the actual taking of arms. He renders other essential services, such as, clerical work, cooking, hospital work, ambulance driving, mine sweeping, etc. He tries to be a Good Samaritan "in the army." He feels that the presence or absence of military command does not affect his intention of being a Christian anywhere.

But there are those who cannot accept military service because to them there is no actual distinction between soldiers (non-combatant or full military), except in the name. "Non-combatant service" is as essential as the "combatant." The non-combatant forces him who has no scruples to the front. All soldiers promise to "bear true faith—serve honestly and faithfully against all enemies whomsoever." Then he must forget what he "learned at Sunday School." Was he not told to "love them—bless them—do good to them—pray for them?" He must remain where his testimony will be out-and-out for methods of love. To help behind the line is to subscribe to the purpose of the army, which is efficiency in killing.

He is not afraid to die, but only unwilling to kill. He will render constructive service to war sufferers, refugees, evacuated populations, and help in the reconstruction of war-stricken areas. He will render health and medical service in connection with any civilian projects. He will do reclamation and forestry services where these have been neglected.

He cannot be "bought" to destroy, but he will "pay his way" in work which will "overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12:21) —Walter H. Dyck

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Cascade Locks Camp

The Cascade Locks camp in Oregon is now the home of over one hundred boys. Brother Mark Schrock, director of the camp, gives a report of the first seven weeks of the camp.

The project work is supervised by the Forestry Service, and like the other camps, Cascade Locks has its religious and educational program. The camp is classified as Brethren-Mennonite. The twenty-two Mennonite boys come chiefly from Oregon and California. An occupational report indicates that the boys come from over thirty different occupations of which farming, teaching, and labor produce the majority. About half of the group have had college or graduate training.

Educational Program at Bluffton

The recent issue of the Bluffton Peace Sentinel, camp paper of the Bluffton, Indiana, camp tells of the new educational classes started there. The heart of the new educational program is the core course which meets Wednesday and Thursday evenings. To quote the paper: "This course is an attempt to understand the Christian non-resistant way of life and its application in the modern world. Ours being a Mennonite camp considerable attention is given to the Mennonite heritage. We are seeking to understand the part which non-resistance has played in the life of the church."

In addition to the core course there are classes in Bible, first aid, and bookkeeping. This camp is also favored with the services of the Wells County library trailer which stops each week at the camp and permits the boys to check out books for one month.

Progress At Hagerstown C.P.S. Camp No. 24

Repairs and the provision of housing facilities are progressing at the farm near Hagerstown, Maryland, which will house twenty-five boys and a housefather and housemother. This farm is the first of the three in Washington County, Maryland, which will comprise Civilian Public Service Camp No. 24. This farm unit will in all probability receive its first assignees in February while assignments to the other two units will not begin for some weeks to come. The work project of the camp will be supervised by Soil Conservation Service.

Brother Snyder Appointed to New Duty

Brother John Snyder of Portland, Oregon, has been appointed to assume general oversight of camp budgets and to serve as camp auditor. His duties will also require him to keep in close touch with costs, prices, and buying policies as they apply to the several C.P.S. operations. Brother Snyder will, if plans carry, visit each camp about once in every six months.

From August 9 to November 21 Brother Snyder served as business manager and assistant director at the Grottoes, Virginia, camp and following that helped in opening the Henry, Illinois, camp. Brother Snyder with his wife and child will reside at Akron, Pa. (Compiled by Grant M. Stoltzfus)

LATEST WORD FROM OCCUPIED CHINA THROUGH THE RED CROSS

Telegram:

"America missionary organizations urge parent societies cooperate Red Cross relief Americans occupied China. Reassure relatives treatment satisfactory."

Telegram from Philippines to American Baptist Board (dated January 27th, Cebu):

"All safe. Notify families."

We hope the same is true of our missionaries there. Our government has promised to get information also from them, as soon as possible.

Annual Meeting of the Foreign Mission Board

On February 18, at 9 A.M. our Board is planning to meet in annual session, in Newton. Unusually weighty matters are up for consideration and decisions, largely caused by the world war.

We know that the mission friends will remember the Board in their prayers, but we send out this reminder all the same for emphasis' sake.

The government machinery for contacting missionaries in occupied areas is now ready to function, and the Tokyo government has consented to cooperate on a basis of reciprocity and mutuality. How fast they can work, no one knows as yet. Let us include this also in our prayers.

The officials of the Foreign Missions Conference expect good results soon, and advise all mission boards to be ready with funds, as soon as the needs are known, and ways to send the money are open.

Good reports have come again from India. Some 240 baptisms took place during the past year 1941. Thank the Lord. —P. H. Richert, Sec.

CALENDAR

May 1. Mr. Herbert, a medical student from Miraj arrived and helped with the hospital work for about six weeks.

May 13. Mrs. Thiessen and Muriel arrive at Basna station.

May 15. Mr. Thiessen arrives here after taking Eleanor to school at Landour. Short welcome program the next day.

May 28—June 2. Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Wenger and Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jantzen come for a visit. They also go to several village churches while here.

June 10. Miss Schmidt undergoes a major operation in Landour. All reports good.

June 22. Joseph Asna, son of Pastor Rufus Asna, Janjgir, spoke in the morning service. He is a worker for the National Missionary Society.

June 28. First teachers' meeting of the year. Mr. Thiessen in charge.

July 10. Miss Schmidt returns from the hills. She travels the last five miles in a chair carried by four men during a pouring rain. We are all happy to see her looking so well.

July 9-11. Semi-annual meeting of the Samelan with delegates from all the village church groups present.

July 20. Junior Church meets for the first time in the new school building. Classes began meeting there through the week.

August 2-5. Miss Nickle comes to Basna to sit in the educational committee meeting and also to visit.

August 2. News comes that Eleanor Thiessen has broken her right arm just above the wrist. Has to wear a cast until September 16.

September 2. The Ratzlaffs return from language study in the hills. There are now five housed in the medical bungalow. The more the merrier.

September 3-18. The Duerksens teach at an outstation. Mrs. Duerksen goes on the one-wheeled, two-man-power "push cart."

September 21. Initiate Mr. Thiessen's new ox-mobile by hitching it to a pair of bullocks. Four missionaries go to Dhabakar for Sunday services.

September 22. After about nine months work was again started on the church building. Because of lack of funds and other pressing building needs, the work on the church had been stopped when the walls were about six feet high.

October 2-5. Blind Shimon Munshi comes for special evangelistic work.

October 10-16. Annual missionary conference at Champa.

November 26. School vacation of the missionary children starts. Fond parents and precious children are already counting the days.

At the time of this writing (October) all the Basna missionaries and also the children are well, for which we praise Him who has sent us forth into this work.

HOME MISSION BOARD TO MEET

The Lord willing, the annual meeting of the Home Mission Board is to be held in the Director's Room of the Herald Publishing Company building, Newton, Kansas, beginning at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday, February 24, and lasting until February 26, 1942.

The board solicits the prayerful interest and support of all who are deeply interested in this phase of the Lord's work, so that our Heavenly Father may guide us in all our deliberations for the advancement of His work. —A. J. Neuenschwander, Sec.

RELIEF

Brother M. C. Lehman Safe and Well

Through the kindness of Congressman Robert A. Grant of Indiana, information from the State Department of Washington has reached Dr. Robert Bender of Elkhart, Indiana, concerning Brother M. C. Lehman. Dr. Bender, son-in-law of Brother Lehman, was informed that the latter is at Bad Nauheim, Germany, with the American embassy staff and newspaper men and is on the official list awaiting evacuation. He will be evacuated with the embassy as far as Lisbon, Portugal, from where he will proceed to America as soon as passage arrangements can be made.

Clothing to Paraguay

A shipment of 127 bales of clothing (11,022 lbs.) was made to the Mennonites in the Fernheim and Friesland colonies in Paraguay. The shipment, valued at $6,850, left New York on January 12 and will go by way of Buenos Aires to Asuncion from whence it will be sent to the Mennonite colonies. The clothing was of a miscellaneous assortment intended for both children and adults.

Christmas in Paraguay

Brother Vernon Schmidt tells of his visit to Friesland Colony over the Christmas season and of his fellowship there. "December 24-29: Spent the time in Friesland. They had church every day in the morning, and visiting in the afternoon. I enjoyed this visit very much, although I am hindered a lot in not being able to talk and understand all their speech. Usually they talk in Platt-Deutsch, and I cannot understand a word of that, but I can keep up fairly well when they speak in the High German. I visited in the homes of Kornelius Kroecker, Isaac Martins, Fritz Klassen, and Paul Janzen, at nights and with many others during the day also. Went swimming on the second day after Christmas—imagine doing that at home!"

Christmas in France

A letter from Sister Helen A. Penner, written on the 8th of December tells of Christmas plans at the Canet Plage convalescent home for children and expresses the joy she finds in her work.

"So far, I am not sorry I came, only wish we could do more. We will have to be patient and be thankful that we are still permitted to do what we are at present. I enjoy the beautiful scenery and am getting used to the conditions here. We have stayed well and that helps ever so much. We are making a few preparations for a Christmas celebration here; a tree for the dining room-schoolroom, a gift for each child, and they are planning a program. We are hoping to have something special on the menu, too."

Workers in France Carry On

The outbreak of war has brought problems to our relief workers, in France, especially in the matter of securing supplies. Recent letters, however, from Brother Byler and Sisters Lois Gunden and Helen Penner tell of continued plans which they are working out in feeding school children and providing a convalescent home. A letter from Brother Joseph W. Byler, dated December 20, 1941, gives a survey of both the problems and opportunities which Mennonite relief workers in France are now facing.

He concludes with these words: "All of the workers are in good health, and I believe are enjoying their work. We have gone through some trying experiences, the past month. In each case we have definitely felt the guidance of the Divine. Will you continue to hold us up to the Throne so that our services will be acceptable to Him?

Yours for the needy in Europe,
Joseph N. Byler"

Gratitude from Children in France

In the convalescent home at Canet Plage situated in southern France by the Mediterranean Sea, there are sixty Spanish and French refugee children. They are sheltered, fed, and cared for by Sisters Lois Gunden and Helen Penner. The children, many of whom have suffered great hardships, are not unmindful of the kindness shown them and one has expressed his appreciation in the following words: "We thank the Mennonites very much, and we love those whom we know from the bottom of our very thankful hearts. We shall never forget what they are doing for us."

Christmas in England

Brother Peter Dyck's letter of December 27 tells of Christmas in England at "The Woodlands," which is a home for homeless British people, mostly aged and infirm. "With gratitude we look back on a comparatively quiet Christmas. At 'The Woodlands' the Yule-Tide atmosphere permeated every ward and room, even introducing a certain degree of joy." On Christmas morning a worship service was held, and on the evening of the 26th, Brother Dyck adds, the old folks forgot their mental and bodily pains as they were entertained with carol-singing. Brother Dyck also mentions visiting the Birmingham public shelters on Christmas night with a worker of the Friends Ambulance Unit.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Russell L. Mast, Bedminster, Pa.

FEBRUARY 17—". . . Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?" Matt. 25:44

Let no one try to escape the far-reaching implications of this text. It is not spiritual hunger that is meant. In this case it is physical. In the book of Exodus there is recorded an incident in which Moses tried to speak to his people. But the writer adds this penetrating comment, " . . . but they hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit and cruel bondage." That is always the result when men try to preach a gospel of talk to those who are in economic slavery. How can they believe in a God that is good when the "children of God" do not manifest such goodness in their lives? It is, nevertheless, true that the Christian gospel teaches us to triumph even in our sufferings, and that one can manifest the Christian spirit even when penniless. That, however, does not relieve us of our responsibility to those who in times of peace and in war are ill-clothed and ill-fed. The good Samaritan did not tell the wounded man how to triumph in his sufferings, but ministered unto his needs. Such a ministry helps someone to believe in a God that is good.

FEBRUARY 18—"I am the bread of life." John 6:48

Here now we consider the spiritual hunger of the human soul. Jesus in the quality of his life unveiled the mysteries about God. Bread is the symbol of that basic food without which no man can live. The bread of life is the symbol of that spiritual quality revealed in Jesus, without which no man can really live. By taking of the bread of life we permit a new spirit to dominate our thoughts and control our actions. "I am the vine, ye are the branches," said Jesus. As long as we are a part of the vine we can bear fruit. Thus can God's enabling grace do in us and for us what we cannot do for ourselves. That is a great gospel.

FEBRUARY 19—"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Rom. 12:21

After eleven chapters of exposition on the idea of salvation, Paul gives in our text the manner in which this new life in Christ will seek to express itself. Here he seems almost to paraphrase the words of Jesus himself. In the light of this text, how can a Christian partake in the prejudice, bitterness, and hatred which today poison the world? How can one who has experienced the inner working of divine love, share in the caustic remarks which men so glibly fling at the Japanese? Christianity is not something we can put on a shelf, and pick it up again when we want it. It is a way of dealing with evil, when evil is immanent. If the nations as a whole will not accept this principle, can we as individuals? Are we willing to be adventurous about it, take risks for it, as we confront evildoers in our immediate relationships?

FEBRUARY 20—"Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me . . ." Ps. 55:5 "The Lord is my light and my salvation whom shall I fear?" Ps. 27:1

Here in striking contrast are two attitudes to life. Shall we live by fear, or shall we live by faith? Sometimes the opposite of faith is not unbelief but fear. Faith and fear have tremendous powers over human life. Fear imprisons the soul; faith sets it free. Fear makes men weak; faith gives them power. Fear disheartens, faith gives courage. Fear puts futility at the center of life; faith gives purpose and hope. Self-examination frequently reveals to our dismay that we are prisoners of fear. Can we say, "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom (or what) shall I be afraid?"

FEBRUARY 21—"And he was angry and would not go in." Luke 15:28

We recognize these words as describing the elder brother in that immortal parable of Jesus, the Prodigal Son. In fact, the account of the elder brother might well be classed as a parable in itself. For how many of us point a finger at those who waste their substance in riotous living and dwell in the far country committing the sins of the flesh? Are not the sins we commit more like those of the older brother? Ours are not the sins of the flesh, perhaps, but sins of the spirit. We are jealous of other people's success; we are easily peeved; we hold life-time grudges and are slow to forgive. They that are without sin let them cast stones at those in the far country.

FEBRUARY 22—"For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not that I do." Rom. 7:19

How much more is this true of us than it was of Paul! At every turn we are confronted with that inevitable power which makes for unrighteousness. Sin blocks our vision of God, clouds our sense of values, and brings evil and suffering on the lives of others. What power is there that can release us from such perversions, but the power of God in Christ? Can we match this other experience of Paul, when he says, "Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us?"

FEBRUARY 23—"The remnant shall return . . ." Is. 10:21

The idea back of these words is one of the most profound insights in the Old Testament. The hope of the world lies not with the vast majority, but with a consecrated minority. The majority is not always right. The ideas which have shaped human history have been those of the small minority. The remnant of Jewish people was the redeeming remnant which produced the religious background from which came our own faith. We all like mass meetings and the enthusiasm that goes with a large crowd. They are important. But perhaps the real work of Christianity will be done not by the majority but by the consecrated minority; not by the 99 per cent but by the faithful 1 per cent. Does not this ancient teaching have peculiar relevance for our own day?

FEBRUARY 24—". . . and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers." Num. 13:33

The world today is full of "grasshopper Christians" who feel insignificant in their own sight as did the children of Israel when they saw the sons of Anak. There are always those who do not have the courage to make a definite stand for what they believe to be the right. With one eye they see their convictions and with the other the giants of Canaan, and the latter seem most real to them. Of this we can be reasonably sure—faint-heartedness and indecision will get us nowhere in this day. Compare our common attitude with that of Luther when he says, "Here I stand. God help me, I can do no other." We may be small people but we can stand for great convictions; we may be less than the least but we can represent the greatest causes. Let us pray that we can move forward with decisiveness.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

February 15, 1942
The Healing Ministry of Jesus
Mark 2:1-12 Read 1:35 to 3:12
TOPIC: Jesus and the Ministry of Healing

Introduction

After last Sunday's lesson Jesus made a journey through Galilee preaching and teaching and healing body and soul as He went. His fame increased so rapidly that He had to keep himself out in the open spaces. Still people came to Him in large numbers (Mark 1:45).

Our lesson text shows Christ's power to satisfy the spiritual needs of men. He met the needs of body and soul alike in his ministry. The spiritual was foremost in his mind. He went to the cross to make possible redemption from sin. He had a heart of pity and never refused physical healing. He was the Son of God and had all power. He who made man a living soul can also remedy the soul's maladies. He who gave man his physical body can also heal it when impaired by disease and infirmity.

Jesus Recognizes Faith vss. 1-5

Jesus returned from his Galilean preaching journey to Capernaum which appears to have been his temporary home during the Galilean ministry. He had gone throughout all Galilee (1:39). He probably was staying in Peter's house (vs. 1). The news of his arrival spread rapidly. Jesus' presence in a community, a house, a person's heart, can not be hid. Many came to the house. They remembered his former miracles and preaching and soon all space was occupied. He preached to them and they came to hear. He knew their hearts' needs and met these in his preaching.

Four men came, carrying a friend who was afflicted with palsy, one of the most hopeless diseases even today (vs. 3). He was totally unable to come by himself. He had four good friends who were determined to bring him to Jesus. Fortunate is the Christless sinner who has at least one good Christian friend. These men had ingenuity as well as determination (vs. 4). They did the unusual thing. There is more than one way to bring a person to Jesus. He SAW the faith of the five men. He saw in their actions their faith in Him. Can Jesus SEE our faith? Jesus' words (vs. 5) probably surprised the men. They expected physical healing. Jesus saw that the man needed spiritual healing, soul peace with God, most of all. He had come in a repentant spirit. Christ saw this and declared his sins forgiven.

Jesus' Power to Make Whole vss. 6-12

Critics were present who reasoned quietly that Jesus was blaspheming God (vss. 6,7). They did not believe Him to be the Divine Son of God. Jesus understood their thoughts and at once demonstrated his power to forgive sin and to heal. He said to them in effect, that He would prove to them his power to forgive sins by that which He was about to do to the body of this palsied man. He immediately commanded him to rise and walk home. The healing was full and complete, a proof convincing to every one present. This healing is typical of real spiritual healing through the power of Christ. The people united in giving glory to God. Faith in Christ was increasing.

Christ is interested in the whole man. His work is complete when sin is blotted out. The greatest manifestation of power is the unseen—the power of God's Spirit in delivering from sin. Christ is still concerned about our physical welfare. His ministry of healing has not come to an end. There is a spiritual side to physical healing. Medical and surgical science, physicians and nurses can do all that is possible, but they can only use God's truths which they have learned to use. Healing is of God. He created the body with power of recovery. When we pray for the sick, God does not usually work a miraculous cure. He uses human skill and the human mind up to the point where they can no longer function. Beyond that He works by Himself. God's healing is not limited to the so-called faith-healing.

Why did Jesus forgive the paralytic before He healed him?

Why do we fail to give larger recognition to the spiritual in healing?

How can we help Christ in his healing ministry?

Jesus Appoints and Teaches the Twelve

Luke 6:12-26

TOPIC: Training the Twelve

Introduction

In today's lesson the account of the Sermon on the Mount is directly connected with the calling of the Twelve. This sermon followed directly after the definite separation of the apostles. Jesus had been working throughout Galilee, and the crowds of people were increasing. The demands upon Him were so pressing that it was necessary to form a more definite organization for his work now, and for preparation for the future.

Jesus Chooses the Apostles vss. 12:19

Luke frequently mentions about Jesus spending time in prayer alone with God. He shows the humanity of Jesus. He presents Him as the perfect example of a good life. Jesus sought privacy in prayer. This time "He continued all night in prayer to God." The momentous task of choosing the Twelve was before Him, and He, the Son of God, felt the need of intense prayer as a preparation for making a wise choice. How hastily we make far-reaching choices at times. These men whom Jesus chose were God's ambassadors who changed the course of history, and we still do not comprehend the measureless influence of their work.

From the beginning of Christ's ministry a company of disciples had been gathering around Him. Jesus was sure of God's leading now. From the larger group of his followers He chose twelve to be his apostles (vs. 13). An apostle literally is "a messenger, one who is sent"—Greek, apo and stello, to send forth, away from. It also carries the meaning of ambassador. The Twelve were to be Jesus' special representatives. Most, if not all, of these twelve had been previously called by Christ. He believed that now the men who were to be his official representatives must be definitely selected and be prepared for their later work. From this time they were closest to Him and the center of his work. He trained them for the great work of preaching the Gospel and organizing the Church.

Some of the chosen apostles became conspicuous as leaders in the early Church. It is remarkable however that we know very little concerning most of them. All, excepting Judas Iscariot, were Galileans; four were fishermen; all were laymen, simple-hearted, honest men. They were not schooled men; yet by no means were they ignorant men. Jesus chose them because of the possibilities He saw in them. When God calls a person, even from a humble walk in life, no one can tell what he may become.

Jesus, the Twelve, and the company of disciples came to the great multitude (vs. 17). News about Him had traveled far and many came to be healed (vss. 18, 19). Jesus did not disappoint them. "He healed them all." "Virtue went out of Him." It cost Him something to heal.

Blessing and Woes vss. 20-26

Verses 20 to 40 give an abbreviated account of the Sermon on the Mount. The blessing and woes here recorded were a part of the apostles' training. Jesus was looking over a gathering of disciples who were mostly poor people. He had chosen poor men as apostles, but they were rich in spiritual blessings. They were ready for the kingdom of God. They, rather than the worldly rich, are faithful in their devotion to God. Luke shows special sympathy for the poor and the outcasts. Christians who now hunger because of poverty and who weep in sorrow will find God answering their hearts' yearning. There is abundant assurance of eternal good for the spiritually hungry and sorrowful Christian. Uncompromising loyalty to Christ may bring hatred and reproach, yet the one so suffering is blessed and happy because of the glorious reward. Jesus assures them of abundant compensation in the kingdom. The eternal reward in heaven means far more than this world can offer.

Jesus pronounces woe upon the rich who lived very selfish lives and even oppressed the innocent ones. They too, as a class, opposed Jesus. These had already received all the comfort they would ever get. There is much danger of using wealth in self-indulgence and neglecting the things of the Spirit. The Christian's conduct can not please and delight the ungodly. Jesus called and trained his apostles for a definite work. Men who are called of God and trained are needed to preach the Gospel today.

What is the difference in meaning between the words "disciple" and "apostle"?

Why was the selecting of the Twelve so very important?

How much time should we give to prayer as a preparation for making far-reaching decisions?

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Halstead, Kansas

The New Year fills one with a resolve to do whatever comes with renewed efforts.

Our pastor, Rev. David Wedel, was director of the Civilian Public Service Camp at Marietta, Ohio, for six months. He came home November 10th. We were all glad to have him come back and take charge of the work. Our church business meeting was postponed for a week in order that our pastor might get his work arranged. We had a fellowship supper and welcomed our pastor at the same time. To demonstrate our joy we had a shower for the pastor and his family. Some unusual gifts were brought; these were seemingly appreciated.

On December 21 the choir, directed by Rev. Wedel sang the cantata, "Noel" by Wessel. The children, high school group, and the choir gave the Christmas program. It was well rendered because the committees spent much time in getting it ready. Because we had an epidemic of scarlet fever and whooping cough, a few children were missing.

The severe cold after the blizzard cut down our Sunday school and church attendance. When it is warm our church is filled. We have had to arrange our benches differently. When we laid the new floor the side benches had to be taken down. These were then joined and made long benches like the ones that were in the center. We now have a center aisle and a narrow one on each side. It was rather amusing to see some members enter and fail to find their accustomed seat.

On November 16th Rev. Wedel spoke to the Eden Mennonite Church (Moundridge) about his camp experiences. A few Sundays later he spoke in our church and showed moving pictures of camp life at Marietta. —Mrs. Gustav Wiebe, Corr.

James 5:11. The Lord reveals Himself as very gentle and tender in His dealing with us. In spite of our many failures, spiritual weakness, and lack of zeal God has exercised Himself through patience to encourage the children of God to move forward and to look ahead to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. Heb. 12:2. We shall not be detained by the circumstances around us, for we are not to be slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Heb. 6:12. It is well worth while to serve the Lord.

Sunday school and worship service have continued as usual with good attendance, except when the roads were bad. Prayer meeting is conducted on Wednesday night. We do regret that our pastor, Rev. G. A. Linscheid, is not well. He is still in the Bethel Hospital in Newton, Kansas. It is our wish and prayer that he may soon recover. Different ministers are called by the church board to occupy the pulpit in his absence. God is faithful in supplying our spiritual needs.

The Christmas program reminded us of God's love to the world and to reconsecrate our life in His service. A large number attended our annual Sunday school election on the last Sunday of the year. The new year is well on its way. Are we keeping up with our New Year's resolutions?

The effects of an usually wet fall can still be seen as some farmers have turned their cattle into the unharvested feed which is broken down and tangled. If it had not been for the corn knife and the scythe much more feed would have gone to waste.

Our new church building is not yet completed. The wet fall weather hindered the work to a great extent. The new pews have not yet arrived either. We hope that they will come soon, and that we will be permitted to have the dedication service this spring. Occupy till He comes. —Corr.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

The catechetical class again started in October. In 1941 fourteen new members were taken into the church by baptism, and two new members by letter.

On October 5 Miss Rogalsky spoke in our high school auditorium to a very large audience. How impressive it was when she told us of the blessed experience of the Lord's presence in her trip!

The Salem Hospital Gift Day at Hillsboro, Kansas, in October was remembered by donations and also by some help by the members of our church.

The Lord's supper was observed November 26. The following Sunday the Volunteer Mission Band from Wichita gave a long musical program in our church. Thanksgiving Day was observed as usual with the children bringing their thank offering gifts for the poor to the front, and putting them into a plate held by the pastor. The Goessel Christian Endeavor program was greatly enjoyed by all who were present. The Christmas program by the Juniors was given December 24 in the evening. The all-day Annual Church meeting, which had been planned for January 1, had to be postponed till January 11 in the evening on account of a snow storm. Miss Aganetha Fast also visited our church this winter. We were overjoyed to have the privilege of having Missionary P. A. Penners with us January 18. They will be back January 28 to show us the pictures from India.

In 1941 we did not lose any members through death, for which we are thankful, but are sorry to say that we lost one dear sister January 20, Mrs. Jacob J. Loewen, who was 83 years old.

Seven new babies were added to our church cradle roll last year.

On December 8 William Hiebert left for C. P. S. Camp 22, Henry, Illinois. He was the first one from our church to go as a C. O. —Mrs. F. G. U., Corr.

The Life of Simplicity

By Melvin Gingerich*

As we observe the American scene, we see bitter struggles between various economic groups for a larger share of the national income. Manufacturers want tariffs to protect them from foreign competition, while those who are consumers of these goods oppose the tariff. Farmers want legislation that will raise the price of farm crops but the city people want to buy cheap foods. Capitalists and employers want to keep wages down but laborers use various weapons to raise the level of wages. There may well be legitimate reasons for the dissatisfaction of some of these groups. Such competition, however, may become most selfish and unfair to the majority of the people; it, therefore, may be a serious threat to the successful functioning of our society.

Although at the present time the national income is increasing, we are being warned that taxes will become higher (and now have become higher) than they have ever been before. A large percentage of our factory production consists of war materials. These goods are not to be used to produce more goods but are made to be used destructively. When a nation diverts its production away from productive goods to destructive goods, it must prepare for a day of reckoning. Many times before this, when nations changed from a peace-time economy to a war economy, they eventually had to face a lowered standard of living. By this we mean that the time came when they had less to eat and wear than they had had before. It seems reasonable to conclude that the same result will follow this period of war spending.

These post-war depressions always bring a severe shock to the life and institutions of the countries experiencing them. Sometimes revolutions occur because of the great amount of dissatisfaction and suffering produced. These revolutions are due in part to the fact that many are materially rather than spiritually minded; that is to say, many people have gotten their enjoyment and happiness primarily from the "things" they possessed. To be happy, they thought, it was necessary to accumulate much wealth, to possess many things. They were thinking constantly of how they might get a larger share of the national income. When economic depressions come upon people who have always related their happiness to the amount of goods they possessed, they may become rebellious, frantic, and radical. They cannot endure the life they must now face, and so they vote into office radical political leaders while others even commit suicide.

A society that wants to succeed in weathering such a storm must have in it a stabilizing element. If it has enough people who have learned the joy of serving others, it may come through the testing period successfully. The Christian who has learned that "life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" can be the salt of the earth at such a time.

The Christian always has the duty of living a life of simplicity. If he has more money than his neighbor he must avoid making a show of his wealth. His home, his home furnishings, his car, his clothes, and his entertainment should all be simple. If they are not, they may become a stumbling block to his neighbor. The Christian knows full well that the world has a false standard of values, and so he will do nothing that will cause others to think he has pride in his wealth. He will live a life of simplicity because he does not want others to conclude that life consists "in the abundance of the things" possessed.

When Christian youths grow up in homes where the emphasis is not primarily upon wealth-getting, they will not find it difficult to make the decision to serve their government a year or two without pay in a civilian public service camp, if such a call comes. Much less will they find it difficult to answer the missionary call to go or give. After the war has ended, they will find it comparatively easy to adjust themselves to the lower income of depression years because they have learned that genuine satisfaction comes only from serving others and not from accumulating money to be spent primarily upon one's own desires.

Seeing God

By Alvin Beachy

Matt. 5:8 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

There is a tendency for us to think of the above words as referring to the future life of the Christian. Certainly we would not wish to deny any one the comfort and assurance derived from such an interpretation, for it most assuredly has its place.

* Professor of history and government at Bethel College.

However, we should like to think of it now in a different light.

In the original Greek we have the future middle form which could perhaps be translated, "For they shall be able to see God." For the time being, at least, we shall think of it in that way.

There are many ways and many places in which God manifests Himself for those who have eyes to see and ears to hear. The beauties and wonders of nature for instance—a beautiful white lily growing from the black muck of swamp, a magnificent, wide-spreading elm, standing as a symbol of quiet strength in the midst of an open field, a mountain forest dressed in robes of splendor by the color artist, Jack Frost, cloudy sky transformed into a blaze of glory by the setting sun, a winter night when the heavens are studded with jewels of stars and the moon shines brightly on the glittering snow—all these speak of God, but only to the pure in heart.

The beauty of the starry winter night is not seen by the thief as he slips stealthily from cover to cover. The beauty of the landscape covered with a white blanket does not stir his soul. His eyes are blinded by fear and greed.

Nor do these beauties exist for the "respectable" man whose only aim in life is to "buy and sell and get (material) gain, no matter how or where so long as he can get by. How little we see of God in the earth which is His footstool and the heavens which are His throne! Oh, for eyes that see His handiwork, and for ears that can hear His still small voice in the whispering of the wind and the song of the stars.

Or again—a tiny infant smiling its first smile as the young mother bends tenderly over the cradle, a group of children playing happily together with no thought of race or color, a widowed mother carrying bravely on for the sake of her little ones, the child of four looking up at you with those questioning eyes and asking simply, "Why?", an old man—bent by the weight of years and the fury of the storms they brought, but proudly erect in spirit—these too, speak perhaps even more loudly of Him in whose image we are created. But again, only the pure in heart will be able to see His image reflected there. They speak, but not to those who eyes are blinded by lust and whose ears are stopped by greed, hatred, and selfishness.

Do you remember Jesus saying, "What-so-ever ye do to one of the least of these my brethren, ye do unto me"? Then leave nothing undone which will add to the happiness of one of them.

Father, forgive us our wilful blindness, and open our hearts that our spiritual eyes may see. Amen.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PEACE MEETING AT WHITEWATER

A meeting planned by the Western District Young People's Peace Committee was held in the Emmaus church, two and one-half miles north and two and one-half miles east of Whitewater, on Sunday evening, February 8, beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

Among the speakers were Dr. H. A. Fast, General Director of C. P. S. camps, who spoke on the purchase of bonds, the new registration, the effect on education, the widening scope of the C. P. S. camps and also other topics of current interest and concern. Time was allowed for people in the audience to ask specific questions of Dr. Fast on these matters.

An offering was received which, according to the resolution passed at the last W. D. C. Young People's convention, went equally for: (1) Relief, (2) C. P. S. Camps, (3) Mennonite work camps, and (4) the work of the Y. P. Peace Committee.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP SERIES

III. LOVE FOR COUNTRY, Matt. 22:15-22

Program for February 22, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "God of Our Fathers, Whose Almighty Hand," No. 347, "O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," No. 343.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Special music: "In Christ There Is No East or West," No. 320, "Christ for the World, We Sing," No. 327.
4. Offering for Civilian Public Service camps.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Love for country is deeply ingrained into human life. The Hebrews loved their country intensely. They sang of its mountains, hills, valleys, and plains, of Jerusalem and Bethlehem, of the beauty of the flowers in the fields, and of the morning sky and the stars; all of it was dear to them. We, too, may well sing of the beauties of our country and learn to appreciate them more deeply.

They loved their nation for the men of God who had been its leaders, and they sang of them: Abraham, Moses, Joshua, David. These were the nation's crown and glory. We, too, may thank God for some men who have furthered Christian ideals in our country and may learn to see that the more Christian a man is, the finer and better will be his patriotism. He will be able truly to seek the good of his country because he is Christlike in his outlook.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. A loyal patriot.	Deut. 34:10-12
2. Obedience to rulers.	Rom. 13:1-3
3. Love fulfills all law.	Rom. 13:8-10

IV. For Discussion:

How can we as members of the historic peace churches express our love for country?

V. Facts for Study:

A true patriot realizes that our country is intimately bound up with the rest of the world. He looks forward to the time when national boundary lines will be converted into bonds of union making of the nations of the earth "a perfect round," a harmonious whole. Christ says, "The meek shall inherit the earth." When enough of us are prepared in spirit to inherit the earth there will be a mighty fellowship of cooperation and goodwill. Wars will be no more, and spears will be converted into implements of productive usefulness.

VI. Illustration:

Across Borderlines—The All-Nation Football Team

"Standing on the goal line of the football field of the American University at Beirut on a crisp afternoon in spring, I saw streaming down from the pavilion a team such as I had never imagined in my wildest athletic dreams.

"The captain was an Abyssinian, thickset, but a fast and accurate shot. His fullbacks were a Turk and an Armenian; the halfbacks and the forwards included a Syrian Christian from the Lebanon, a Greek, other Turks, a Persian, and a Copt from Egypt. Their trainer was an Irishman. The principal of the college and many of the faculty were American. In the college were nine hundred boys from all these lands.

"The football field was on Asiatic soil; but the people represented were drawn not only from four separate races in Asia—the Syrian Arab, the Armenian, the Turk, and the Persian—but the Abyssinian came from Africa, the Greek from Europe, the trainer from the British Isles, and the principal from America. Every continent had its man.

"As I stood watching the members of the team take their places and the opposing team move out to face them, and then heard the whistle blow and saw the game surge down and up the field, I could see that they were playing a really magnificent team game. Talking with the sports captain of the college, who was standing by me, I asked, 'What special difficulty do you find in training a team like this?'

"'A real hard nut to crack is just this,' he replied. 'These fellows come from countries where the whole idea of team play is unknown. Each at the beginning of his football training wants to dribble the ball down the field at his own feet and score the goal himself for his own glory. It is just the same,' he interjected, 'if you are teaching them baseball or cricket or hockey. So,' he went on, 'I have won the battle, not only for the boy as a member of the team, but for his whole life job, when I have taught him to pass.'"

"I saw a cross that bore my name.
'Mine,' I said, 'it shall never be,'
Until chagrin brought sense of shame—
It might have lifted me."

A CHRISTIAN PROGRAM FOR OUR COUNTRY

Ps. 33:10-15

Program for February 15, 1942

"What is Christianity? In the home, it is kindness. In business, it is honesty. In society, it is courtesy. In work, it is thoroughness. In play, it is fairness. Toward the fortunate, it is congratulation. Toward the unfortunate, it is pity. Toward the weak, it is help. Toward the wicked, it is resistance. Toward the strong, it is trust. Toward the penitent, it is forgiveness. Toward God, it is reverence and love." —William DeWitt Hyde

Forces within our country to be changed or developed:

1. Relieve human misery—What projects might we undertake to relieve sorrow and suffering of needy people in our community?
2. Do you think there is injustice to people of other races in your community? Is this an evil common throughout our country? What can your society do to change this condition?
3. Are there places within our country where poor people are denied the medical care they need?
4. Has our country fallen into the evil of prejudice against the Jews?
5. Does there seem to be a disregard of the value of human life?
6. What is the difference between the non-resistance which Jesus proposed and cowardice?
7. Is there such a thing in fact as loving your enemies?
8. What are the most dangerous forms of all evil today?
9. The church sings many militant hymns. Is the church as a whole a fighting force today?

"The greatest need in the world today (with the exception of the spirit of love), especially in our own country, is responsibility." I have always felt that my body, my mind, and my soul were associates, my community, my nation; that I am the trustee of a personality, and that I must regard it as a sacred trust. How else can I explain my presence here? I must be useful, 'else wherefore born?'" —Larry

THE ANSWER OF THE LAW TO ALCOHOL

Scripture Reading: Prov. 20:1; Isa. 5:11, 12

(A "Did You Know" Meeting)

Program for February 22, 1942

We always want to know if a statement is a proved fact before we repeat it. The W. C. T. U. gives us these figures:

We have one retail liquor license for every three hundred people, eleven saloons for every five churches, one tavern or night club for every twenty-one homes. In eighty-one months we have spent two billion dollars more on liquor than for the poor; about fifteen billion dollars have been taken from the income of retail merchants, who sell necessary things, by the liquor trade in the past five years.

The Question Bee

Q. 1. What does the Bible say about rulers of a nation drinking?

Ans. In Prov. 31:4 we read, "It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine nor for princes strong drink, lest they drink and forget the law, and pervert judgment of any of the afflicted."

Q. 2. Who pays for much of the crime in the world today?

Ans. Many who do not leave liquor alone.

Q. 3. What is the opinion of the National Safety Council?

Ans. There is much comment against our highway deaths, which result when drivers of cars or pedestrians drink. The motto is: "Keep liquor out of the man, or keep the man out of the automobile." One out of every four fatal highway accidents is due to drink.

Prayer Items for our Prayer List

(a) Sober men in our government places, (b) Prohibition laws, (c) a willingness to learn the truth about alcohol, (d) more consecrated and sincere Christians who "dare to stand like Daniel."

"Man is well-nigh indispensable to the kingdom of God; the kingdom of God is altogether indispensable to man." —W. F. Bruce

"Nothing is easier than fault-finding; no talent, no self-denial, no brains, no character are required to set up in the grumbling business."—Robert West

"Speak to me by name, O Master,
Let me know it is to me;
Speak that I may follow faster,
With a step more firm and free."
—Frances R. Havergal

"The vital point about religion, after all, is not what you think about it,
but what you do about it."

1942 YEAR BOOK

Several unavoidable causes have delayed the completing of the 1942 Year Book. However, the printers now have promised that it will be off the press by the fifteenth of February. Consequently it should reach the readers of the Mennonite who have paid their subscription to January, 1943 some time during the week of the fifteenth.

This is indeed a creditable performance, but we must not rest upon past records. It is urgent that funds continue to flow into our treasury at this rate. The current six months' period ends February 28. The next period follows immediately. In spite of an increased enrollment in the C. P. S. camps, it is estimated that contributions at the rate of one dollar per church member for each six month period will continue to meet all expenses, during this and the succeeding six months period.

The Mennonite

The Sword of the Spirit

No one who is true to the Bible and to our historic Mennonite doctrines doubts that it is wrong to take up the carnal sword. All such know that it is wrong to fight with such weapons as must be manipulated by the human body. "We cannot take the sword" is burned into their conscience.

But it is not equally clear to all those who take the C. O. stand that we are to fight with the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Eph. 6:17. Yet Paul in the classic passage on the Christian armor tells us to do so. Menno Simon's writings on warfare are pressed full with references to wielding the sword of the Spirit. He says, "He that is not blind will understand with what weapons the Christian is to fight, namely, with the word of God."

Christ used this sword to reconcile men unto God. The early apostles did not try to persuade men to leave their sinful ways by means of military force. No, they preached the word of God. They wielded this sword so forcefully that the Church spread over vast areas of the then-known world. With it they conquered. There was a time when men and women were not born into the Mennonite Church. They joined it by choice. They joined it knowing that they might pay with their lives for doing so. What led them to do it? The sword of the Spirit as wielded by the believers. Some of the men and women, whose deaths are recorded in the Martyr's Mirror, went to their death testifying, speaking psalms and hymns. To keep the sword of the Spirit from cutting into the hearts of the bystanders the persecutors at times cut out the tongues of those who were to be killed. Our ancestors lived and died fighting with the sword of the Spirit.

Wielding the sword of the Spirit is the positive part of our peace testimony. It is our method of combatting the monster of sin. It is to be wielded by every Mennonite, not just by the ministers and leaders. He who does not wield this sword is truly a slacker in the great fight against sin. The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, is the most effective way of overcoming sin. Why should we look for any other method?

Is it right to assert that it is more important to express the word of God in our daily living than to speak it? Just as well ask, "Is it more important for a husband to express his love for his wife in his work and home activities than to speak it?" Extreme viewpoints seldom present the whole truth. Neither do they here. It is not sufficient only to live the word of God; it is not sufficient only to speak it. The two belong together. They are inseparable. Examine Paul's passage on the Christian soldier. He is to wield the sword of the Spirit. But he is also to have a suit of armor. Why? If he didn't he would be so badly incapacitated in the struggle with evil that his efforts would be of little or no avail. We must have our loins girded with truth, our breast covered with righteousness (right dealings), and the shield of faith in our hand, or our sinful opponent will be able to attack us with devastating criticism.

The Anabaptists were powerful in their influence because they spoke the word of God fearlessly and lived it sincerely in their daily affairs. We are to possess the word of God, our sword, in the sense that we know it with the mind, cherish it in our heart, and express it in our daily living. We are to wield this sword in speaking, singing, and in writing. Let us use this righteous sword in such a way today, and we as Mennonites will be a spiritual power. We will be servants of God as were the early apostles who fought not with the carnal sword, but who wielded the sword of the Spirit in such a way that even a King Agrippa felt it cutting into his heart. Onward Christian soldiers! That is the positive note that we have too long neglected.

Were it true that all Mennonites were expert in wielding the sword of the Spirit, then we can be sure we would stand higher in the estimation of some of those who are schooled in the Bible but do not obey its peace teachings. Then we would stand better in the eyes of many citizens, for they would perceive our positiveness. The purity of daily living, which is inseparable from wielding the sword of the Spirit in a conquering manner, would grip the hearts of unbelievers much like it did in the days of the Anabaptists. We would be far more invincible than we are now. We need to arm spiritually and fight spiritually. That is our alternative to carnal war. In the heart, mind, and mouth of every Mennonite there should be the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. —rw.

What if They Say

What if they say, "How will the government regard those who insist that their sons be relieved from service at the 'front' but who themselves profit from the manufacture of weapons of war?" Is it consistent for Mennonites to help in the making of bombs and then not to expect our "boys" to drop them?

A Christian who has scruples against war, if he is to be consistent, will "draw the line" as far away from participation as possible. Instead, he offers to serve the permanent welfare of his country with both life and property. He gives both service and resources voluntarily, pays for the privilege of doing so, "asking neither interest nor return of principal." He gives his life-blood for the well-being of others. Never does he knowingly contribute to causes contrary to the life and teachings of Christ.

Let me illustrate. When asked for a 25c piece on the street, he takes the beggar into a cafe and buys him a meal. He wants to be assured that it will not go for liquor. So, a Christian will make sure that his contributions and investments will be used wisely. This course sometimes brings social disapproval by those who do not understand him. But he dare not compromise on principle!

If we enjoy increased income at war time levels and invest for war profits but insist that our "boys" cannot serve the war effort, for conscience sake, then we must admit that we are trying to shield them from manning the guns we help to make.

A selectee in one of the Civilian Public Service camps wrote recently, "None of us want sympathy. But we need the encouragement of faithful support and interest of our home folks. We want to believe that we are only a few of the C. O.'s in the church; that most of them are at home. We are hoping that they give the same testimony to the world as they are expecting us to give." —Walter H. Dyck

The Better Way

By Rev. H. T. Unruh *

While traveling last summer we came along Highway 40 between Kansas City and St. Louis. For a long distance the highway was under reconstruction. Great improvements were being made. They were made to make travel safer, more economical, and more of a pleasure. It was done to save life, money, time, and nerves. It surely will be a better way for the traveler.

Not long ago I was in Chicago. While riding with a taxi driver I entered into a conversation with him. Among other things he said, "I was in the last world war and how foolish and fruitless war is." He ended by saying, "You know, my friend, that the so-called Christian way, I believe, is the best way." We had to part, but his last words I shall long remember. Likely he was not a professed Christian, but what a fine testimony to the Christian way of life he gave in the statement which he made.

Do we realize what a challenge this hour is to our church and to our testimony to the better way of life, the foundation of a lasting peace? Our C. P. S. camps are a significant opportunity for testifying to this better way of life, individually, socially, economically, nationally, and internationally. Let us stand by our young men in the camps. They are not an object of pity; they are our representatives speaking in their particular manner of the "better way." Deeds speak louder than words. Too often in this day of hatred and wild enthusiasm we cannot say what we would like to say. But here is a means of showing to the world a better way of living together.

This is indeed a bewildering time. Even good church people often can not stand the glare of ridicule and publicity and so wonder at and question ideals they proclaimed in days when the waters were undisturbed. Let us remember that what appeared to the contemporaries of Christ as shame and weakness, and defeat has turned out to be glory and power and triumph. Christ stood against the Roman world, and He will stand against ours too. Surely our peace testimony will once more prove the truth of "not by might, nor by force but by my spirit, Saith the Lord." What happened at Pearl Harbor did not change the Christ, and I must remain true to Him.

The best service I can give to my country is to build Christian character and Christian personality. I must keep the church awake to the fact that the "better way" of Jesus is the only realism. Let us be thankful for the opportunity which our church has. As our government grants us this opportunity today, let us not forget the young men who in the last world war stood for the "better way" of Christ. They paved the way for what is granted us today. Let us not grow weary in praying and giving for this worthy cause. I am sure that the results will not fail us.

Some day, not distant I hope, the ashes of this war will lie behind us, and the glow of the new day will be upon us. What will it be? I do not know, but this I do know—there will be a world of tomorrow regardless of how bombs destroy and shells lay waste. We must rebuild this world. Who shall lead in this great adventure but the Christian? The church must lead the way. The Christian must lead the way, not in any sense of self-righteousness or with a feeling of guiltlessness, but because the Christ whom the Christian follows is Himself "the way, the truth and the life." Christ surely is The Way. Let us continue to witness for this truth.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

LANGHAM, SASKATCHEWAN

November 8, 1941

Inspite of the fact that there is much room for improvement, activities are, as far as I can see, taking a normal course. Minister, Sunday School teachers, young people and Ladies' Aid have labored conscientiously, and the Lord hath bestowed His blessings upon all!

The topic of the ordinary Sunday morning service is, "Jesus Christ the Crucified!" The congregation is, as a rule, large, and the gospel is accepted with joy. Personal work with the young people affords great pleasure. There was in this year, a group of thirteen that were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and became members of the church. Testimonies given by them were beautiful, indeed! My only desire is that our youth might be freer in testifying, but of more importance is that they may in every day life, acknowledge Him who redeemed them! Eight others became members, and our prayer is that each may be a blessing to the other, and all combine to praise and honor our Lord.

The young people's meetings, too, are well attended. Alas! we have not yet been able to acquire a steady choir leader, despite the fact that we have "song loving youth." Oft times they organize quartets, (male, female or mixed) among themselves, and sing not only at young peoples, but also during the Sunday morning service.

It occurs that neighboring churches request my services, but because my presence is desired in the home church Sunday morning, I am able to go out only in the afternoons.

Three months of every year, I serve the Home Mission Board, and the congregation must be content with visiting ministers. The people of the churches I visit, decide before hand, which they prefer, ordinary sermons, or "Bibelerklaerung." Usually my stay at one place lasts four days, giving them eight sermons. During these four days, of course, the old and sick have to be visited. Because we traveling ministers usually do not receive treatment as recommended in Matthew 10:11, and have a different nocturnal abode each night, we are, as a rule, weary at the end of a day's work; for, besides the sermon delivery, there are always the many different little visits with young and old at the various homes! But, let it not be said that these do not hold blessings in store for each concerned! Also, one feels that one is being upheld in prayer.

REPORT FOR THIRD QUARTER, 1941

By F. J. Isaac

The Bible course was the outstanding feature of this rainy season quarter. Jeremiah, I and II Thessalonians, and James were taught. Selected Bible verses, useful for witnessing, were memorized. It was especially encouraging to see how illiterate Christians learned and used these verses. We had a great blessing from the whole course.

Mrs. Isaac was not very well when we returned from the hills; so the doctors put her on a strict diet and prescribed much rest. However, she was able to do her share in the Bible course. Her condition did not clear up, and finally the doctors decided to take her to a large medical center, Miraj. The operation there disclosed an old duodenal ulcer. We praise God that she recovered nicely and was able to get back after three weeks. Dr. Ella Bauman stayed faithfully with her during the whole time.

Brother Balamdass with another helper went to relay the Bible course in the villages. When they came back at the end of September, they reported enthusiastically not only of their immediate work, but they also spoke of many seekers after salvation. The second failure of the crop has not hardened people, but they confess that God is chastizing them for their sins.

On Sunday, October 5, we celebrated the Lord's Supper and also baptized a man and his wife. This man had desired baptism about four years ago, but a hindrance arose then. May God grant that the Spirit's moving in this area may be the sign of a great harvest.

Mauhadih, C. P., India

THIRD QUARTER'S REPORT OF 1941

The third quarter is the time to write supporter sheets, take stock of hospital equipment and supplies, order supplies and drugs, and prepare for the rush to follow later. It is also the time to make budgets, a task that is not to be taken lightly.

The past quarter we again started building on the church. At this writing the walls are almost at the desired height. The building is sixty-three feet long and thirty-five feet wide. There is a small room to the back with two small verandahs, and a verandah or porch entrance to the front. We hope to build a beautiful church as well as keep the expenses down to a minimum. With the advanced prices, Rs 2000, which we expect from the societies, will not nearly complete the roof, but we are going on, trusting that there will be a way out. To date over $700 have been collected, much of it from missionaries, but practically all within India.

The church will not only serve the local congregation, but also the entire Phuljarh district and the children from the other stations who are in school here. Hospital patients frequently attend church. Because of its being a central church, and because of the institutions, the church needs to be larger than would otherwise be the case. We are omitting a tower at present, but are building so that the church can later be enlarged. It might well be larger now, in view of the community, but we did not see our way clear to so build now. We hope to get the roof on before the rains begin in June. We may have difficulty in getting permission to get steel for the trusses, because of the war.

Our number of hospital patients will probably drop off a bit this year because of the famine conditions. However, the income has increased appreciably. In view of Miss Schmidt's leaving we have just taken on an Indian nurse, the wife of one of the compounders.

I was out in one of the district churches last Sunday. Thiessens and the Duerksens just returned from a week-end spent in the district churches. They report very enthusiastically about their visits and services there. —H. E. Dester, November 11, 1941

BUILDING GOD'S KINGDOM

Jesus once said, "Let the children come unto me, for of such is the kingdom." In all our mission activities from the very beginning of our work in India the children have not been overlooked. They have always been looked upon as the oncoming church, the pillars in the church to be. This week (June 16-21) our schools at Basna station and outstations started. Here at the main station alone over two hundred children have gathered for the purpose of learning to meet the problems of life. Generally speaking, schools in the Orient have weaned children away from life as it is, especially in the villages. Schools as a whole have tried to prepare children for office work; but there are by far not enough offices to go around, and, after all, offices or officers can answer only a very few of all the problems of life. The teeming life of India is rural and in the villages. It is in the villages of India where the teeming multitudes live. If God's kingdom cannot be built in these rural areas, where it really can be rooted in the soil, then chances for building something durable are slim. But, thank God, we can set the faces and hearts of these children in the direction of thinking Christ's thoughts after him, and living His life at the present time in this great country. Here we are challenged daily with over two hundred boys and girls as raw material out of which Christ's disciples are to be built. The burden of responsibility is too great when we look upon ourselves, but by the grace of God and the intercession of friends in the home land, we have experienced in the past that a lot can be done. Jesus spoke of one-fourth of the seed falling on real good and productive ground, and even that fourth yielded harvests of varying amounts. We want to give all these children a real opportunity to learn to know Jesus and to follow Him.

NOTE TO CONTRIBUTORS

All material for The Mennonite should be sent to The Mennonite, 500 Bell Street, Beatrice, Nebraska. Please, do not omit the street address. Considerable inconvenience is caused post office employees when it is not given.

Much material lies in the editor's files, including many lengthy articles. Lack of space causes many delays. So, please, be patient if it takes a long time for your article to appear. The order of preference is: General Conference material, district material, church news, contributions by individuals. —Editor

TO THE CHURCHES OF THE WESTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Protocols of the Fiftieth Session of the Western District Conference are off the press and will be mailed to the churches in the near future. The printing of these involves considerable expense, therefore we suggest that each congregation contribute toward the general fund for this need.

In the treasurer's report you probably noticed that the conference had a debt of $2800.00 in the building fund. The trustees strongly urge that our congregations contribute several times during the year that the debt may be cleared.

We should be thankful that we still may build churches and worship God according to the dictates of our conscience. Let us give a thank-offering for these privileges. Mr. P. W. Bartsch, Newton, Kansas, is treasurer.

In the name of the Board of Trustees,
T. A. van der Smissen, Pres.

NEW COMMITTEE MEMBER

Due to ill health Rev. G. A. Linscheid has resigned as a member of the Home Mission Committee of the Western District Conference, and the officers of the conference have appointed Rev. W. F. Unruh, Moundridge, Kansas, as his successor.

The treasury, however, will be in care of Rev. S. J. Goering. Will the churches, therefore, please send their contributions to Home Mission Committee, c|o Rev. S. J. Goering, North Newton, Kansas.

Facing Christian Education Under a New Order Now

By J. H. Langenwalter

Sometimes circumstances become so serious that we are compelled to think beyond them. Such a situation seems to be upon us now regarding Christian education of the future. No one can tell us what the "New Order" will be ultimately. It is clear, however, that we are facing a new order. As we do this there are certain facts which must be taken into consideration, irrespective of what the details of the conditions may be which have already begun to confront us.

I. Adjustments will have to be made

We will find many changes in what had become almost an established order. There will be changes in the constituencies of our schools. This will also be true of students, of the churches, and of supporters upon whom we have depended. Nobody can go through what is facing us without coming out a changed human being.

We will have to deal with other schools as they will be after they have gone through experiences as ours will be. The state schools will find themselves compelled to meet new governmental and social conditions which will quite surely affect their attitudes toward Christian education. Other denominational schools will have been changed in many ways. The same will be true of non-denominational schools. The experiences of 1914 to 1918 will probably be repeated so far as "Bible Schools" are concerned. Their aims and methods will have to enter into any consideration as to the future of Christian education so far as our work is concerned. There are a number of academies, especially in Canada, which have a place in our work. These also will be affected by changes which are inevitable. We will have to learn to consider their new problems and our relationships to them.

No matter who will direct or dictate the "New Order", it will be a part of our problem to adjust ourselves in the field of Christian education as well as in any other field.

There will be changes in the communities in which our schools are located. We will have to learn to deal with popular emotional and sporadic movements as perhaps never before. That should not only prove a test for our Christian educational efforts; it may become a real opportunity for strengthening those efforts.

We will find important changes within the denomination. We have always had a rather strongly individualistic set-up. That will be put to severe tests in many ways. These tests will tend to make some want to stand up for their rights on the one hand; on the other hand, it may make us meek enough to really do an outstanding piece of work, under the new conditions, in the field of Christian Education.

This is a good time to form a correct estimate of the true meaning of our denomination. It started as a movement rather than an organization. It has done its best work as a movement. In the midst of increasing regimentation all about it may become rather easy to forget this fact. One way of meeting this danger is to meet the lack of knowledge of the history of the denomination by supplying that knowledge on a wide scale. That should not prove as hopeless as it might seem on first thought. There is a rather remarkable interest in the history of the denomination. This is a good time to meet that interest with a broad interpretation of the meaning of the denomination in history and the implications of that meaning for the present and for the uncertain future—uncertain so far as details are concerned.

We must also expect to see changes in national interests in education. We may find a strong tendency toward greater nationalization of education, perhaps even pronounced inclinations toward regimentation of all educational efforts. It is not impossible that the inclination toward industry-centered education may be much increased. Much of what has been called vocational emphasis in education has been largely guided by a thing-minded philosophy of life. The truth that the making of a life according to the purposes of God with mankind has too often not been known or has been underestimated. It is well that we should keep the importance of this fact in mind as we look to the future.

One may well raise the question whether there will be much place for religion in post-war states. If there is any interest left for religion, what place will be accorded it? How can religion be fitted into the national idealologies which are likely to be dominant? Will there be an opportunity for religion in the schools?

This war, vast as it is as viewed from almost any angle, will not continue always. When it ends we will be confronted with a new world order. The time to be thinking of that fact is now. Much that will face humanity then cannot be guessed now but there are certain things which are sure to follow. There will be need of those who are prepared for the task of reconstructing what can be salvaged. There will be human needs of body, mind, and soul which somebody must meet. Perhaps the real value of the Civilian Public Service Camps will come to the fore then. The men who are now being trained under circumstances which are trying in many ways may be the very ones who will be ready to step in when and where the need is greatest.

We are reasonably sure that the post-war period will bring to the fore great physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual needs. We need not wait until overpowering strength or exhaustion will permit these needs to be met. We can see now the kind of thing which will need to be done.

The present situation will produce changes in human beings. Such experiences will produce changed attitudes which cannot be ignored. In addition to the physical needs for food, medical care, and exercise in order to restore the bodies of people there will be mental needs to be met. Discouragements and unbalanced minds will need attention. Perhaps, one of the outstanding services to be rendered will be the supplying of a steadying view of life. To many of the victims this will be of more importance than the more obvious needs of the body. There will also be spiritual needs to be considered. It will be necessary for these who are really to help in this field at least to recognize these needs. It will be necessary to inform ourselves on how to meet such needs under the conditions which will then prevail. It will also be necessary that we be able to impart necessary information to others.

We will discover great changes in the concepts of God on the part of people who have gone through the fiery trials of a world aflame with war. When men come to the realization that blaming God for the present situation is mostly a shallow attempt to hide the sins of men and little short of blasphemy so far as the character of God is concerned, they will stand on firmer ground. God has neither started nor sanctioned the results of fear and greed which we have seen all about us for a long time. He has ever stood against these attitudes. Our talk does not change the facts. The writer of Psalms 97:2 has an important suggestion for this age. God suffers as well as we do, perhaps, much more keenly than we do because of the terrible situation into which the human race has gotten itself by doing wrong when they knew better.

II. Support for the work of Christian Education will have to be found. This support will be needed for buildings and equipment, for salaries of workers and for students as it is today. However, in many cases it will be under entirely new circumstances.

The question arises from whom shall this support come? At once one thinks of the churches—changed as many of them may be. Then one thinks of students who in more favorable days received the benefits of Christian education. Other individuals will have to be found to supplement what has been done by way of a new start or a continuation of what is now under way. One wonders whether there will be any hope of appeal to governments. Last, but not least, one will expect support from God. This may be especially necessary if our schools will have to become peripetetics—those who move about as many of the Chinese schools have had to do. Though the buildings of our schools be wrecked, the spirit of these schools will live on. May it not only be in memory but in active influence. It will certainly be needed then.

III. One of the great problems before us in the field of Christian education will be the preparation of leaders for our schools, churches and missions. On this point it may be well for us to face these four questions most sincerely and squarely:

1. Can a post-war state be expected to prepare teachers for schools with Christian aims?

2. Can our denomination set up and maintain standards for the preparation of its leaders under post-war conditions?

3. Can interdenominational graduate schools be found or set up in time to meet the needs of the coming generations in the light of the present and the future world situation?

4. Shall our colleges add some graduate work in order to give more definite direction to leaders of the future? If this were done it would seem advisable that there should be freedom of exchange between members of the student and faculty bodies of the colleges. It would be done largely to stabilize students before they enter graduate schools whose aims may have been deflected by the moral break-down because of the war.

IV. The Kingdom of God and we. Just as the physical forces of this universe have not been thrown overboard by the erratic antics of men so we may rest assured that the spiritual powers of God will still be present after man has done his worst. We —those who will exist upon earth then—will still have the fundamental facts of this universe to face. In the light of this fact it is well for us to ask questions like the following:

1. Can we contribute to the up-building of the Kingdom of God from now on? Are returning missionaries but the beginning of what will happen to the work of the church in general and to that of Christian education in particular?

2. What can we not do?

a. We cannot bring back the past.

b. We cannot act as though nothing had happened.

c. We cannot meet a complex understanding with a lack of understanding.

d. We cannot solve our problems by whimpering "unfair."

3. What can we do?

a. We can be or become the kind of people whom God can use as He sees fit.

b. We can grow. The task ahead will require well developed human beings in the full sense of the word.

c. We can practice the principles we profess. If we had done that more consistently there might be no war encircling the earth at this time.

d. We can be unselfishly useful.

e. We can pray. That means that we take an attitude of consecrated, expectant effort God-ward!

f. We can "wait fo the promises of the Father," as Jesus put it. That means that we be in a receptive attitude toward God as Jesus Christ reveals Him.

Note: The foregoing was delivered at Bethel College on November 28, 1941, as a suggestion for a study of the problems ahead of us who are interested in Christian education as of vital welfare to human kind. Delivery was made from notes. This will account for the greater brevity and for a few changes. However, the thought as a whole has not been changed. The occasion of the day—the annual Corporation Meeting of Bethel College—led to some illustrations which have been omitted for the present presentation in print. —Reedley, California

The Parables By The Sea

Mark 4:26-32 Matt. 13:44-50

Introduction

The word parable means to place side by side. It uses earthly truths to express a spiritual meaning. It is a comparison of two things in narrative form. Jesus' parables are not mere illustrations, but internal analogies, nature becoming a witness for the spiritual world. "His parables are attractive, short, popular, drawn from everyday life, simple in form and profound in substance."

The Growth of the Seed-Kingdom vs. 26-32

Those to whom Christ spoke had little conception of the kingdom of God and none at all of the Church. The kingdom is temporal because its citizens are those who live on earth. It is also spiritual and eternal because we enter it only by the new birth. In this parable of the seed, Jesus is concerned with the method of growth of the kingdom. The seed which is the gospel truth, has life within itself and it grows. It has life-giving power. When sown in the good soil of human hearts, it will grow steadily.

The seed develops gradually in its growth until full maturity is reached (v. 28). In like manner there is a gradual spiritual development in human hearts until maturity of character is attained. By degrees faith in Christ increases through the power of the Gospel. Jesus gives a picture of growth in grace in the Christian's heart and life. God aims to produce the fruit of the Spirit in human lives. Spiritual growth, like natural growth, takes time. This growth goes on until harvest.

Jesus says the growth of the kingdom is like that of the mustard seed—an extremely small seed (v. 31), yet it develops and grows into a small tree (v. 32). This is a vivid picture of the kingdom growth from the very small to large proportions. The Gospel sown in human hearts may lead to great results. This parable illustrates the growth of the spiritual kingdom throughout the ages, as many Christians have been added to it. Christ's disciples were few in number at his death. From this small and obscure group, has arisen the ever-enlarging company of believers, now extending to the ends of the earth. The end has not yet been reached.

Surpassing Value of the Kingdom vs. 44-46

The two parables of the Hidden Treasure and the Pearl of Great Price, teach the same lesson, the all-surpassing value of salvation through Christ. The good news of the kingdom is so valuable that men will give up all things, if need be, to accept it. They who discover the great value of salvation, decide that it is worth all that they have. The grace of God in the heart is a priceless possession. The man in the parable sold all he had that he might obtain the greatly desired treasure. He who accepts Christ, receives Him into his heart, has found the pearl of great price. Salvation is free, but they who would possess this great treasure must permit it to occupy the whole heart. In its spiritual application this means giving up every sin and self-indulgence which hinders Christ in having full possession of the heart.

Final Separation vs. 47-50

Fishermen gather all sorts of fish in their dragnets and then keep those valuable for food and throw aside the others. Jesus is here showing the separation between the good and the bad at the end of the world. The outward Church, the earthly kingdom, contains both good and bad. People join the Church for various reasons. Not all who are drawn in by the gospel net are worthy. Many still prefer to live their own worldly lives—bad fish in the Gospel net. Jesus clearly taught that a day of separation is coming (vs. 49, 50). Then those in whose hearts God reigns shall be gathered to a place by themselves where they shall be blessed forever. All others shall be cast away. This separation is not made by man's wisdom. Man does attempt, at times, to separate the good from the bad in the visible Church on earth. No one but the omniscient God is competent to make decisions involving eternal life.

What facts seem to show that God's kingdom is still growing and spreading?

What will a man, if he be wise, be willing to do to attain salvation?

To what extent is it proper for human church leaders to separate the bad from the good?

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Russell L. Mast, Bedminster, Pa.

FEBRUARY 25—"But it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry." Jonah 4:1

Do we ever get angry at God when he does not destroy our enemies? That was the great failing of the prophet Jonah. He was a disobedient, sulky, narrow-minded person, given to fits of temper. Called to be a foreign missionary he stubbornly refused, because Nineveh was the chief city of Israel's most ruthless and hated foe. But after he did finally bring God's message to the wicked city, he went outside the gates and waited for God to destroy it. But God did not. So sulkiness gave way to anger. God showed mercy to the Ninevites because they had repented. But the small mind of Jonah could not understand this. Let us not be too sure that God will deal with our enemies exactly the way we expect Him to.

FEBRUARY 26—"And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live?" Ezek. 37:3a

This man of the exile saw in vision a valley of dry bones. The vision raised a question. Can these bones be made to live—can they? Then God breathed a new spirit into them, and they lived. So out of the exile would again come life and hope. Perhaps our world looks like a valley of dry bones. But the Christian holds the key of hope. "Yes, these bones can be made to live." This world can be made better; our lukewarmness can be stirred into fierce heat; human life can be redeemed—when we permit God to breathe a new spirit into our lives. A "pessimistic Christian" seems like a contradiction in terms. It was Paul, the man of hope, who said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

FEBRUARY 27—"And it is my prayer that your love may be more and more rich in knowledge and all manner of insight, enabling you to have a sense of what is vital." Phil. 1:9 and 10 (Moffatt)

"To have a sense of what is vital"—what an indispensable quality for living in such a world as this. The choices which we must make are not always between black and white, but between shades of gray and white; not always between good and bad, but sometimes between good and that which is best. For this we need, as our text suggests, "knowledge" and "insight." Knowledge here refers to acquaintance with the general principles of Jesus' teaching. Insight is the concrete application of those principles. Let us then strive to achieve knowledge and insight, that we in this confusing time might have a sense of what is vital.

FEBRUARY 28— " . . . Inasmuch as ye did it not . . . " Matt. 25:45

We instinctively seem to judge more severely the sins of commission than the sins of omission. Yet Jesus continually brought judgment on men for the things they should have done. Two conceptions of religion have always existed. One says, "Live negatively"; the other says, "Live positively." Some there are who center the good life around the things they do not do. They do not indulge in this or that type of entertainment; they do not waste their substance in riotous living. But those who catch their inspiration from Jesus, live positively. Their conception of the good life is centered about the things they can do in positive loving service. Let us examine our lives. Are we satisfied by simply doing no evil, or are we positively doing good?

WITH CHRIST ON THE EDGE OF THE JUNGLES

S. T. Moyer

The conviction that God was their confidence and abiding presence breathes through every page of With Christ on the Edge of the Jungles. The book is a series of experiences into which this missionary family and their co-workers always found that Jesus Christ had called them to enter and out of which they came with renewed faith in a loving heavenly Father who cared for his own. The trials and sufferings as well as the joys and unexpected pleasures brought forth fruitage for the kingdom. S. T. Moyer is a missionary of the Mennonite Church and his book is part of Mennonite missionary history. Its setting is in the Central Province of India. The work of several missionaries is touched in this book, and pioneers, evangelists, teachers, medical missionaries, church builders and faithful native workers pass in review as the pages are turned.

In many ways this short story is very like a similar book which might be written about our own mission work in India. Over a period of twenty years in an area where there were no churches, no leaders, no schools and no Bible knowledge, there came into being a Christian community numbering two and one-half thousand Christian men, women and children, organized into some twenty churches. The entire story gives praise to the Lord who blessed them on the edge of the jungle. —Anetta C. Mow, in the Gospel Messenger.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Indiana, "There were nineteen in the group which went to the C. P. S. camp at Bluffton last Sunday evening, January 18. Our program seemed to be appreciated by the boys, and personal contacts and first hand observations were also worth while." The receipts of $103.00 from the recent sale held by the ladies will be used for the Women's Work of Bluffton College and for Emergency Relief Work. On January 30 the Bluffton College String Quartet gave a program in our church. The ladies of this church have also started the project of making laundry bags for the Bluffton C.P.S. Camp. This church is also seeking to pay in time its quota for the C.P.S. Camps.

The Marietta, Ohio, Camp

By Dale Young and David Forrer

The C.P.S. Camp No. 8 is located about five miles south of Marietta on state route 50. This is up the river from Marietta, in the Ohio River Valley. Therefore, the soil of this state tract of ninety-eight acres is sandy soil, theoretically speaking, sandy loam. There are about sixty acres of comparatively level land which is tillable and lies next to the road. Back of this, up on the hill, is the location of the camp surrounded by more hills which are covered with pine and many other varieties of trees. This land is used by the state of Ohio for one of its State Forest Nurseries, which happens to be its largest. Here is where trees are grown, started from the seed, cultivated for two to three years and then shipped to all parts of the state. Eight hours per day for five days out of a week are spent by the C. O. boys caring for the trees. The trees are started in seed beds, then after one or two years growth they are transplanted into rows which are about one foot apart and the trees a couple inches apart in the rows. These trees must receive very good care. Several applications of compost are applied yearly. During the summer months the weeds grow rather rapidly and the boys must go through them on their hands and knees and pull them. There are between twelve and a half and fifteen million trees grown in this nursery. The greatest part are different varieties of pine: Red, white, short leaf, jack pine, and a few others. Besides the pine some hemlock, poplar, cypress, and walnut trees are also grown.

The campees have come to Marietta from practically all parts of the state. A few came from other states but had been working in Ohio prior to their induction. At one time there were forty-eight members of the camp. Five men who were over twenty-eight years old have been released, two were transferred, three were released because of dependency while two were discharged because of some physical defect. This left us thirty-six men, and then on November 7, five new men reported for work of national importance, bringing the total number of campers back to forty-one.

Although the camp is directed by the Mennonite Central Committee and the Brethren Service Committee, the campees are not limited to these two groups. There are fifteen different religious denominations represented, while one draftee is not affiliated with any religious sect.

There is a great emphasis placed on the religious program. A regular prayer before all meals is offered and after breakfast a worship service is conducted by some member of the camp. The campees and visitors conduct a Sunday school and church services in camp almost every Sunday; at other times transportation is provided by the camp truck for the boys to attend church in town. This is by no means the extent of the religious program. Private prayer and meditation is practiced by many. There is an effort made to attain spiritual growth through informal discussion on religious topics. While there is difference of religious opinion expressed, a spirit of cooperation and tolerence is manifested as the boys consider this a privilege to associate with fellow Christians of so many different denominations. One campee makes the following interpretation of the religious fellowship: "We not only see a better way of life together while we are in camp, but we are training ourselves to better cooperate as Christians when we leave camp." Another campee says, "All of us, regardless of our particular church affiliation, can better see the principles of Christ as they ought to be lived because of our fellowship with members of other religious faiths."

While the members of this camp are unanimously opposed to war, they disagree greatly on the manner in which leisure hours are spent. Some of the boys content themselves with music, art, painting, and reading while others do woodworking and various types of handicraft. Then others, despite the strenuous hours spent on the work project, take to baseball, football, basketball, ping pong, swimming, and hiking.

The educational program is both academic and recreational. For the past several months the Book of Luke has been studied every Monday night. A First Aid class is given every Tuesday night. The past few weeks part of the camp journeyed to Marietta on Monday and Thursday nights for a course in typing. A photography club was organized and has been quite active for the past few weeks. The camp is expecting to publish a camp paper in the very near future. The paper has many purposes; in the first place we hope each publication will contain articles that will further clarify our position as C.O.'s to many people who seem puzzled, thinking why so many young men refuse to enter military service.

The paper wants to serve the many, many relatives and friends of each campee as a source for news of our camp life. Then too, the paper shall have personal comments that will be of interest to only members of the camp. We plan to use our paper to further clarify our relationship with Selective Service. We feel this will give vital importance to our paper for the public at large, as well as the members of our camp. We have chosen "The Whispering Pine" as the name of the paper. A camp council is functioning in a very democratic manner. The campees serve on the council. A councilman at large is elected by all members of the camp, making a total of five campees meeting with the director every Tuesday night to discuss issues and make decisions that the camp feels are indispensable for the welfare of the camp.

Our present staff consists of a director, a business manager, a nurse, and a dietician. Rev. John F. Schmidt is the new director. Robert F. Eshleman is serving in the capacity of business manager and his wife, Mrs. Eshleman, is the camp nurse; both are from Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. The dietician is Miss Ruth Schmidt from Harper, Kansas.

There has been a very cooperative spirit manifested among both the staff and campers. We feel much credit must be given to the wise policies used by the administration. We greatly regret the leaving of our competent director, Rev. David Wedel. The kind, tolerant, considerate way in which he deals with each person's problem, as well as all camp problems, is responsible for the great respect he has commanded. The camp wishes Rev. Wedel God's speed.

Pacific District Doings

As an expression of our good wishes to all the selectees from the churches of this community, the young people sent each boy a year's subscription to The Quiet Hour, a devotional booklet. Of the twenty selectees from this district, five are in civilian public service camps.

On the evening of November 11, the San Marcus (Paso Robles, California) choir rendered a program at Camp Roberts, California. The program consisted of choir selections, reading, and several quartet numbers. The Young People's C. E. of the Grace Mennonite church of Dallas, Oregon, has completed a very successful year of service for the Lord. Among other activities, a donation was sent for the migrant work in California, and a Christmas basket of food and gifts was given to a needy family in Dallas. On December 29 a beautiful and inspiring candlelight installation service was held for the new officers. The Young People's choir, likewise, is continuing its good work under the directorship of Dietrich Diehm.

The young people of the Portland, Oregon, church took an active part in the Christmas celebration. On Tuesday, December 23, they presented a play, "The Light Still Shines." At the close of it, white gifts were brought to the manger, which were later distributed to five families in the city. Recently a group of boys from the Cascade Locks, Oregon, C. P. S. camp were entertained at the Portland church. The Aberdeen, Idaho, young people had a young people's banquet the Monday before Christmas. "Christ, our Defense" was the theme of the evening, with Rev. P. A. Wedel and Elma Wenger as the main speakers. Carl Wenger served as toastmaster. About fifty-five young people were present. On New Year's Eve, the Intermediates and young people had a Watch-night service. Following refreshment, a period of singing, testimony, music, and prayer was observed.

In order to escape the din of a New Year's Eve in a large city, the young people of the Immanuel Mennonite church of Los Angeles held a two day retreat at Wrightwood, a mountain resort. A group from the Calvary (Old) Mennonite church accompanied them, and together they enjoyed wholesome fun in the snow and the quiet beginning of a new year.

Series for March: Devotional Training

COMMITMENT TO CHRIST — Eph. 4:20-32

Program for March 1, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "I heard the voice of Jesus say," No. 142; "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah," No. 160.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Dramatization: "Which Way Shall I Take?" and "Faith Through the Years." Five cents each. These may be obtained from Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander, Quakertown, Pa.
4. Offering for your home church.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Personal commitment to Christ means loving Him and serving Him, putting loyalty to Him above every other loyalty. It means believing in the things which Christ believed in, doing the things He would have us do, going about our daily life in the spirit of Christ's example—"I must be about my Father's business." The great apostle of the Gentiles puts it this way: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ."

A woman in India asked a missionary, "Are you a Jesus-thinker?" What better description can be imagined of what a Christian ought to be? Indeed, there is nothing more important for us than to possess the mind of Christ, to be a Jesus-thinker.

Commitment to Christ means faith in the all-sufficiency of Christ, His power to forgive our sins, to make our life new, to take the barrenness and emptiness, the drabness out of it, and to fill us with joy and love and zest for living for others. The critical fault-finding, as well as the self-accusing attitude, does not find room because life is filled with thoughts of what we can do to love and serve Christ "in the least of these." Jesus in the life takes off the sharp corner, the annoying ways, He makes us trustful and eliminates a lot of worry and care. He gives us peace and poise and helps us become lovable, likable people. The prayer, "More like the Master, I would ever be" will prove a boon to any one.

III: Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

Forgiveness, Luke 17:3, 4; Persecution, (with reward), Matt. 5:11, 12; Self-denial and cross-bearing Matt 16:24, 25; Hatred from the world, John 15: 18, 19; Good for evil, Rom. 12:19-21; The Mind of Christ, Phil. 2:5-8.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What did Jesus mean when He said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life?"
2. Do I find Jesus Christ the Way to peace, happiness, and efficiency in everyday living?
3. How do Christians differ from non-Christians?

V. Bits of Poetry:

The little sharp vexations
And the briars that catch and fret—
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longings too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do.

Then leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong.
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.

—Phillip Brooks

* * * * *

They who tread the path of labour follow where my feet have trod;
They who work without complaining do the holy will of God.
Where the many toil together, there am I among my own;
When the tired workman sleepeth, then am I with him alone.
I, the Peace that passeth knowledge, dwell amid the daily strife,
I, the Bread of heaven, am broken in the sacrament of life.

—Henry van Dyke

VI. Food for Thought:

It is impossible to have Christ live in the heart and not reflect it in the face.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

By Huldah Myers

A CHRISTIAN PROGRAM FOR THE WORLD

"The Christian program must be one which applies the principles of Jesus."

Love

The cure for all the ills and wrongs, the cares, the sorrows, and the crimes of humanity, all lie in that one word "love." It is the divine vitality that everywhere produces and restores life. To each and every one of us, it gives the power of working miracles if we will. —Mrs. L. M. Child

Justice

Justice is the great interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized beings and civilized nations together. Wherever her temple stands, and so long as it is daily honored, there is a fountain for social security, general happiness, and the improvement and progress of our race. And whoever labors on this edifice with usefulness and distinction, whoever clears its foundations, strengthens its pillars, adorns its entablatures, or contributes to raise its august dome still higher in the skies, connect himself, in name, and fame, and character, with that which is and must be as durable as the frame of human society.

—Daniel Webster

Mercy

Mercy is like the rainbow, which God hath set in the clouds; it never shines after it is night. If we refuse mercy here, we shall have justice in eternity. —Jeremy Taylor

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Boys in Mennonite Camps

According to latest records at the Akron, Pa., office the following number of boys are in the Civilian Public Service camps which are administered by the Mennonite Central Committee:

C. P. S. Camp No. 4, Grottoes, Va.	104
C. P. S. Camp No. 5, Coloado Springs, Colo.	123
C. P. S. Camp No. 8, Marietta, Ohio	43
C. P. S. Camp No. 13, Bluffton, Ind.	129
C. P. S. Camp No. 18, Denison, Ia.	134
C. P. S. Camp No. 20, Wells Tannery, Pa. (Sideling Hill)	113
C. P. S. Camp No. 22, Henry, Ill.	85

Total number of boys in Mennonite-administered camps is 731.

Work of Peace Section

At the Mennonite Central Committee meeting in Chicago, January 2 and 3, a Peace Section was organized as part of the committee. The chairman of the newly-formed Peace Section is Brother Harold S. Bender, and the secretary is Brother Jesse Hoover. Other members are Brother Ernest Bohn, Brother P. C. Hiebert, and Brother Orie O. Miller.

The work of the Peace Section is to handle questions and problems of the peace committee of the several constituent groups. I shall also seek to interpret facts and findings in order to present, as far as possible, a consistent and united emphasis of our nonresistant attitude. Especially within the scope of the Peace Section's concern are the problems of our attitude toward war finance, war industries, civilian defense and relief of suffering in case of devastation on the home front. Another function of the Peace Section will be to supply to the Mennonite groups informational material on problems related to its work.

Service for Medical Students

Young men in medical schools who cannot, for conscience sake, enter the Army Medical Corps will be able to choose to enter the Public Health Service. This generous provision has been made by Selective Service and will help the thirty some Mennonite medical students to give their service to the nation in a manner consistent with their convictions. Students in medical school will be able to finish their course and also their internship before they will be inducted into Public Health Service.

RELIEF

Brother Hoover Returns from Speaking Tour

From January 18 to 31 Brother Jesse Hoover visited churches in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Minnesota. Brother Hoover spoke on the need for relief work in France and attempted to show the manner in which the Mennonite Church seeks to supply this need in the fullest sense. Brother Hoover reported large and responsive audiences in the Mennonite communities. Of his tour Brother Hoover says: "A quickening interest was evidenced by the various congregations where the dire needs of war sufferers was presented. This interest seemed to find a satisfaction in the present success that it was possible to report in connection with our program in Europe."

Books to England

A letter some weeks ago from Brother John E. Coffman, relief worker in England, mentioned a suggestion to establish a small Mennonite library in London and Birmingham. These libraries would loan books to individuals who are interested in getting information about the Mennonites. In response to this suggestion two copies of each of the following books on Mennonite life and faith were sent to Brother Coffman on January 22:

Smith, The Story of the Mennonites
Yoder, For Conscience Sake
Hartzler, Mennonites in the World War
Wenger, Glimpses of Mennonite History
Mumaw, Christian Ideals
The Christian Non-resistant Way of Life
Bible Teaching on Non-conformity
Mennonite Year Book and Almanac

STILL BEHIND

Brother L. J. Horsch, Treasurer of the General Conference Peace Committee, writes that we as the General Conference are to raise $50,000.00 for the Civilian Public Service Camps in 1942. He quotes the January, 1942 receipts as being $2,315.38. This means that we must do much better in the coming months than we have done in January. Of the various Mennonite branches contributing for this work the General Conference is one that is behind in its quota. The average quota for each church member is about $2.00 for the year. There are some churches which have not made any contribution. Perhaps, this is an oversight. Certainly the privilege of maintaining the faith of our fathers is worth a good deal in earthly goods. Let us lay up treasures in heaven by supporting this work. Send all contributions for the Civilian Public Service Camps to L. J. Horsch, 529 East J. Street, Ontario, California.

Resolutions

(By pastors of the Northern District Conference)

Whereas, we as pastors of the Northern District Conference met in session at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, on December 2-4, 1941, for the first time, and enjoyed rich spiritual blessings through the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ and the leading of the Holy Spirit, may God give us holy resolve never to lose sight of our heavenly vision nor to be slothful in the charge God gave us, but that by means of this conference the Lord may strengthen our feeble hands for His work and enable us to lead our flocks unto the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

Be it therefore, resolved:

1. Since we deplore existing conditions in some of our churches resulting from our present system of pastoral elections, that we seek and advocate a better method to help remedy these conditions. The following shall be preliminary steps toward this end:

(a). That we enlighten our congregations on the whole field of the pastor's divine call and commission through definite Biblical teaching from the pulpit.

(b). That the booklet Dictatorship in the Pulpit by J. E. Conant be made available to our congregations to be read by them.

(c). That one or more pastors be designated by the ministerial conference to visit all churches of this district and offer them a deeper understanding of the problems that we as pastors face, that a more wholesome, sympathetic, and cooperative relationship may grow between the pastor and layman.

2. That all the pastors of the Northern District Conference endorse the "Statement of the Position of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America" as approved by the General Conference held at Souderton, Pennsylvania, August 17-22, 1941, and that the pastors call the attention of their church members to this statement laying emphasis on the articles "Our Concept of Patriotism" and "Our Position on Military Service." We also ask our churches to pay in the $2.00 per year per member (that our Central Peace Committee asked for) for the maintenance of our Civilian Public Service Camps.

3. That, in regard to all desiring to be received as members into our churches, a public confession be asked.

4. That, in regard to marrying and receiving divorced people into our churches we recommend not to marry divorced people, but to retain or accept the innocent party, if it can be ascertained, giving each case a special consideration.

5. That we encourage our young people's union to go ahead in their efforts to edit their proposed youth publication.

6. Since we accede that souls are led to the Lord in different ways, that we as pastors should use methods of soul winning that can best be employed in each church.

7. That we arrange for another Pastor's Conference for 1942.

CORRESPONDENCE

EDEN MENNONITE CHURCH

Moundridge, Kansas

Once again we had the opportunity of commemorating the birth of our Lord. Christmas services were held in the customary manner. The children's program on Christmas Eve was very impressive with the large number of children singing carols and reading the Christmas story. Orlo Kaufman, one of our boys who is preparing for the ministry, brought the message on Christmas morning. In the evening of that day we worshiped together with a musical program. The Christian Endeavor Society rendered an inspirational program on the second Christmas day.

Roland Goering, another of our boys preparing for the ministry, conducted the services December 28.

In the absence of Rev. Walter Gering, who was conducting a series of meetings at the Ebenezer church of Bluffton, Ohio, Rev. Sam Goering led the services on Sunday, January 11. We also had the privilege of hearing Missionary Aganetha Fast the same day. Rev. Lester Hostetler of North Newton, Kansas, had charge of the services Sunday, January 18. The messages of our visitors were very inspirational. May we all be more faithful to the Lord during this year.

We are happy to have with us in our congregation again the Rev. and Mrs. Walter Schutz and son, Roy, who returned recently from their field of labor in Sierra Leone, Africa. Rev. Schutz told of their experiences at a morning church service, and also spoke to the young people at their monthly fellowship meeting. Mrs. Schutz spoke of her experiences to the Ladies' Missionary Society.

We have had several visitors in our pulpit recently. The Rev. Jesse Hoover of the Mennonite Central Committee spoke of the Mennonite program of relief for war victims in France. J. P. Klaasen, Art Professor of Bluffton College and a native of Russia, told his life story and also illustrated it with pictures of his works of sculpture. Dr. Lloyd L. Ramseyer, President of Bluffton College, spoke on "Visual Aids in Education" at the fellowship supper of the teachers and officers of the Sunday School. The Bluffton College Vesper Choir of sixty-one voices, under the direction of Russell A. Lantz, presented a program of sacred music which was highly inspirational.

Our church is actively engaging in a campaign for raising funds for the support of the Mennonite Civilian Work Camps. Also, we have pledged to donate funds to Bluffton College regularly each month by the use of the envelope system.

GOESSEL MENNONITE CHURCH

On December 31 our minister's wife, Mrs. P. P. Buller, passed quietly away after a lingering illness of more than two years. Many in the church and community had learned to love her for her quiet and cheerful disposition. She has gone to a greater field of joyful service.

Due to inclement weather church activities were at a standstill during the first part of 1942. The New Year Joint Christian Endeavor program with a fellowship "watch hour," which was scheduled for December 31, was given January 11. The week of prayer was observed with three evening sessions. The theme for meditation and study was, "The Living God." We feel the need of earnest prayer at such a time of turmoil. We were happy to have many gather for this purpose.

Throughout the winter months every Wednesday evening is observed as "church night." At this time the Bible classes meet for discussion. The adult class is directed by Rev. P. P. Buller. The young people's class is studying the book of Mark under the leadership of Mr. P. F. Quiring.

Rev. J. J. Ratzlaff, Newton, Kansas, delivered an inspiring message on January 18th. He emphasized the fact that the church is facing a critical period in history when unity of purpose is needed. On January 25 Missionary P. A. Penner is to conduct our worship services in the morning and show his pictures in the evening. Rev. David Wedel of Halstead, Kansas, has consented to relate in the near future his experiences as director of the Civilian Public Service Camp at Marietta, Ohio.

On January 20 Irvin Fast was called to service at the Civilian Public Service Camp at Henry, Illinois. As a token of appreciation of his active church service and as a gesture of farewell, the choir and relatives gathered in the church basement on January 16 for a "pot luck supper." The choir is particularly grieved to lose the second tenor voice within a few months. However, under the direction of Dr. A. K. Ratzlaff, the group continues its weekly rehearsals and is on duty every Sunday morning. Besides Irvin Fast, two other boys are stationed at C.P.S. camps, Elmer Enns at Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Roy Schmidt at Denison, Iowa. —Mrs. P. K. Dirksen, Corr.

On January 5 the annual business meeting of the church was held with Rev. Paul E. Whitmer in charge. The following officers were elected: Deacon, G. W. Brown; Trustee, Homer Kreider; Secretary, Mrs. Karl Smucker; Correspondent to The Mennonite, Mrs. Lester Wurgler. At the January church board meeting Orlo Sprunger and Mrs. Lloyd Morningster were hired as chorister and organist respectively.

The officers of the Sunday School for 1942 are as follows: Superintendent, Leslie Barlett; Secretary, Helen Rohrer; Treasurer, G. W. Brown; Pianist, Mrs. M. K. Brentlinger; Superintendent of Junior Sunday School, Mrs. O. O. Sprunger.

Donovan E. Smucker preached his first sermon as our newly elected pastor Sunday, January 18. His ordination services will be Sunday afternoon, February 8, at the church. We are looking forward into the new year knowing we will have many spiritual blessings in store for us in our new associations with our pastor and his wife.

As a congregation we have greatly appreciated the services of Rev. Paul E. Whitmer of Bluffton, who not only helped us secure ministers for trial sermons since October 12, 1941, but also filled the pulpit on various occasions, took charge at our annual business meeting, and ministered to us for communion, Sunday, January 3. We also have appreciated the untiring efforts of our deacon, Brother Elmer Brubaber, during this period of transition. —Goldie Wurgler, Corr.

DEER CREEK MENNONITE CHURCH
Deer Creek, Oklahoma

The report of the annual business meeting of the church held on January 11 shows that a varied program has been carried out during the year. Besides our regular services, the following visitors and local groups have contributed to our services:

Sunday mornings: Oklahoma Bible Academy, January 26; Bethel College Student Volunteers, May 18; Rev. John Lichti, June 1 and August 31; Rev. Ed. Schmidt, Wichita, Kansas, July 20; Young People of the local church, August 24; Rev. Abr. Albrecht, Ransom, Kansas, October 19; Miss Dora Schmidt, missionary to Mexico, November 30.

Sunday evenings: Medford choir, March 9; Meno Men's Choir, March 30; Community Easter Cantata, April 20 and 27; Women's Mission Society, May 11; Rev. Foote, director Civilian camp, October 12; Rev. Ed. Schmidt, November 9; Junior group, November 30.

Week-day services: New Year's service, January 1; Passion Week Union services, April 7-11; Ascension Day service, May 22; Rev. and Mrs. Ummel, migrant workers in California, July 28; Miss Spain, missionary to Central America, October 9; Wednesday evening Bible study, October 15 to November 26; Thanksgiving Day service, November 27; Miss Aganetha Fast, November 28; Christmas Eve program, December 24; Christmas Day service, December 25.

As a congregation we are grateful to those who have contributed to the services.

Four children were consecrated during the year.

On Sunday, January 15, our pastor, Rev. H. E. Miller, will begin a class of catechetical instruction with a group of young people. —Corr.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Greetings to The Mennonite and its many readers with quotations from Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson: "Within us all there is a home of the soul. It is where God chooses to dwell, and when we welcome Him there He brings gladness, cheer and strength for the day we live in. This it is, which gives that New Year hope we truly wish you, and all people, may have now."

We shall always cherish his series of meetings, the fellowship and friendship of Dr. Johnson.

Young men who have been called from our midst and enrolled in the service of the government are as follows: Gerhardt Peters, C. P. S. Camp, Colorado Springs; Paul Jantz, Eddison Schmidt and Milton Jaegli into military camps. Susie Jantz was called to Washington, D. C., to take up secretarial work. Our prayers shall follow them.

"Out in front of us is the drama of men and of nations, seething, struggling, laboring, dying. Upon this tragic drama in these days our eyes are all set in anxious watchfulness and in prayer. But within the silences of the souls of men an eternal drama is ever being enacted, in these days as well as in others. And on the outcome of this inner drama rests, ultimately, the outer pageant of history. . . . It is the drama of the Eternal Father drawing the prodigal home unto Himself, where there is bread enough and to spare. . . . And always its chief actor is—the Eternal God of Love. Would that we could relove the whole world." (Thomas R. Kelly in A Testament of Devotion). —Corr.

JOHANNESTAL MENNONITE CHURCH

Hillsboro, Kansas

We have again entered another year, and at this writing the first month of the new year is almost past. As a church we have experienced God's kindness in many ways. Our praises and honor go to Him, "the Giver of all good and perfect gifts."

Since no report from our church appeared in The Mennonite during the last months of the year 1941

The fall communion service was observed November 30. The mid-week Bible study class for the young people, which was discontinued during the summer, was again taken up last fall. After Bible study the choir had its weekly practice.

A mission sale was again held on December 12, sponsored by the Ladies Mission Society. It brought $176.00. On the same evening the Juniors brought their reports and the results of the quarter fund. It amounted to $36.00.

Miss Fast also visited us and told of the mission work in China. December 3 our community was saddened by the sudden death of Mrs. H. H. Bartel (age 39). Her obituary appeared in The Mennonite some time ago.

The Cantata, "Chimes of the Holy Night," which was given the previous two years was again sung December 21. December 24 the Christmas story, so old but ever new, was rendered by the various Sunday School classes. The program consisted of music, recitations and playlets. The choir also had its part. It is customary in our church to take an offering on this evening for the support of native helpers in India.
I will try to mention some of the main happenings.

Our church was fortunate in getting Rev. Lester Hostetler for a week of evangelistic meetings, beginning Sunday, November 16, and continuing every evening till November 21. His messages were very interesting, and we trust that many spiritual blessings have come to us through those meetings. Visitors from neighboring churches were present and brought special music.

On November 25 the Mary Martha Circle from the Brudertal church favored the ladies of our church with a Thanksgiving program. This was an exchange program; our ladies gave a program in their church in spring.

Our Sunday School held its election of officers and teachers during the month of December. The terms of the officers and teachers has been changed to nine months, the next election to be held early in fall, so as to get the business and elections over before the Christmas season.

The annual church business meeting was held on December 30. The envelope system for church finances was adopted. The various business transactions closed in a very pleasing way. At this meeting our pastor, Rev. J. M. Regier, was unanimously re-elected for a term of three years. On account of the cold and stormy weather, the watch-night and New Year services were not held.

May the Holy Spirit guide and direct us in all our efforts to help in the kingdom of God. —Corr.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Hitherto the Lord hath helped us; hitherto the Lord has led.

We may say this concerning the past year, and especially the last months when sorrow came to hearts and homes of our congregation. Seven dear members were called home, and how we do miss them, but we know God doeth all things well.

The annual business meeting was held January 14 following a fellowship supper in the church basement. Officers for the new year, 1942, are: President, P. F. Schowalter; vice president, T. C. Boshart; secretary, Mrs. Edna Harms; treasurer, G. E. Schmidt; deacons, A. J. Ledig, J. S. Boshart, Rev. Wiebe and A. K. Toews; trustees, Levi Hirschler, Robert Adler and John Rahu; general Sunday School superintendent, H. H. Reimer; assistant Sunday School superintendent, Albert Schmutz; general C. E. superintendent, Albert Landis; assistant C. E. superintendent, Mrs. Minnie Schmutz.

The treasurer reported a good year financially. The attendance at our Sunday morning services is gratifying. We appreciate the helpful and inspiring messages of our pastor, Rev. Saltzman. At our evening services the various C. E. departments furnish special music.

We are glad to report an increase in the attendance at Bible study and prayer service the last month. At the present time we are studying Paul's Epistle to the Colossians. In these dark and trying days let us be faithful to God and to our church that Christ may have the pre-eminence in our lives. The last Sunday of each month an offering is taken for the Migrant Camp at Shafter. Interest and contributions have increased since Rev. and Mrs. Ummel were here and told us of their work. Contributions are also made to the C. P. S. camps.

Mr. Emil Horsch, nephew of the late Rev. M. M. Horsch, has been seriously ill for several weeks following a major operation. At this writing he shows marked improvement, for which we are grateful.

IN MEMORIAM

MARGARET SOMMERFIELD BULLER was born February 24, 1879, in Marion County, Kansas. In her childhood days she moved with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Sommerfield, into the vicinity of Canton, Kansas.

She was baptized upon the confession of faith on June 6, 1897, by Elder Peter Balzer and became a member of the Alexanderwohl Church. When the Goessel Mennonite Church was organized in 1920, she transferred her membership to this church where she was a faithful member at the time of her death.

On August 24, 1902, she entered into the holy state of matrimony with P. P. Buller. To this union there were born one son and five daughters. There are three grandchildren.

On September 11, 1939, she was paralyzed with a stroke and heart attack. She was taken to the hospital immediately where she remained the entire period of her illness with the exception of short intervals when she was taken to her home. In spite of all her suffering she continued to be patient and to believe in the will of God. She never complained of her distress, but rather she was thankfully concerned with the efforts of those who took care of her. In all she spent about two years in the hospital, where everything by doctors and nurses was done for her that could be done. For this the family is ever so thankful.

For many years the family was privileged to share the joys and sorrows of life with her, for as wife and mother she remains a noble example. Her interest and joy was her family. She was an ardent worker both in the church and in the home. She was of a pious disposition and therefore took life seriously. She spent much time in singing and enjoyed listening to music. Some of her favorite songs were: "Nearer My God To Thee," "Rock of Ages," "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me," and "Abide With Me."

In her sufferings she ripened for eternity. This world could not offer her anything anymore. She desired to go home and be with her Lord. She begged her family not to detain her and not to weep for her. Her solid hold was: "My hope is build on nothing less than Jesus' blood and righteousness." God's grace helped her to endure to the end.

She departed quietly and peacefully on December 31, 1941, at the age of sixty-two years, ten months, and seven days.

She leaves to mourn her family: Otto Buller, Bartlesville, Oklahoma; Mrs. Sophia Unruh, North Newton, Kansas; Mrs. Esther Elbl, Kansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Ella Gaeddert, Chanute, Kansas, and Misses Anna and LaWanda Buller of the home. There also remain to mourn her five sisters and four brothers.

Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. C. C. Wedel at the home, the Rev. Peter Buller and Rev. A. E. Kreider at the Goessel Mennonite Church, and the Rev. J. J. Bauman at the cemetery.

MRS. KATIE SCHUMACHER, daughter of Samuel and Rosins Heer, was born near Mascoutah, Illinois, on October 22, 1870. For several years she had been afflicted with diabetes, and a few weeks ago other complications set in. She passed away at a convalescent home at Belleville, Illinois, at the age of seventy-one years.

On April 16, 1897, she was baptized by Rev. C. H. van der Smissen and received into the fellowship of the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield, where she held her membership until her death.

In 1902 she was joined in marriage with Louis A. Schumacher who preceded her in death in 1934. Seven children were born to this union. One died in infancy.

She leaves to mourn her departure, three sons and three daughters, seven grandchildren, two step-sons, and one brother.

Note: All material should be in the editor's hands at least twelve days before the date of the issue in which it is to appear. According to present plans the next mission number will come out on March 17th. Will all mission workers, please, double-space all typewritten material which they may submit. Since correspondence from non-mission churches cannot appear in this issue, regular correspondents should send in their material accordingly. —Editor

Editorials

By R. Weinbrenner, Beatrice, Nebraska

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Matt. 4:10b

"What harm is there in it?" This is a standard of behavior of far too many who profess to love Christ. The true Christian standard is "How can I serve God with all I am, with all I have, in all I do?" The Christian is not one who does some things religiously; he does all things religiously for the honor and glory of God. For him there is no division of secular or sacred. The Christian realizes that if he were to participate in any habit, any amusement, or in any work which did not fulfill the will of God, he would be serving Satan. Is is my aim to serve God with all I will think, say, and do?

"In the multitude of counsellors there is saftey." Prov. 11:14b

Disagreement need not be ugly. Where it takes place among men who are totally and humbly devoted to Christ, there you find one of the greatest opportunities to grow. However, all too commonly when people disagree each withdraws into a shell of proud self-righteousness from whence he thinks that it is "more blessed to give than to receive." Consequently, many are led to believe that where no obvious disagreement is manifested that there is a sound Christian spirit. Not necessarily. It may mean a lack of watchfulness and a lack of strong personal convictions. We are Christian individuals. This means that each has a distincitve contribution to make. Let us be anxious to speak the truth in love and also be just as willing to receive it in true love.

"If they have called the master of the house, Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of His household." Matt. 10:25b

Is it not true that many Mennonites are so "soft" that they fear persecution more than disloyalty to Christ's teachings and Spirit? Can the disciple of Christ expect to be lifted up on flowery beds of ease while his Master was lifted up on a cross? Men who were very religious and devoted to their nation called Him "Beelzebub." Should we shrink from "coward" and "slacker" when these are hurled at us as we walk the narrow way? Should we not rather follow our Master than seek to be above Him? May I not run away from my cross.

What If They Say

What if they say, "Doesn't the early history of Israel teach that there are righteous wars?"

Some say Yes, while others say No! There is a reason why many devoted Christians are brought into doubt and perplexity by this question.

The Bible, we must remember, is both a revelation of God's will for man, as well as the record of how man responded to His directions. The direct teachings of God are safer for us to follow than the experiences of those who understood and obeyed Him imperfectly. The early history of Israel is a case in point.

God said, "I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians." (Ex. 3:8) Note the equipment they carried: "Your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand. (12:11) Note God's method on conquest: "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord.—The Lord will fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace." (14:13-14) Note carefully that Israel's carnal conflict with Amalek came only after this disobedience. "They tempted the Lord, saying, 'Is the Lord among us, or not?' Then came Amalek and fought with Israel." (17:7-8)

Whence their reliance on carnal weapons? Moses was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts 7:22), no doubt including military science. When he posed as a leader, murdering an Egyptian, "he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them." (vs. 25)

But it was God's plan that God's hand should lead them miraculously. The Egyptian's question, "Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?" (vs. 27) is laden with meaning for us.

"Then fled Moses at this saying" (7:29) into God's school of more perfect obedience. Would God that he had learned it more perfectly. How men insist on leaning on the "arm of flesh"! Does not the Psalmist refer to these sad experiences when he says that God "gave them their requests; but sent leanness into their soul"? (Ps. 106:15) —Walter H. Dyck

"A sense of what is vital comes from fellowship with Jesus Christ and in seeking God's will in our daily affairs." —Swoll Sawyer

RELIEF

FAMINE IN INDIA

The Emergency Relief Board desires to bring the following letter from Missionary P. W. Penner to your attention. It is self-explanatory. The letter, written December 9, 1941, was sent by "air mail" and arrived February 7, 1942.

The board was aware of a possible famine in India early last fall, but we were to be advised by cable if large amounts were necessary to give them effective aid during the winter. This letter, no doubt, takes the place of the cablegram.

Last fall our treasurer sent them a smaller amount. We hope that they received it in due time. He will try to get through to them immediately, if possible, the amount for which they plead.

Besides this famine in India, war conditions create many emergency needs which require sacrifices on the part of those able to give. We hope that Brother Penner's plea will not only move you to contribute more to the needs of India but to all relief work. You have contributed generously to the present. We heartily thank you for this. The Lord rewards the cheerful giver with manifold blessings.

The Mennonite Central Committee has planned its budget with the expectation that the cooperating groups will contribute on a dollar per member basis. Besides the work which your board is doing through the MCC it is planning to extend relief to a larger number of needy and destitute of our own household as well as others among us. For this cause we will need increased contributions. We hope that the Lord will bless you abundantly so that these needs can be met as they present themselves.

We covet your continuous prayer for the work and also for an open way to transmit funds to India and other fields where relief work is carried on.

—John C. Mueller, Sec., Emergency Relief Board

CALL FROM INDIA

Champa, C. P., India, December 9, 1941

Secretary, Emergency Relief Committee
Freeman, South Dakota

Dear Brethren:

Hardly ever before has II Cor. 9:15 loomed up so gloriously as now when the nations are engaged in the most destructive war ever staged. The trouble with Japan has now begun. Who will follow next? May the conditions of the world not effect our inner peace in Jesus Christ.

For the second year almost our entire district (mission area) has been stricken with crop failures. Many fields have not yielded the seed. There is work to do, but the financing is difficult. We cannot begin to think much of the non-Christians; they are too numerous. The most needful, however, we might help. The government has opened a number of relief centers. However, where the population is so dense not much can be effectively achieved.

We are faced by the Christian communities which have come into existence during the progress of the mission. Many of them are so frightfully poor that one doesn't care to see them. They are there; we are to look after them to some degree. How shall one do anything effectively without funds? With them we could open certain phases of manual labor whereby they could earn enough for their daily sustenance. Our principle is to avoid teaching them idleness of which there is so unspeakably much in this country. We could open some projects in which those with able bodies could work. Our government is certainly willing to help lift the multitudes out of a precarious condition.

As Secretary-Treasurer of the General Conference Mennonite Mission, I have been delegated to appeal to the Emergency Relief Board which, under God's guidance, has been doing noble work in war-stricken countries, for help in our particular field. We tried to keep from making this request, but circumstances have developed to such a stage that we find ourselves compelled to ask for help.

This is the plea: Will the board, if at all possible, cable as to whether the money is forth-coming. We have some funds with which to bolster the advance until the actual money will arrive. Could one thousand dollars be cabled before the beginning of 1942? Could another one thousand dollars be sent through airmail by April 1, 1942? Two thousand dollars would be a great help. May God grant us this desire. Prayerfully submitted, hoping to be successful, in the name of the Missionary Conference, P. W. Penner.

RELIEF NOTES

Clothing Shipment to England

The sixth shipment of clothing to England, leaving Akron, Pa., on February 6, was composed of seven cases and weighed 1,563 lbs. The value placed on the clothing was $2,982.25. Over 6000 pieces of men's, women's and children's garments (all new) filled the cases.

Like previous shipments, this one will be stored in the London clothing depot which our Mennonite workers, Brethren John E. Coffman and Peter Dyck, have established. From this point distribution of the clothing will be made as opportunities and needs open.

Winter in France

Fortunately, the winter has not been as severe as it might have been according to reports of past winters. We have had one snowfall, which however, did not remain very long. Since Christmas time we have had a few traces of snow and ice on the streets.

The colder weather makes things much more difficult for everybody. Winter out here brings with it the long lines of people waiting to buy their ration of food, whatever it might be, potatoes, bread, milk, etc. It is a pity to see the undernourished people being forced to stand in lines, sometimes an hour or two at a time. Especially so, when one realizes that their clothing is often worn thread-bare and their homes poorly heated for lack of coal."

The above is an excerpt from the latest letter of Brother Henry Buller, dated January 6, 1942.

A Request for Prayer

Brother Joseph N. Byler's most recent letter from France, January 3, is another chapter in the effort of our workers to do their utmost to meet the needs in France. "All we can do is to work with what we have for the time being and wait developments."

Supplies are assured for some period of time in the future, however, and with this assurance Bro. Byler expresses again the intention of the workers to carry on. His concluding paragraph repeats the need for the prayers of the Church at home and ends with this request: "Pray for us that we will be led in the right direction."

Gratitude from the Aged and Infirm

One of the inmates of "The Woodlands" writes a letter addressed to friends in the Mennonite Church of Canada and U.S.A. The letter expresses gratitude of the members of the home for a service of love which the Mennonite Church, through its relief workers, is doing. Following is a paragraph from the letter written by a Mrs. Lydia Hodgkin:

"Our community in this Hostel numbers about 40, of whom 26 are evacuees, varying in age from a paralyzed lad of 23 to an active lady of 91 years. All have suffered in one way or another from bombing. Some have had relatives killed in the raids, others have had their homes destroyed while they were in them or in shelters nearby. They have met these disasters in London, Birmingham, and Coventry. To be in this peaceful atmosphere, in a district where sirens have seldom sounded, has brought a sense of security, the recovery of shattered nerves and sometimes really better health and vigor."

PEACE SECTION INFORMATION

By J. W. Hoover—member of the M.C.C. and Peace Section Secretary

"The new registration has just been completed for men from 20 to 45 who had not registered before. The same registration procedure was in effect as was used for previous registrations. There are some minor changes in the subsequent procedure for classification and assignment. The latest information on these matters will be sent out very soon. If there are urgent personal questions that are unanswered by the general instructions, we invite you to write to the Secretary of the Peace Section at Akron, Pennsylvania.

"Gradual progress apparently is being made on the bond issue for which we have been hoping. Just as soon as we have definite information, it will be sent out. Meanwhile, we encourage the increased use of the Contributor's Certificate and the Statements of Readiness to Purchase Civilian Government Bonds. These two expedients have proven effective in the relief pressure to buy Defense Bonds in most cases that have come to our attention where they have been wisely employed."

—Members of the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, have paid over $1,000 for fifteen of these certificates (Peace Certificates) which came two weeks ago. More have been ordered.

—Workers' Exchange

—Explanation of certificate and stamp delay: We are very sorry for the disappointment which must have come to many of our pastors when they did not receive the Peace Certificates and Stamps after they had requested them from Rev. P. H. Unruh. The explanation for this delay is that the Mennonite Central Committee was very uncertain about the demands which would be made for them. In order, not to be left with a large amount of unused material, they had ordered and printed material according to estimated needs. The demands far exceeded their expectations. Therefore, it required time to receive new orders for materials from New York and Chicago and to have them printed. By the time this appears in print every one should be able to get all the certificates and stamps they need. —Ernest J. Bohn, Sec. Peace Committee.

—Weeping Water, Nebraska, may become the site of another C.P.S. camp according to reports. Dr. H. A. Fast recently visited this locality.

—Sixteen boys at camp from the Eastern District are distributed as follows: fourteen in military camps and two in C.P.S. camps. This list as given in the C. E. Witness is, undoubtedly, not a complete list of all young men from the Eastern District who are in camp.

—If the boys are to be deprived of their pittance of $1.50 per month, with what are they to buy such sundry articles as postage stamps, razor blades, etc., not to mention clothes? . . . Since the boys are dependent on others then for these sundry articles, is some society or organization going to provide them? Someone will surely have to. It is true, many fellows like my brother have families who are more than willing to supply them; however there are quite a few who have no backing whatsoever, who are dependent upon the camp welfare committee for their very clothing. I am not in favor of depriving the boys of this bit of cash, but since that has been decided, it is my opinion that a plea should be made that they receive that anyhow through some other organization.

—Pacific District Y.P. Representative

—Jesse Hoover recently spoke in the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, to a joint meeting of the First and Second churches of that community. He related that at one of the concentration camps one-half of a fried rat regularly sells for twenty--five cents. Sister Helen A. Penner who is directress of the Convalescent Home at Canet Plage, France, is a member of the Second Church, Beatrice.

—Walter H. Dyck of the Western District Peace Committee has sent out to all pastors forms which when filled out and returned will provide a survey of all young men in army or C.P.S. camps. He writes, "The plan, now being launched, provides for regular visits by men who can understand the draftees and aid them in solving their personal and spiritual problems. Such sympathetic service is to apply, where possible, to boys in direct military service as well as to those in Civilian Public Service camps. They are 'our young men.' We must feel with them, counsel them, pray with them and help them."

—Freeman Junior College: Dr. P. A. Penner is assuming the duties of Bible instructor. Rev J. B. Toews, the former instructor, is taking charge of the Mennonite Brethren Church at Buhler, Kansas. . . . —Rev. Albert Schultz of Butterfield, Minnesota, is to give a series of studies on Mennonite Church polity to all the students of Northwestern Bible School, Minneapolis, Minnesota, during the first three weeks of March. Rev. Schultz says"... may I be able to do it so that men who are preparing for the ministry may get a clear understanding of our convictions, and also of what we as Mennonites stand for."

—Gnadenberg Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas: Benjamin Penner went to the Civilian Public Service Camp at Henry, Illinois, recently. He is the first one to go from our congregation.

—Emmet and Eva Harshbarger write this to former students of Dr. Harshbarger in The Bethel College Bulletin: "We wish to express to you our sincerest gratitude for your overwhelming generosity during the Christmas season. Your gifts have helped materially in easing the financial strain, but beyond that, your concern and good wishes have helped greatly to ease the strain on the spirit. It makes us glad, once again, that we chose Bethel College for our field of service. Your fellowship and helpfulness are indeed precious to us. We pray that in God's good time we may be restored to usefulness to the college and the church. In the meantime we hope that our months in the school of suffering will make us wiser, more patient, and more truly useful in the future."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Albert Schultz, Butterfield, Minnesota

THE PROMISE SERIES

MARCH 1—"I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." Ps. 32:8

Dear Christian, the Lord has promised to keep His eyes on you for today. He will have His eye on you every move you make. You need not grope about in darkness nor feel your way through unknown paths; for He has promised to guide you. He knows the path you are to tread, for He has walked the very path you are asked to walk. He knows the subtle attacks of Satan for He met every onslaught of Satan with the Word, "It is written." He knows what it means to be misunderstood for no one has been as misunderstood as He. He knows what it means to be left alone in a time of great battle and trial, for in that last moment in the garden he struggled all alone while others slept. He knows what it means to suffer for sin for He suffered not for His but for yours and mine. So the Father sent the Comforter to live in us and to guide each day of our life. "Lord, for tomorrow and its needs I do not pray; Keep me, my God, from the stain of sin just for today." HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 2—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee." Isa. 26:3

Do you want to live this day in perfect peace, Christian? Do you want to be calm today even though everything seems to go wrong? Do you want to be in a peaceful state of mind even though the storms of doubt, fear, temptations, wars, bloodshed, and concern about these things are raging? Do you? The same Jesus that stilled the storm which tossed the boat in which the disciples were sailing can do it for YOU. He can still your storms. How? Paul and Silas could sing with bleeding backs, feet in stocks, and back of prison walls. How? Paul could say, "Be of good cheer" to his comrades when he knew that their ship would be wrecked. How could Menno Simons endure criticisms and persecutions of the Roman Church? The secret is found in this verse. It is, "Whose mind is stayed on thee." If you will just lean on the Lord for today you will have perfect peace. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 3—"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with THE RIGHT HAND OF MY RIGHTEOUSNESS." Isa. 41:10

Do you fear some task for to-day? Do you find it difficult to witness for your Lord? Do you fear some temptation that may overpower you? Do you feel weak for the work of the day? Do you as a Christian feel that you are alone in your home, in the school, or in the community? He says "Do not fear: do not get discouraged" for I am your God. I have made you to know your very weakness. He has promised strength and will uphold you with His right hand according to His faithfulness. Moses stood at the Red Sea with the enemy behind him, but he did not fear. Joshua led Israel into the promised land with the enemies in the land, but he remained courageous. Daniel was strengthened to refrain from the king's diet and to face the hungry lions. Paul the greatest of missionaries was held up by God's right hand even with a thorn in the flesh. The same God that took fear from Moses; that gave courage to Joshua; that strengthened Daniel; and upheld Paul will do the same for you today. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 4—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I John 1:9.

As you looked back over the day and saw your failures and sins as a Christian you wondered what could be done about it. Satan was there on the spot at the moment and told you that God could not forgive such sins. This brought you into a state of unbelief, agony, and misery. You do not feel that you dare tell anyone not even your own pastor. Satan sees to it that the truth is kept from you for he can do his best work with unhappy and discouraged Christians. My dear Christian, if you are reading these lines and are burdened because of some sin you have committed will you not right now kneel down and confess your sin? Confess means to "admit." The minute you admit you have sinned you are forgiven by God. You are not only forgiven, but you are cleansed. You may have a dirty handkerchief, but when it is washed or cleansed the dirt is all gone and cannot be found. CONFESS AND BE FORGIVEN AND CLEANSED. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 5—"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." I Cor. 15:58.

After completing a message on the resurrection of the dead and the transformation of the living at the time of Christ's coming the Holy Spirit admonishes Christians to be steadast and unmoveable. Will you be steadfast and immoveable for today? We must not be tossed about by every kind of teaching. There are so many teachings today about Christ, Holy Spirit, Bible, etc. Why gobble everything that comes along? Study the Bible and become settled and firm in the truths of the Word. We do not have to cast aside our convictions on war just because others may not agree with us. Let us be immoveable if it agrees with the Bible. Let us be steadfast and unmoveable in our service. Let me use a few "Don'ts." Don't be a quitter; Don't be a shirker; Don't be a jerker; Don't be a kicker; BUT BE A WORKER. Your service in the Lord is not in vain. The work of our missionaries in India has not been in vain. If you doubt this statement have Dr. Penner come and show the pictures that he has. The work of our missionaries in China has not been in vain. The work of the missionaries among the Indians here in the U. S. is not in vain. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 6—"But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." II Cor. 9:6.

Christian, are you tired of sowing good deeds? Are you sowing seeds of kindness? Are you scattering kind words? Do you hold back words that might help and encourage the discouraged and those that have struggles and trials? Are you stingy with your smiles? Do you give only pennies for missions and for your church, but dollars for business and your home? Don't forget that the day of harvest is coming. That harvest will be in proportion to your sowing. You will ONLY reap as you have sown. Your returns will be according to your investments. You will get as you have given. You will reap as you have sown. If you expect to reap much you must sow much. This verse is of course limited to giving of money, but the application is permissable. If you want something in the next world you will have to send some material ahead of you. You will reap as you sow. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 7—"There hath no temptation taken you but such is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." I Cor. 10:13

After citing the temptations of Israel and informing us that we cannot rely upon our own strength the Holy Spirit assures us that the temptations that come to us are common to man and that these temptations cannot get us because God will make a way of escape and help us to bear under them. You may be tempted today. What will you do? You may be tempted by doubt and many have come to me and have said, "I just can't believe." All you must do is believe God and not force yourself to believe something you want to believe. JUST TAKE GOD AT HIS WORD. You may be tempted by some desire of the flesh or some worldly pleasure. What will you do? Throw yourself on your knees and pray. God will provide a way of escape. He will open the door to safety. The Lord Jesus was tempted by the Devil. There was no desire from within that was urging Him to yield. We have a sinful nature that invites us to yield to sin, but there is a way of escape. God will make a way to escape. HE HAS PROMISED.

MARCH 8—"So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper whereto I sent it." Isa. 55:11.

This is Sunday and workers again have the opportunity of sowing the good seed (Word of God). Have you been tempted as a S. S. worker or pastor to say, "It doesn't pay, there is no use, it is hopeless, no one is appreciative of my services." Have you? God says His Word is like the seed that is seeded and then gives seed to the sower and bread to the eater. There may be some hard hearts that you preach to, but God says, "My Word is like a hammer that breaks in pieces" so just keep on hammering; that hard heart will break. You may have church members that are worldly and not spiritual, but God says, "My Word is like a fire" and so just apply the fire today it will eventually burn out all the dross. "Preach the Word, be instant in season, out of season;" Just keep on teaching and preaching the Word. HE HAS PROMISED.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

DISCOVERING WHY PEOPLE DRINK BEVERAGE ALCOHOL

Gen. 4:34, Ps. 104:14, 15, Prov. 31:4-7, Eccl. 2:1-3, 10,11, Isa. 56:12, I Cor. 10:6,7

TOPIC: The Drinker's Reasons for Using Alcoholic Beverages

Introduction

This lesson is intended to lead to a consideration of reasons why people use intoxicating liquors. This subject demands much thought and investigation. The passages in our lesson give us some idea of reasons for drinking from the drinker's standpoint. People do a good many things because they do not know any better. Doubtless many persons begin drinking alcoholic drinks without realizing the danger to themselves. They surely have opportunity to learn. We need to apply the standards of Christianity to the sins of our age, in our own personal life and work. Drinking alcoholic drinks is one of these sins.

Social Reasons

Joseph prepared a feast for his brothers, providing food and drink in abundance. They were made merry. There is no reason to suppose that any of them became intoxicated. His kindness to them dissipated their fears and cares. It was the Egyptian custom to have such drinks. They did not know any better. Drinking was a general custom in the Old Testament times. They did not have the present-day data relating to the effects of alcohol. They saw its effects.

Many persons start to drink for social reasons—because others do it. They feel embarrassed to decline when others drink at some refined social occasion. They lack the Christian courage to say "no," a rather sad reflection on the quality of their Christianity. The "social glass" starts many young people on the road to ruin.

Wine, a Deceiver

The earth produces man's necessities. Man at times turns them into an evil by his misuse of them. He permits the pure grape juice to become wine and thinks it gladdens the heart. It so affects his mind as to render him foolish, a condition which he mistakes for gladness. Lemuel's mother advises her son (vss. 4-7) to let wine alone as it is not fit for kings and princes. She is setting a high standard. A man is not at his best when he indulges in strong drink. It tends to make one negligent concerning God's law and prevents the better judgment. It deadens the sense of justice. Some turn to drink to help them to forget their troubles, poverty and misery. A reaction always follows which usually is worse than the trouble was to begin with. The "return trip" reveals the folly of drinking.

Solomon is showing by a list of personal experiences, (Eccl. 2:1-3,10,11) that man can find no satisfying and lasting good in mere pleasure, and apart from God. All is vanity, emptiness in its final result. What will mirth contribute to true contentment? He will add wine drinking to his means of pleasure, yet exercising self-control while experimenting with dangerous things. He purposes to see if there be in these things, any real and satisfying benefit which is worth striving for. He withheld no gratification from himself (vs. 10). He enjoyed the pleasures of life in a measure, temporarily. In summing up all, in appraising all at its true value, his conclusion is that all is vain, that there is no lasting pleasure and value in these things. The key words are "no profit under the sun."

The people Isaiah refers to reached the point where drinking strong drink was their chief enjoyment. This is a tragic result of unrestrained indulgence. Paul reminds us that Israel's downfall was caused by her lusting after evil things and failure to trust God. Every normal-minded person knows that strong drink is an evil and should be left alone. Paul urged repentance and regeneration of heart as necessary. In this lies the crux of the entire matter. "Until those who indulge in wine and strong drink are really converted, and accept the dictum of Christianity to "do all things to the glory of God," and are willing to deny the gratification of their appetites, their temperance in not Christian."

What motive do you think leads the most people to begin drinking?

Why do more weak characters than strong characters use strong drink?

THE TOUCH OF THE MASTER'S HAND

By Myra Brooks Welch

'Twas battered and scarred, and the auctioneer
Thought it scarcely worth his while
To waste much time on the old violin,
But held it up with a smile.
"What am I bidden, good folks," he cried,
"Who'll start the bidding for me?"
"A dollar, a dollar," then, "Two! Only two?
Two dollars, and who'll make it three?
Three dollars, once; three dollars, twice;
Going for three—" But no,
From the room, far back, a gray-haired man
Came forward and picked up the bow;
Then, wiping the dust from the old violin,
And tightening the loose strings,
He played a melody pure and sweet
As a caroling angel sings.

The music ceased, and the auctioneer,
With a voice that was quiet and low,
Said: "What am I bid for the old violin?"
And he held it up with the bow.
"A thousand dollars, and who'll make it two?
Two thousand! And who'll make it three?
Three thousand, once, three thousand, twice,
And going, and gone," said he.
The people cheered, but some of them cried,
"We do not quite understand
What changed its worth." Swift came the reply:
"The touch of a master's hand."

And many a man with life out of tune,
And battered and scarred with sin,
Is auctioned cheap to the thoughtless crowd,
Much like the old violin.
A "mess of pottage," a glass of wine;
A game—and he travels on.
He is "going" once, and "going" twice,
He's "going" and almost "gone."
But the Master comes, and the foolish crowd
Never can quite understand
The worth of a soul and the change that's wrought
By the touch of the Master's hand.

The above is the challenge of our Lord and Saviour, and that is the challenge that sent us to India and is keeping us here. India was going and almost gone, till the Master came and Wm. Carey proclaimed Him. We are here at His bidding following in the trail of Wm. Carey, Alexander Duff, John Forman, Dr. Ida Scudder, P. A. Penner, and J. F. Kroeker.

Many of you have been remembering us in your prayers. No greater support can you give than that of releasing divine power through prayer. Some of you have been staunch financial supporters. Money is essential. This work will be curtailed if money is not coming. Some of you have been sending Bible pictures and cheering letters. We rejoice in the pictures sent by Miss Elva Schrock, Miss Emma Geisinger, and Mrs. Jacob Solt. Many letters have come from California, Kansas, Idaho, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and elsewhere. O, how can we thank you sufficiently for all these remembrances!

The Local Christian Community: You should see the Janjgir congregation at worship. Almost any Sunday, winter or summer, rain or shine, the building is crowded to the doors with dozens of children seated on the floor near the pulpit. Perhaps, our biggest contribution is the moral support and the silent guidance which we give. Two ordained Indian ministers (Rev. M. R. Asna is Elder) take turns preaching, and the pastoral work load is theirs.

You should see the Sunday School. This busy bee hive is superintended by Mrs. Moyer. Eagerly old men and young maidens take active part. Capable Indian laymen and laywomen render indispensible help in these Sunday Schools as well as in the church.

During this year's Rainy Season Bible Course more than one hundred, ages fifteen to fifty-five, sat daily for one or more classes, for five days a week, for four consecutive weeks, studying Jeremiah and Thessalonians. Could you have heard their testimonies, you would have been thrilled when the otherwise glum face of Ratan, a new convert, began to shine after learning the Bible stories, and when Baharta, a convert of five years standing, after learning his lessons declared, "Now the ordinary farmer has a chance to learn the Bible also, and not only the big folks." Thirty-six more were enrolled this year than last. Forty-two more had a perfect attendance record.

Workers for the harvest: The training of workers has engaged our time. "He who does a good deed is not quite as fruitfully employed as he who multiplies the doers." Thus, we are supplying "seed to the sower and bread for" the many spiritually hungry in 356 different villages in our area where no Christian worship has yet been established.

Building upon their previous school and life experiences, they are trained-in-service in the church and evangelism even as Christ trained His disciples in service. They are put into various kinds of situations where they are challenged to make good. Counsel is given when they are in tight places or stumble. The young men must be able to walk twenty miles to distant villages. They must learn typewriting and bookkeeping, for the church needs church treasurers and secretaries. They must be mentally alert, so we, like St. Paul, are concerned "about the book and parchments." I wish you could see Sukhwara Bai and Gageschwar Bai, my wife's helpers, and could appreciate the struggles, growth, and change in Laurence, my disciple. Money has been needed to keep them in service, and when we have none, we know of no other place to go than to our knees in our prayer rooms. —Samuel, Teddy, and Metta Moyer

Mennonite Youth in the Present Crisis

I

Have you ever thought of the special way in which the present world turmoil effects youth? Some years ago a young man speaking to an older group of persons said something like this: "We young people may not be important. We are not lawmakers nor leaders in business. Our notions may often be foolish and immature. But in wartime we are the ones who bear the greatest burden; we are supposed to pay the costs."

With the outbreak of conflict our country is making all efforts to mobilize minds, men, and resources for the prosecution of war. A very important measure in this program is the conscription of all able-bodied men into military service. This was started with the passage of the Burke-Wadsworth Bill in September, 1940.

As Mennonite youth we hardly need to be told that the above law involves us in a very direct way. Some one has said that the Christian is faced with three possible choices in this crisis:

(1) He may feel forced to choose between two evils. That is, war is an evil but so is Naziism. He can choose war which to many people is the lesser evil.

(2) He may feel that war is not necessarily evil if it is fought for Christian ideals such as freedom and justice. Therefore he would support it.

(3) He may feel that war is ever and always wrong, cannot be fitted into the Christian way of life and that he must therefore refuse to support it in any way whatever.

As Mennonite young people we will see that the third possible choice is the only one that can be ours if we want to be loyal to the four-hundred year old principle of non-resistance as held by our Church.

It would be very interesting to trace the long story of the way in which Mennonites have sacrificed, struggled, and suffered to keep this principle alive through the centuries. In centuries past they have migrated from Holland to Prussia to Russia and then to the United States and Canada; from Switzerland they have migrated to Germany and then to the United States. A recently published book entitled, For Conscience Sake, tells the story of Mennonite migrations that resulted from the World War.

To trace this story would take us rather far afield but it should be mentioned in passing in order to remind ourselves that this is not the first time that our faith has been challenged and tested.

What will the present emergency do to test our faith? Doubtless, we are all more or less familiar with the way our democratic government has recognized those individuals whose conscience conflicts with the program of conscription. A recent issue of a nationally known magazine refers to the Civilian Public Service camps as a footnote to the history of American tolerance and dedication to the dignity and freedom of the human conscience.

One of the provisions of the Burke-Wadsworth Bill states that "Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form." It further states that any person who is opposed to both combatant and noncombatant service is to be assigned to "work of national importance under civilian direction."

On February 6, 1941, President Roosevelt approved an order which authorized the Director of Selective Service to "establish, designate, or determine work of national importance" to which Conscientious Objectors may be assigned.

II

Before we discuss the practical way in which the government and the Church have cooperated to solve the problem which the Mennonites and other peace groups have created let us first try to understand some of the deeper reasons for our position.

The Sermon on the Mount as well as the other teachings of Christ remind us forcefully that we as Christians are to return good for evil. "My Kingdom is not of this world else would my servants fight." A recent book entitled, "Can Christians Fight," by Brother Guy F. Hershberger would be very profitable reading for Mennonite young people in just such a time as this. Among the many points emphasized in this work it is pointed out that the Christian in refusing to fight has positive emphasis rather than negative emphasis. That is, the Christian is not satisfied merely to withhold physical affliction from his enemy. In keeping with Christ's teaching he seeks to render service of good-will. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." This is a bold and very challenging thing to do, but as a Christian it is one's duty to do just this sort of thing.

Some one has said that the term "Non-Resistance" is after all merely the negative side of this great force we call Christian love. While Christ's commandments tell us definitely those things which we should not do, the greater emphasis is placed on the things we should do. In this connection it would be very profitable to study the Sermon on the Mount, for example, to see where Christ lays the great emphasis—on the positive or negative side of our thinking and doing.

It is this positive emphasis that we as young people should especially find challenging. Have you ever thought that the Civilian Public Service camps offer a splendid opportunity for the expression of just such a positive emphasis in our religion?

III

What are some ways in which the Civilian Public Service gives Mennonite youth an opportunity to express their devotion to Christ and His way of peace in a positive way?

(1) By engaging in soil conservation activities and forestry service the C. P. S. camps will be making a definite contribution to national welfare. Consider the following facts regarding American soil:

> Erosion has ruined or seriously damaged 280 million acres—roughly fifteen percent. . . .
> Erosion is seriously damaging 775 million acres more. . . . More than one-half the land area of the United States is in need of erosion control. . . .
> Of the cropland now being used only about 62 million acres are at once really good farm land and safe from erosion.
> Here are some facts regarding our forests and flood conditions:
> The nation's forests are being used up twice as fast as they are being replanted. . . .
> There are 185 million acres of farm woodland in the United States of which less than one percent is managed so as to yield the best returns. . . .
> The Forest Service estimates that only about 20 percent of the forest of the United States are being managed wisely. . . .
> It is a recognized fact that 740 million tons of soil are dumped into the Gulf of Mexico each year. . . .
> The best estimates point out that erosion is costing the nation $3,844,000,000 annually.

In the C. P. S. camps scientific methods will be used to prevent some of these enormous losses to the soil and to restore it again to its original fertility. The forest service work of the C. P. S. will seek to preserve and build up the nation's forest and lumber resources. Does not this express our positive Christian faith, even in this material way?

(2) By serving the country in a C. P. S. camp a young man can acquire training and attitudes which will make him a better citizen and a better neighbor. He will acquire skills and learn lessons in tolerance and cooperation which will enable him to be of valuable service in the future. C. P. S. camps can do much to instill a "conservation" philosophy into the minds of the campees.

IV

Besides these physical and civic benefits to the country C. P. S. camps present a unique opportunity to the campees for promoting their own personal growth and deepening their Christian experience. In addition to day's work in field or forest or camp there will be a planned course of instruction in several fields of study. Major emphasis in the educational program will be placed on units of work dealing with Mennonite history and the Mennonite heritage. After his stay in camp a young man should know more of the Mennonite faith and way of life than he did when he entered camp.

Already most of the camps are reporting that hobbies, first aid training, chorus singing, woodworking, etc., are being offered to the campees. Certainly, a young man with the ambition to develop his powers will not fail to avail himself of these opportunities.

But the greatest benefits which the C. P. S. camps could give to a young man are the opportunities to enrich his Christian experience by fellowship and Christian service. To live with others in such an intimate way can teach every young man the need for tolerance and respect for others. The challenge to live the Christian life will be stronger than one might expect in even such an environment. The camps will be provided with a chapel; worship and Sunday School will be a part of the Sunday's program and during the week Bible School classes or similar classes will provide chances for genuine spiritual growth.

The above is an introduction to the problem facing Mennonite youth in the present crisis. It has also sought to show the way in which the Church has cooperated with the government in the solution of this problem.

In following issues will appear articles written by informed persons who will give a picture of the particular camp with which they are connected. It is hoped that these articles will prove not only informative but will inspire all of us to a whole-hearted devotion to Christ and His way of peace.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

DEVOTIONAL TRAINING SERIES

WORSHIP IN PRIVATE

Matt. 6:5-8; John 5:39

Program for March 8, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "There Is a Place of Quiet Rest," No. 239; "Day Is Dying in the West," No. 31.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Group singing of songs of devotion and consecration.

4. Offering for foreign missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"This Way Lies Heaven" might well be the topic today instead of "Worship in Private." The privilege to meet God, to walk with Him, to talk with Him, and to commune with Him is, indeed, the way to come close to heaven. It is said of Abraham that God talked to him as "friend to friend." Such close fellowship includes prayer (worship, praise, thanksgiving, petition) meditation, and the still small voice of God speaking to us. Too often we are the ones who want to do all the talking and then go off in a hurry. Then we wonder why we fail to see much meaning or blessing in private worship. It is literally true that it "takes time to be holy." However, it is true that when we do take time "He walks with us, He talks with us and He tells us we are His own."

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

Praying in prison, Acts 16:23-25; Jesus at prayer, Luke 6:12; Grateful worship, John 9:35-38; Praying alone, Matt. 26:39.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What does Jesus say about prayer? 2. In what ways does God speak to us? 3. What things have happened in answer to prayer?

V. Facts for Study:

Living is the greatest of all arts and no one can do it well who does not continually draw his inspiration from the Giver of Life. To live successfully one must have faith, and that comes from the Author and Finisher of Faith. To keep on efficiently in work we need Him who says, "I am the Bread of Life." To find sweet rest and comfort we must discover that the "Good Shepherd" is willing and able to provide it. He is "abundantly able" to supply all our needs if we but keep close to Him. Worship in private gives us that opportunity.

Again and again it is recorded that Christ went alone to pray, that he used the night or the early morning for such prayer. He could speak to the Father in the midst of His work as when the Greeks came to Him and in times of special stress and strain. He kept close to God at all times. God will honor our desires and efforts to keep close to Him. He loves us and is willing to call us His children.

VI. Illustration:

There are people who offer the petition, "Thy will be done," almost under breath as not daring to mean it. A lady who had an only child said to a friend, "I do not dare to pray, 'Thy will be done,' because I am afraid God will take away my little boy, or will send me some heavy trial." To which the friend replied: "Suppose your child should come to you and say: 'I want to be and do just as you desire today,' would you say to yourself, 'Now is my opportunity to make this child do all the disagreeable duties I want done. I will just take advantage of his willingness to please me by cutting off his pleasures today!'" "No, no," said the mother, "I would give him the best day I could possibly plan." To which statement, Mrs. Smith said, "And can you think that God is less just and loving than you?"

Mar. 1 Why Observe the Lenten Season
Luke 14:25-33

"Lent, (meaning Spring), a Christian fast in preparation for Easter. It begins on Ash Wednesday, a day which derives its name from a still prevailing Catholic custom of putting blessed ashes on the heads of the faithful to remind them that they are dust and that unto dust they shall return. The original fast of forty hours honored the time between Christ's death and the resurrection. In 420 the fast had increased to thirty-six days. These were gradually changed to forty days in commemoration of our Lord's fast in the desert. Observance of Lent is much more uniform today than in early times, when there were no dietary restrictions, and when good works and alms were merely recommended as a pious practice. The carnival of the Mardi Gras immediately preceded Lent."

The two parables found in the scripture for the topic of March 1st are peculiar to Luke. They are the parables of the Rash Builder and the Rash King. The crowd that follows Jesus in the twenty-fifth verse is inclined to believe that Jesus is the Messiah, and expect to reap great benefits from their discipleship. However, Jesus warns them that they must expect persecution and even death, and that those who cannot make a complete separation from earthly affections, and ambitions had better turn back while there is yet time.

The first lesson in Christ's school is self-denial.
—M. Henry

Self-denial is a kind of holy association with God; and by making Him your partner interests Him in all your happiness. —Boyle

They that deny themselves for Christ, shall enjoy themselves in Christ. —J. M. Mason

Psalm 63:6 Meditation—When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

His Presence Came Like Sunrise

I met God in the morning,
When my day was at its best,
And His presence came like sunrise,
Like a glory in my breast.

All day long the presence lingered;
All day long He stayed with me;
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them
Brought to us a peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I too had loosed the moorings
With the presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret
Learned from many a troubled way:
You must seek Him in the morning
If you want Him through the day.

—Ralph S. Cushman
F. H. Revell, Co.

Confession—Be not ashamed to confess that you have been in the wrong. It is but owning what you need not be ashamed of—that you now have more sense than you had before, to see your error; more humility to acknowledge it, more grace to correct it. —Seed

Intermediates, let us sincerely try during this Lenten season to become better Christian Endeavorers by setting aside more time for prayer and Bible reading, more time for service to others, and then we shall really observe Lent in the proper spirit.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

For March 8, 1942

I WILL ACCEPT CHRIST — Acts 16:27-34

A Decision Meeting

Even in early age, we are asked to make a choice or decision. In every day life it is perhaps in the choice of a book, a lesson, a friend, a piece of work, a time to do it in, or even a garment to wear, a time to eat, or any other countless number of things we do in a day.

Today we begin a series of lessons on "What It Means to Decide for Christ." These topics are put directly into the language of the Juniors. "I will accept" is the first step, but it goes much farther than just a mere statement, behind it, is the knowledge of who Jesus Christ is—the Saviour: a sorrow for sin, and an asking that it be forgiven; a desire to be known as a follower of Jesus. All this is included when one says, "I choose, I accept, I decide for, I take Jesus Christ as my Saviour." The importance of a right beginning is the theme of this lesson. Every Junior cannot be without a definite idea of the meaning and method of the Christian life.

The Question Bee

This month we are asking you Juniors to supply your own answers. No answers are quoted to the questions we suggest. Your leaders will tell you if you are right or wrong.

1. What do you understand in this statement, "To believe with the head and not with the heart?"
2. Name three Bible examples who believed on the Lord Jesus and confessed Him before men.
3. Identify: Cornelius, the Philippian jailor, Peter, the Ethiopian Eunuch.

The Prayer List

(a) Wisdom to make right choices, (b) a willingness for the people of our land to turn to God, (c) Grace and strength to be a good follower, (d) Concern for our fellow men, and (e) Bring others to Christ.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH

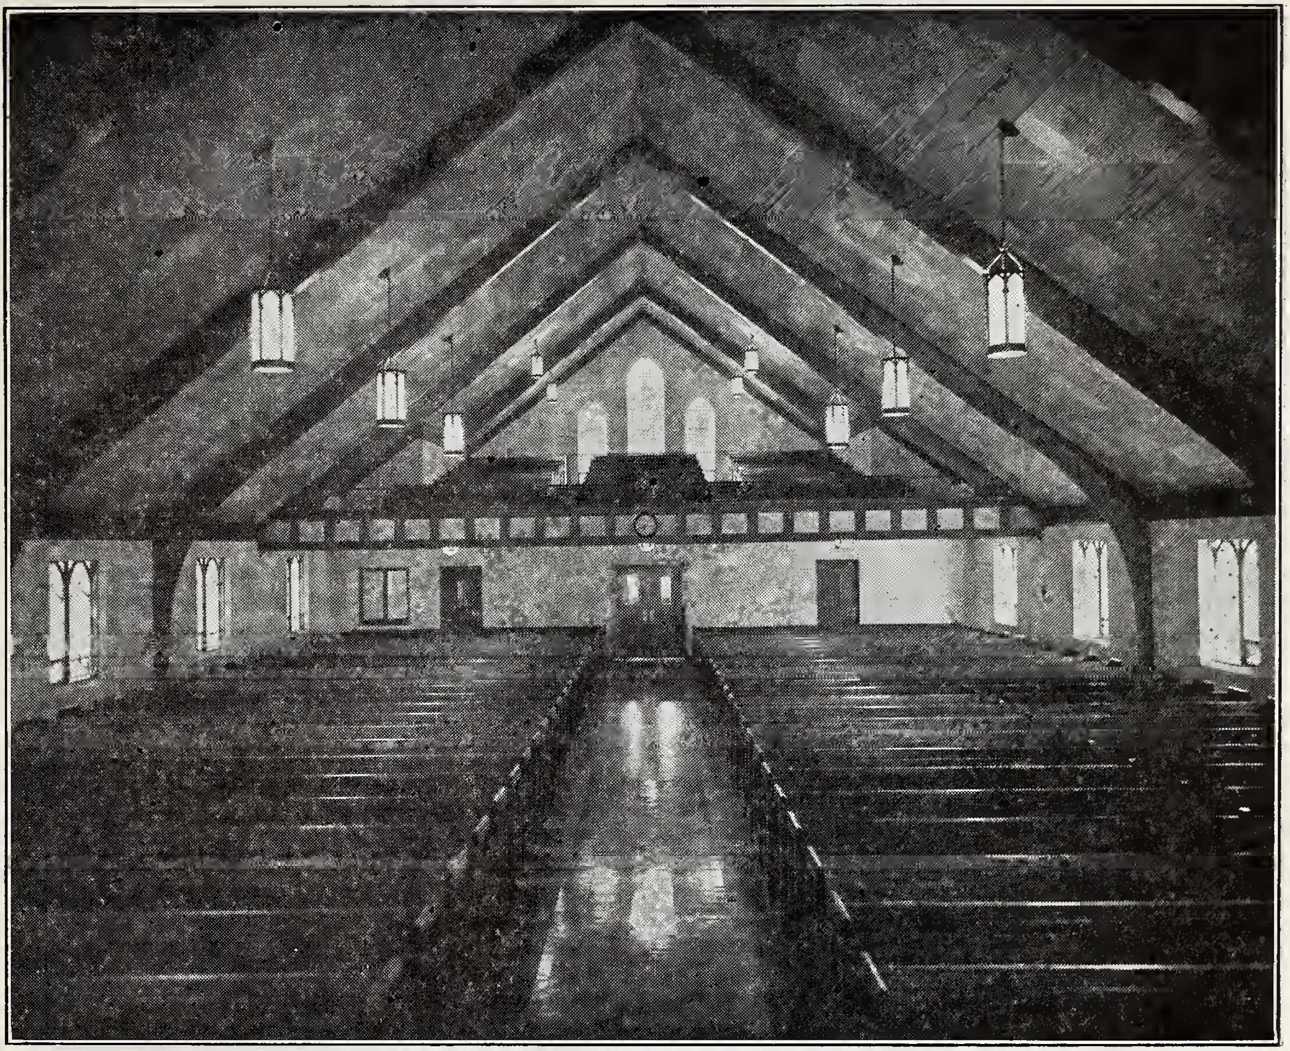
Mountain Lake, Minnesota

EBENEZER, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped." This is the feeling with which the Bethel congregation of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, gathered at the new church building Sunday morning, February 1, 1942. The service for the opening of the church doors was held in the church basement. After the congregation had entered the church, an appropriate service for the dedication followed. The pastor, Rev. Erland Waltner, was in charge and Dr. P. A. Penner spoke the dedication sermon and ritual.

In the afternoon a special service was held for the people of the community at which time thirteen ministers gave greetings on behalf of their congregations, who joined with Bethel on this happy occasion. In a brief message Dr. H. A. Fast brought before the audience the challenge to the Bethel congregation with special emphasis on this question to the young people: "Who will be the first one to answer the call of the Lord with the words of Isaiah, 'Here am I, send me'?" This was followed by the dedication of the new pipe organ and a recital played by Mrs. Gerhard Wiens.

The evening service was in charge of the Bethel mission societies with Mrs. P. R. Schroeder as chairman. Especially challenging and soul-gripping were her final remarks. She reminded the audience that many questions about the new building, about the style of architecture, and about other congregational problems had been answered, but there were unanswered questions, chief among which is the one each must answer himself. That is the question Pontius Pilate asked, "WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?"

Former sons and daughters of the Bethel church who came home from a distance to participate in the programs were Dr. P. A. Penner, (Mrs. Penner also participating), Dr. H. A. Fast, Rev. John C. Peters, Mrs. P. R. Schroeder, Miss Aganetha Fast, Mrs. Herbert R. Schmidt, and Mrs. Gerhard Wiens. A spirit of happiness, rejoicing, and gratitude prevailed throughout the day. The community and friends from out of town shared in the raising of a thank-offering at each service. The forenoon offering for



PICTURE OF INTERIOR OF THE BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH

This picture was taken from the pulpit of the new Bethel Mennonite Church in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and shows the broad expanse of the new building. Seating over 950 people comfortably, the new church was completely equipped with new oaken pews. The beauty of the interior can be realized through this picture. The floor is of asphalt tile, and the ceiling is made up of variegated colors of an acoustical material. Exposed beams support the roof which is twenty-eight feet from the floor. The lighting fixtures are of wrought iron and stained glass and were made in the various metal working shops of Mountain Lake, largely by volunteer labor. C. J. Brown photo. missions was $504.00; in the afternoon for the building it totaled $1,112.00, and the evening's collection of $311.15 was for the latter purpose, too. The financial standing of Bethel congregation as a result of the new church may be of interest to the many friends throughout the country. Here follows an itemized account:

Approximate total cost of the building and furnishings	$56,000.
Cash contributions at time of this writing	31,636.79
Amount pledged, but not yet due	9,000.

The new church building stands as a monument to the grace of God. It is a work permitted of God to be done by men; to GOD be the glory and to HIM the praise. Although beautiful to behold, it would hold no charm for our immortal souls if it were not for the presence of GOD and the preaching of HIS word. It is the prayer of the congregation that all who enter its chambers will be brought into the saving knowledge of our LORD and SAVIOUR.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH OF MOUNTAIN LAKE, MINNESOTA

Here is a picture of the new $56,000 Bethel Mennonite Church in Mountain Lake, Minnesota. The new church was dedicated Sunday, February 1, with appropriate services. The new structure is one of the biggest Mennonite churches in North America, seating around 1,000 people in the main auditorium. The structure is built of light colored brick, faced and trimmed with stone. It has an asbestos shingle roof. The tower, which stands at the southeast corner of the building rises a majestic forty feet above the ground. The main doors are at the east. The building is 50 x 113 feet in dimension and has a full basement. Local contractors constructed the church. They are W. H. Regier and J. L. Quiring. The plumbing and heating was completed by A. J. Penner, and the electrical work was done by J. A. Warkentin. The building was started in June, 1941, and completed on schedule. C. J. Brown photo. Cut courtesy Mountain Lake Observer.

The Cross of Christ

Some Mennonites no longer seem to believe in bearing the cross of Christ. They seem to have little sympathy with or knowledge of that stand of our forefathers which made the birth of our denomination an extremely bloody one. The thought of "much tribulation" is unpleasant to them. Tribulation doesn't fit in with participation in neighborhood and town clubs which are tuned to the wild notes of nationalism. It doesn't fit in with the prosperity of business that depends upon the unruffled good-will of those who are rushing down the stream of worldly thought and feeling. It doesn't fit in with the many dollars of lucrative defense jobs. It doesn't fit in with popularity and "hail-fellow-well-met-ism". It is held to be out-dated, unsuitable to modern life. And so some assert: "Certainly, one can get to heaven without getting everybody down upon you." "Let us do our share." "Let's avoid trouble." And thus in the life plans of some there is no room for the cross of Christ. He alone is to carry it.

Menno Simon said, ". . . for it can never be otherwise as you well know, than that all who would hear, follow and enter through the right door, Christ Jesus, and would walk upon the highway to eternal life in the light of Christ, must first deny themselves, and all they are, with the whole heart. They must, in all misery, ignominy and trouble, take upon themselves the pressing cross, and must follow the rejected, outcast, bleeding and crucified Christ, as he himself said, 'If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me.' Yes all who do not stand prepared to take up this grievous life of the cross and trouble, and hate not father and mother, son, daughter, husband and wife, houses, land, money, goods and life, cannot be Christ's disciples." These are the words of one after whom we are named. These words express the spirit of One who left all and gave His life that the will of His Father might be done.

True servants of God walk the narrow way and bear the cross. John the Baptist reproved Herod and lost his life. Stephen preached to men who upheld an empty religion until gnashing their teeth they smashed his body with stones. Paul couldn't preach the gospel without bearing the cross of Christ. Christ the blameless Son of God was nailed to the cross, while Barabbas was freed. Can the disciples of Christ be above their Master? Can they be like Him and yet not bear the cross?

Hardship is inevitable for the true Christian, for he must let his light shine. Light and darkness are so different that they must always clash. Let no one say that the light of Christ shines so brightly in the majority of those around us that our own light cannot and need not be distinguishable. The world is not that good. As the light of the children of God pierces into the darkness of Satan's children there is conflict. Through his children Satan hisses and stabs at the children of God. Can it ever be otherwise in the struggle between good and evil?

Furthermore, let no one be deceived as to the source of most persecution. It was not the vast multitude who made little or no profession of religion who made Christ bear the cross. Rather it was a group of men who professed great love for God and country, but who had not the spirit of God in their hearts, who nailed Him to the cross. Where man doesn't know God there is dreadful darkness. However, where man professes to know God and doesn't there is the most terrible darkness imaginable. Those who pretend to be holy and aren't are the greatest persecutors. Are all the professions of Christianity in America sincere ones? If they are not, then God's true children can expect the gnashing of teeth and more if they let their light shine like Stephen did. Persecution breeds in the rottenness of hypocrisy, and there is much of the latter.

Jesus made it very clear that it is more blessed to be righteous and persecuted than to be righteous and free from persecution. Matt. 5:10-12. In fact, doesn't Jesus imply that it is impossible to be righteous and not be persecuted? The prophets of God at least, found this to be true.

Persecution is a blessing. It purges one of sinful dross. It purifies one by helping one to eliminate those things which are inconsistent with the belief for which one suffers dearly. It makes us look to God for approval and help. It weans us from earth. But it is more than an individual blessing. The persecution which plunged Felix Manz beneath the waves and which made many Mennonites pilgrims searching the earth for religious freedom has given us our heritage. Had men and women so toned down their righteousness in those by-gone years that they had not been persecuted, then we today might embrace that kind of Christianity which extols the love of God and yet says, "to hell with the enemy." They who are persecuted keep the torch of pure religion burning. The way we uphold our heritage amidst persecution will very largely determine the spiritual life of those who may live after us.

May we be true to the faith of our fathers. Let us eagerly accept Jesus' positive promise of the Kingdom of Heaven to those who are persecuted for righteousness sake. It is necessary that the Christian suffer. Phil. 1:29. —rw.

What If They Say

What if they say, "Would it not have been impossible for Israel to possess Caanan apart from the use of the sword?"

Israel's entry into Caanan, we must remember, was not intended to be a conquest. It was to Isaac, to Jacob, and to Israel that the Lord repeated the promise to Abraham regarding the "land that I will shew thee." Caanan belonged to Israel since the day the Lord made the promise to Abraham. Through Joshua the promise was repeated. God said, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." God's call to Israel was to possess what they already owned.

In the possessing of Jericho obedience "won the battle." God said, "I have given into thine hand Jericho." In it they enjoyed the blessings of the promise: (Ex. 23:20-33) "Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared.—If thou shalt indeed obey—then will I be an enemy unto thine enemies.—I will cut them off.—I will send my fear before thee.—I will send hornets before thee.—By little and little I drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land."

"But," you will say, "Didn't God command Israel to destroy the enemy?" Yes, this was the level on which they lived—the only language they could imagine God to speak. There are other instances in scripture in which men interpreted their own desires as the will of God. But granted, for the sake of argument, that God asked Israel to be the weapon by which He meted out judgment upon other nations, we still lack convincing proof that this was the only way by which Israel might have possessed their possession. God finally permits men their own way even though He knows it will not be the best for them. A father also sometimes says to the son, "Go ahead, have your own way," hoping that the child will learn an intended lesson! —Walter H. Dyck

MINUTES OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

The minutes of the General Conference have been at the printers since last November. However the following information has reached me from the Herald Publishing Company.

"We wish to inform you that we have started on the minutes of the conference. On October 1 we placed the order for paper, but to date this paper has not been delivered. The latest information that we have is that the paper will be here April 1."

Consequently the printing of the minutes may be delayed considerably. The delay is due to the war.

A SUGGESTION

Greetings to the editor and the readers of The Mennonite with Hebrews 13:8, "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, yea and forever."

Since I am unable to attend meetings and to worship with Christian friends, I have received during the past year many sympathy cards and Christmas, New Years, and birthday greetings. All of them have been a great comfort and encouragement to me and to the family. I accept each of them as an expression of love and sympathy and herewith thank the senders very sincerely.

When I read these greetings and meditate upon them, I realize the greatness of the word of God in which so many different and fitting passages are to be found for the occasion and also for the time. I feel that I should send "thank you" cards for all these greetings. However, since I read Mrs. P. W. Penner's appeal to send nickels instead of Christmas cards, I will give my nickels for that purpose as a special gift in gratitude for the expressions of love which I have received.

I believe Mrs. Penner wishes to encourage self-denial in little things. This would help our missionaries to do great things with the little savings which parents and children in the homeland made. If we have compassion with the multitude of hungry people as Jesus did before He fed five thousand and at another time four thousand, we will surely do everything that is possible to feed the many hungry people in our mission field.

The Treasurer of our Foreign Mission Board, Brother J. E. Regier, will be glad to forward such gifts, if specified for this purpose by the donor, for relief in India. In doing this we follow the example of Jesus and of the first Christians in a way which is well-pleasing unto the Lord, who at the day of judgment will say to those who ministered unto needy people, "Verily I say unto you, in as much as ye did it unto one of these, my brethren, even the least, ye did it unto me."

May the Lord Jesus bless every giver and every gift which is given to our missionaries who minister unto those who are in spiritual and material need is my sincere prayer. Gratefully yours, Franz Albrecht, Beatrice, Nebraska, Jan.29, 1942.

RELIEF

A PRAYER OF THANKSGIVING

For the beauties all around us
We thank Thee, Lord;
With our grateful hearts and voices
We thank Thee, Lord.

Let our lives be pure and fitting
To reflect the beauty of the earth,
And to honor our Creator
And Jesus Christ, the Son of God.
Let our lives be kind and joyful
Always giving Thee the praise;
Doing good as did the Saviour
Loving neighbor; also enemies.
Let our lives be true and loving
Helping Thee bear the cares of earth,
We would aid but how we know not
Show us ways of useful service.

For Thy protecting Hand above us
We thank Thee, Lord;
For the everlasting Arms beneath us
We thank Thee, Lord.

"Inasmuch"

By Jesse Hoover

Nearly eight months ago we opened a new project, in France, which marked the beginning of a new phase of work. It was the beginning of our efforts to do something in relation to the dire need in the concentration camps. The opening of our children's convalescent colony at Canet Plage was our proposed contribution to a need that was almost stupefying in its size. The personnel who were then on the field felt that such a colony as we visualized might make a rather significant contribution to a task which seemed utterly beyond our strength.

In the slightly more than six months' period in which I had the privilege of seeing the colony in operation, from its opening in April until I left France in early November, the results were far beyond our most fanciful hopes. Over one hundred and fifty children have had an opportunity to get a new grip on life during their stay at the colony which averaged a month to six weeks.

The most striking and most reliable confirmation of the good accomplished comes from the commandant of one of the largest of the concentration camps from which we take the children. He has said repeatedly, to myself as well as to others, that he cannot understand how we are able to make such a great change in these children in such a short time. The contrast in the condition of the children when they leave the camp for our colony, with their appearance when they return from our care, is almost unbelievable according to the commandant. This is also confirmed by the resident Swiss nurse in the camp, who wants to know our "secret".

The methods are simple and obvious. There are no mysteries about them. First, we give the children the best food possible under the difficult circumstances. It is rather coarse and very simple food, but certainly many times better than what they get in the camps. Then we give them beds that are clean and comfortable, although very simple. One of the salient differences is that we try to keep them free from pests which are so terribly and distressingly common in the camps. I have seen the Swiss nurse crush crawlers creeping in broad daylight over the sick babies' cribs in the nursery hospital in the camp. Even in this hospital barrack it is utterly impossible to control these parasites. Needless to say, we have our own difficulties along this line in our colonies. But up to the present we have been fairly successful in keeping the pests under control.

But perhaps the greatest factor of all in our efforts in re-building these children, is the home-like atmosphere that we try to maintain in our colony. That is the basis for our naming it a "Convalescent Home." We try to promote the sympathy and kindliness of a real home for these unfortunate little ones. Many of them can scarcely recall what a real home is like. Most of their lives have been spent in the horrid concentration camps. There is almost no remembrance of happy, normal life at home. It is small wonder then that so often their faces when they first come to us, are care-worn, old-looking and unhappy. The ring of normal childish laughter is so ominously absent. The crushing cares of the older folks have been foisted upon these helpless innocents. It is one of the most noticeable and most encouraging signs of our success, that the normal happy and carefree attitude of childhood is at least in part restored when they are with us for a brief time.

Upon the testimony of the camp officials we base our above statement, that this venture in relief of children from the camps has succeeded beyond our fondest expectations. They wistfully suggested that they wished it would be possible for us to do as much for all of the children in the camps. This is of course impossible. The task is too large to assume.

But on the strength of the immensely gratifying responses received on this our first venture at assistance of the great concentration camps, we decided to expand this phase of our program as much as possible. Accordingly, we secured the rent-free use of a site specially constructed for a summer colony for underprivileged children. It is located at Port Vendres, one of the cities where we have formerly had package distributions. It is along the Mediterranean coast, only a few miles from the border of Spain; surrounded by the rugged Pyrenees mountains, and fronted by the precipitous, rocky cliffs of the seashore. It is a most lovely spot, looking out over an inlet of the beautiful blue of the "Cote Vermeille" to the extremely ancient, historic port of Collioure, one of the most picturesque of all the old cities in southern France.

Right at the back of the colony, within easy walking distance, is the newer and thriving city of Port Vendres. This is the chief commercial link between the extreme south of France and the African coast. By virtue of its position, it has become a very important little port. There is of course a distinct advantage in our being situated so close to a commercial center. For the problem of obtaining supplies is one of the most difficult that we have in France.

There is sufficient room in this colony for upwards of one hundred and fifty children, if we can get sufficient amounts of other supplies. The colony is largely equipped with bedding and with kitchen and dining room necessities. This is a boon which can hardly be overestimated. For some of these things are almost unobtainable at present in France. Add to all of this the fact that there are a number of persons associated with the former administration of the summer colony, who are most helpfully sympathetic to our task, and who are in positions to be of inestimable service to our cause in a general way, and you have a total picture which appears to us in France most optimistic and promising. It is our earnest hope that we can get sufficient funds and foods to operate this colony at its fullest capacity during the cruel winter months.

Will you add this project to your growing prayer list, that God may remove possible difficulties and impediments to the fullest realization of our plans at Port Vendres? Only eternity can reveal the fuller results of this attempt at salvaging the lives of these perishing children. And only the just, eternal Judge can fully reward those who share in this saving of those priceless child-souls. As we do it "in His name" as a cup of cold water, we are assured of His approval, for He says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And again He says, "He that receiveth one such little one in my name receiveth me."

"ABIDE WITH US"

Luke 24:29

Beneath our humble roof, dear Lord,
"Abide with us," we pray,
From early dawn till set of sun—
We need Thee every day.

Be Thou our loved and honored Guest,
Unseen by mortal eye;
But those who gather round our hearth
Shall feel Thy presence nigh.

The cares and worries of the day,
And all the joys we've known,
The many problems that we face
And cannot solve alone;

We'd share them all with Thee, dear Lord,
For Thou dost understand;
And sitting at Thy feet we'll learn
What Thou in love hast planned.

And so we pray, "Abide with us"
To counsel and to bless,
And by Thy grace, Lord, may our home
And lives bear Thy impress.

THE CHRISTIAN SERIES

MARCH 9—"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John 1:12

There are many ideas as to how a man may become a Christian. We are told that there are 233 brands of religion. But here we have a positive and plain statement as to how a person becomes a Christian. Men are perplexed and also confused, and multitudes are being misled, deceived, and deluded, but the Scripture is plain on this MOST IMPORTANT FACT. You need not be tossed to and fro by all the teachings of this day. Take God at His word. Christ came to die for our sins and be our sin sacrifice on the cross. He settled the sin question once and forever. You will be happy today if you will trust Him. It means to trust in the person who died on the cross for you. Accept His work for you. If you have accepted Him you are a child of God. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 10—"Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:13

A man is not a Christian because he is born into a Christian family; nor is he a Christian because he may determine to be one; nor is he a Christian because of what man can do for him; but he is a Christian of God. I may determine to belong to some royal family and dress as they do, act as they do, and even sign my name by a royal title, but all the time I am only a fraud. Man must be born into the family. God says so. He must be born of God. A man is a Christian because he is born again by God. Man is not a Christian because man may have baptized him or placed his name in a Church record. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 11—"Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John 3:3

Some people hold the idea that only heathen and those living in sin have to be born again, but here was a very religious man, a pious man, an educated man, a moral man, and a man well informed in the Scriptures, and Jesus turns on him and informs him that if he wants to get to heaven he will have to be born again. It is not our life nor our works that makes us children of God. By the natural birth we have been born into families, but in order to become the children of God we must be born again by the Holy Spirit, and then we belong to the family of which God is the Father. You can go about your tasks today with the consolation that you are born again and God is your Father and you are His child. It is not true that God is the Father of all men. He is the creator of all men. All people are His creatures, but only those born again are His children. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 12—"What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" I Cor. 6:19

A Christian is indwelt by the Holy Spirit. When Jesues came into this world God formed for Him a body in the womb of Mary, but the Holy Spirit brought no body nor did the Father make one for Him. We ask why? The reason is that He dwells and lives in every Christian. If you are a Christian you are indwelt by the Holy Spirit and if you are not indwelt by the Holy Spirit then you are not a Christian. What does the Holy Spirit want with your body? Listen, my Christian friend, He wants to walk with your feet today; He wants to see with your eyes today; He wants to talk with your lips today. Will you let Him do that today? I assure you that you will have some grand experiences for today. You will come to the end of this day with praise and thanksgiving. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 13—"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: THAT BY THESE YE MIGHT BE PARTAKERS OF THE DIVINE NATURE, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." II Pet. 1:4

A new nature has been placed into the Christian. His old nature is not improved nor done away. The Christian will always have the old nature to contend with for there is no such a thing as eradication of the old nature. Many young Christians are perplexed to find that after being saved they all of a sudden find the old nature making its appearance. But God has given us a new nature and that nature must be fed with the Word. That which feeds the old nature will starve the new nature, and that which feeds the new nature will starve the old nature. A hog because of his nature delights to wallow in the mire, but a sheep because of his nature can't be kept in the mire. The difference is in the nature. The Christian with his new nature detests the mire of the world and walks in newness of life. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 14—"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." II Cor. 5:17

When a person accepts Christ he enters into a new relationship, a new family, a new Father, a new song is placed in his mouth, a new joy is his, and he has a new appetite and desire for the things of God. The things he once loved he now hates; and the things he once detested he now delights in. He delights in the Word and to the preaching and teaching of the Word. He loves to go to Church. He never went to the prayer service, but now he waits for the time when he can meet with God's people for prayer. He finds pleasure in telling others what the Lord has done for him. A desire for the things of the world is gone. A young woman who was saved told us that she walked out of a theatre after attending it for the first time after her conversion for she detested the environment and picture. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

MARCH 15—Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." I Pet. 1:23

In order to have a crop the farmer must sow the seed. It is just as true in the spiritual realm. If we want people to be saved and become children of God we must teach and preach the Word. The Word is the seed. It is our privilege to again sow the seed today to our Sunday School pupils and those who attend the services. If our people are not saved they are lost, and that means eternal hell. Do we care? Are we concerned about them? Do we love them with the love that forced the Lord Jesus to come into this world to die for us? God has entrusted to us this Word of reconciliation. He expects us to be faithful stewards. He expects us to teach and preach the Word. The Word is the only seed that God has given us to change the lives of people and to save them. The Word is not men's ideas nor opinions, but God's opinions and ideas. Men cannot listen to the Word and stay the same. The Word is powerful. AM I A CHRISTIAN?

Why Husband and Wife Should Belong To the Same Church

1. Because they are married and thus have agreed to share in all other things; why not the church?
2. Division herein betrays lack of harmonious cooperation.
3. Whole-hearted service in the church is difficult when the home is divided.
4. Attendance in either church, or in both churches, may be irregular.
5. The couple owes financial support to both churches. Can they do it? May unequal support cause ill feelings in the home?
6. Which will become the church home for the children? Or will they become indifferent and drift?
7. Which church shall it be? The couple must decide, and decide they should! —Contributed

THE MIGHTY WORKS OF JESUS

Matt. 8:23-34

TOPIC: The Miracles of Jesus

Introduction

A miracle is an event varying from the ordinary course of nature by the exercise of a supernatural power. "A miracle is God's ex-traordinary way of doing things. Nature is His ordinary way of doing things." A belief in miracles pre-supposes a belief in a personal God. God who created the universe, can also work miracles now when he chooses to do so. Miracles are a small matter in comparison. Christ declared Himself to be one with the Father, so the miracles He performed are in harmony with his claims. No one is asked to believe in miracles without evidence, but the denial of miracles in the face of evidence is unreasonable.

Christ's Power over Nature vss. 23-27

Jesus had spent a busy sabbath in Capernaum. He had healed many and large crowds came to him. He left this busy scene, taking a ship going to the east side of the sea of Galilee, to find a place of quiet rest for himself and the disciples. One of the freqent sudden storms overtook the ship. This one was unusually violent (vs. 24). Jesus, tired and weary, had fallen asleep. This reveals his true humanity. It was a sleep of holy serenity, with no fear within to disturb his repose. A clear conscience permits one to sleep quietly in a storm (Ps. 4:8). The disciples were filled with fright. They appealed to Jesus (vs. 25) as their only hope of salvation. Their cry is a curious mixture of faith and fear. Jesus rebuked their fear and weak faith. He was in the same danger in which they believed they were. Jesus implies that their fears are all groundless so long as He is with them. Jesus stilled the winds by the authority of His word. The calm was as sudden as the storm. Amazement at the evident power of Jesus, filled the men in the ship. He demonstrated his absolute power over the forces of nature. He also has power over the storms of the restless heart. Only faith in Him and in the living God can still the heart of man.

Christ's Power over Demons vss. 28-34

His power over demons is as absolute as His power over disease and over nature. Mark 5:1-20 gives a very graphic and complete account of the healing of a demon-possessed man. In our lesson is an amazing miracle in which two madmen were restored into normal mental life. Tombs cut into the rocky hillsides are common today in this vicinity. The two men met Jesus. They needed very desperately that which He alone could do for them. These men were to an extreme degree under the control of demons. Jesus dealt with demons as an evil spiritual power external to the men, yet possessing them.

The evil spirits spoke through the mouths of the men they possessed, and declared that they had nothing in common with Jesus, whom they recognized as their Master. They feared that Jesus would send them at once to their destined punishment. The demons recognized Jesus' authority and felt sure that He was about to deliver the two men from their control. So they begged that they be permitted to enter the swine (vs. 31) and carry on their evil work in them. Jesus granted the request. The swine gave evidence that something most unusual had occurred. They perished, but the two men were delivered from the power of the evil spirits, and that is the vital fact. The men were worth more in the sight of Jesus, than the whole herd of swine. Jesus came to save men.

The report of the keepers of the swine aroused the city, and a large crowd quickly gathered and came to Jesus, perhaps even to drive Him away. They recognized His power and felt a superstitious fear while He was there. Probably too, they feared further losses of swine. They valued the swine more than the restoration of the two men. There still are many who would rather lose the company of Jesus than lose their temporal possessions. As between swine and salvation, most people prefer the swine. Jesus alone can lead men to healing and heart peace. The resources which Jesus used to perform his miracles are available for us today. The day of miracles has not passed by. The Church has tasks which call for supernatural power. Christ has almighty power. We need to pray, "Lord increase our faith." The fearful have little faith, and the faithful have little fear. Why does Christ not quiet the restless sea of humanity in our troubled times?

What people would not want Christ around today?

Why do many people believe that the day of miracles is past?

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

An Experiment

Many of our Christians are poor. Some are so poor that the church has to help them by providing work or in some cases food or money at intervals. Shall we teach our Christians to tithe? Some Christians are liberal in giving back to God material offerings, and some are stingy and have to be taught to give. Many of our Basna Christians are weavers, but they often can not sell their cloth, or it sells so cheaply that they earn very little. This a problem, especially, when crops are poor. Then most people buy less cloth for they wear their old clothing longer, besides wearing less clothing.

We were anxious to help them weave nicer cloth and to find a better market for the woven things. I told the weavers that I was willing to supervise the weaving and help hunt a market provided they would all tithe. Over thirty families were willing to tithe; some earned well; others wove slowly and poorly. Some were lazy and disappointed us by taking the thirty-five cents to a dollar, given as advance to buy weaving yarn, and used it for other purposes never bringing any cloth. However, the majority testify that they believe God continues to provide a market for the cloth, because they tithe. One evangelist said, "Some of my church members learn to give by this arrangement; they did not give gladly at first and wanted to give very little. Now they learn to tithe gladly."

We had let the weavers weave table-cloths, cushion covers, door curtains, and cloth which we took to the hills this summer. The things sold well. Our own leper asylum and another neighboring mission asylum ordered sories amounting to about 4,800 yards of cloth this last year. Neighboring missions have also ordered cloth for their school children, and this has helped many of our weavers to keep from starving this last year during a partial crop failure. Mrs. Dester gives some of her time to help sell the cloth, and I supervise the weaving at present. We think that this work also is to the glory of God and helps our people to be self-supporting.

Famine—A Blessing Or a Challenge?

Perhaps, it is both. When we always have enough to eat we are bound to forget the Giver of all good and perfect gifts. What is noteworthy in particular is how our poor fellow Christians meet the situation. There is no attitude of rebellion or of blaming God. The attitude rather is: "We have sinned—we have grieved our heavenly Father." Certainly, such an attitude of repentance has already brought blessings to many. Non-Christians see this attitude of their equally suffering Christian neighbors, and they too turn to Him who alone can really comfort in times of distress. The number added to the Christian church has not been less because of these famine conditions, even though the help received in the form of relief has almost been nil.

Through our conference executive committee we have applied to the Emergency Relief Board for about five hundred dollars. (Since then another two thousand dollars by April, 1942, have been requested.) That is not much for more than one thousand people. So we face the challenge of how to help those who come and say, "We and our children had only one thin meal yesterday, and today nothing—and the children cry." What shall we do?

—John Thiessen

ALL REPORTS AGREE THAT MISSIONARIES ARE WELL TREATED

This is true of both China and the Philippines, as far as reports are available. From this the different Boards conclude, that those missionaries, from whom so far no reports are available, are also well treated.

Under date of February 3 Miss Thompson of the American Board Mission on the Philippines cables that she cannot communicate with all missionaries, but that "probably all are safe."

The Swiss government sends word that they will cable to Tokyo for information, but can make no guarantees. While it costs a dollar per word, we have asked them to cable at our expense.

The Red Cross also reports, "We have instituted request for information."

May the Lord continue to protect.

BUHLER MENNONITE CHURCH
Buhler, Kansas

On February 4 Irvin Ediger and Edwin Dirks left for the Civilian Public Service Camp in Colorado.

Miss Aganetha Fast brought us an interesting message on January 12. After having heard the message one realized more fully what a wonderful calling it is to be a missionary. Sometimes we may ask the question, "Does it pay?" In a children's hospital a little child was dying. She had on her face the expression of peace. She asked for pencil and paper, but she was too weak to write. So she whispered, "I would only like to tell my benefactors in America that the money they spent for me was not in vain." The four sewing societies of the church served as hostesses after the message. —Mrs. Arnold Esau, Corr.

" . . . for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." II Tim. 1:12

The days seem to be growing darker and darker as the Christian pilgrims on the face of this earth. Yet he is not fearful or perplexed, because he knows that it is darkest just before day breaks. How happy and free one can be when one has committed all unto Christ, for He is able to keep that which one has committed unto Him.

The Christian is being tested. The need for evangelism is great. As a whole the spiritual condition of people is lamentable. Christians everywhere should pray with determination for a revival. God has entrusted a great work unto us. God will not hold us guiltless for the souls that will be lost because of our neglect.

Fifty young men and women have enrolled in our catechism class. Our concern is not merely to baptize them and to accept them as church members, but our concern is rather that each one may be born again and come into a relationship with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. May our conference pray for these young people and for our Elder, A. W. Friesen.

We are happy to have a Bible school in our town. Brother Ted Schmidt from our church and Brother Abe Schultz from the E. M. B. Church are the teachers. About twenty scholars attend.

BERGTHAL MENNONITE CHURCH
Corn, Oklahoma

The Bergthal Church mourns the death of their beloved old Elder, Rev. John Flaming, who served as Elder for twenty-one years. Funeral services for Mrs. Elizabeth Ediger Bergen, who died at the Home for the Aged, Newton, Kansas, were held on January 28.

The ladies of the church packed a box of cookies that they are sending to the boys at the Civilian Public Service Camp at Colorado Springs. We hope the boys will enjoy them. We know there are more than enough to go around.

The sick we have with us at all times, and they need our prayers. Rev. J. B. Ediger of the Clinton Indian Mission is suffering severely from a carbuncle on his back. The carbuncle has been lanced, and according to last reports Rev. Ediger is improving.

REV. ISAAC EPP WRITES

It is some time since I last showed a sign of life in our valuable paper. During that time radical changes have taken place. It was my privilege to be in charge of the Swift Current Bible School for two years. Then the Lord led me to the staff of the Rosthern Bible School, where I found the same splendid opportunities to work among our young people. They have always been an inspiration to me, since I am still one of them. Last fall by the permissive will, not the directive will, of God I entered the Provincial Normal School in this city in order to prepare for the teaching profession in the secular schools of this province. Although I often wish myself back in full time service for the Lord, there are opportunities to let my light shine and to work for the Lord even while engaged in secular study.

Every second week-end I take the train out into the country to conduct two or three services. The little town of Hague is about forty miles from the city of Saskatoon. On Saturday nights the children come to meet me at the station, and then we meet in the school for a special children's service. Glimpses of Our Mennonite Civilian Public Service Camps

The Grottoes, Virginia Camp

By Irvin B. Horst

The Grottoes Civilian Public Service Camp is the present home for eighty of us boys who have answered the call to serve our nation by doing work of national importance other than military service. Sixty-one of the boys come from Pennsylvania; eight from Virginia; five from Maryland; two from Delaware; and one each from the following states: Ohio, Indiana, Kansas, and New York. The camp's twenty-four buildings are beautifully planted among the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Shenandoah National Park, with its mountains and Skyline Drive, is our back yard, and to the front of us is the small town of Grottoes and the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Before the camp was taken over by the Mennonite Central Committee it was operated under the Civilian Conservation Corps. The enrollees are engaged in national park service.

Camp life has changed our ways of living. We eat, sleep, work and study according to schedule. We are bell-conscious boys, for everything we do is regulated by a bell. Every week-day morning the clang of the bell reverberates through the hills covered with scrub pine and oak. Immediately the doors of the barracks open and shut until all of the boys find their places for the day's occupation. Most of us find our way up short ladders and disappear under the tarpaulins of large, battleship gray, Department of Agriculture trucks, which are waiting to convey us to soil projects on local farms. Thus begins the working day for the boys at camp. But the bell that we have responded to has already been the fifth one for the day. A bell at 5:45 roused us from our cots. There were two bells for breakfast, a warning bell, and a final at 6:15. The bell after the morning meal called us to the chapel.

The Shenandoah Valley is a prosperous agricultural region, but in a great many places it has lost from 50 per cent to 90 per cent of its valuable topsoil. Further prevention of this erosion has been considered by the government as a work of national importance. Accordingly, the campees are engaged in a program to remedy this depletion in Rockingham and Augusta counties. We work under foremen from among our own group who are directed by a Technical Service Staff. This staff cooperates with the local federal agency for soil conservation. While we are carrying out a program of a remedial nature, much of our work is of such a nature as to encourage and induce the farmer to cooperate with the government in the soil conservation program.

Grottoes Campees Receiving Tools and Instructions for Day's Work. This Camp is engaged in Soil Conservation service on near-by farms.

The project work is interesting and varied enough that most of us can find work adapted to our interest and experience. Surveyors, bookkeepers, truck-drivers, foremen, woodsmen, fence-builders, etc., are needed. The record for post-hole digging is claimed by David Horst who dug fourteen holes, thirty inches deep, in four hours. The outside work with its fresh air and vigorous exercise is conducive to our health and avoirdupois.

The maintenance of the camp offers many fascinating jobs. Sister Lena Wenger, the dietician, supervises the boys who cook and wash dishes. The boys are usually successful in their cooking attempts, and Arthur Weaver almost always smiles over his pies and light rolls. The matron, Mrs. John Mosemann, directs the boys who work in the laundry and do the housecleaning. Merrill Swartley is professional in his ability to iron shirts; Reuben Goodling places our wash on our cots spotlessly clean.

We do not work all the time. There is time for recreation in our schedule at camp. The coming together of a large number of boys has brought a wide variety of hobbies and recreational interests. Baseball and football take the lead in out-of-door sports. A volley-ball court is in the making and many of us are "hankering" for basketball. Tennis and quoits attract a few. As the evenings become longer we shall watch each other across checker and chess boards. An important sport news item of the recent past was a ping-pong tournament.

Kitchen and Dining-hall Staff with Sister Lena Wenger, Dietician. Campees have privilege of learning many things; cooking is one of them.

The library is a recreational retreat and escape for some of us. At present the library has approximately three hundred and sixty books on its shelves. Of more frequent attention is the reading room where we have the opportunity to brouse through newspapers and magazines. Some of the boys are interested in music and have the ability to play a number of instruments. There are other enthusiasts—wireless amateurs, photographers, book collectors. One boy knows his trees, another knows his rocks, Chester Wenger knows his birds, and still another knows his stars. All of us have succumbed to the lure of the mountains behind us. Hiking and climbing are popular pastime for a weekend. One boy can display the rattlers of a snake he killed on a mountain climb.

When the bell rings in the early evening we find our way—in blue denim—to the educational building. The evening hours are set apart for study and class discussion. Brother John Mosemann, our director, leads several classes in Bible study. Just now, Bible Survey and Book Study of Revelation are being offered. Our assistant camp director and business manager, Brother John Snyder, conducts classes in bookkeeping and typing. The local Red Cross chapter is conducting a course in First Aid. The Technical Service Staff offer weekly lectures on soil conservation. Mennonite Church History is taught to develop an appreciation for our background and doctrines. A men's chorus is organized and promotes good music. Boys with a practical turn of interests may find an outlet in the workshop.

While there are bells for work and bells for classes, bells for meals and bells for socials, there are still other bells—bells that call to worship and religious activities. The event of camp life and positive stand for what we believe, increases the need for the maintenance of a robust spirituality. Besides sixty-six of our own denomination we are glad for the opportunity to have boys from five other affiliated denominations share camp life with us. The emergency of the times has brought together those of similar convictions. The daily chapel devotional period sanctifies our daily work. The boys are responsible for this period on Tuesday and Thursday mornings. The Sunday evening meetings are devoted to subjects of Bible study in which the campees participate. Once a month the subject is related to nonresistance. The prayer emphasis is encouraged by the setting aside of a special prayer room. This room contains booths for private devotion and is also frequented by a prayer group. Early Sunday morning a few meet in Mission Prayer Meeting to pray. Most of our religious activities have been confined to the camp, but an effort is being made to do some rural mission work in the way of holding cottage meetings and assisting in Sunday School work. A program for tract distribution is in the offing.

We boys in camp are happy. We are very grateful for the provision that has been made for us to serve our country by digging post holes and filling gullies. Here at camp we have many opportunities that we do not have at home. None of us want sympathy, but we need the encouragement of faithful support and interest of our home folks. We want to believe that we are only a few of the C. O.'s in the church; that most of them are at home. We are hoping that they will give the same testimony to the world as they are expecting us to give. With prayer and encouragement for each other may our testimony go out to the world in no uncertain tones.

"A religion
That does nothing
That gives nothing
That costs nothing
That suffers nothing
Is worth nothing."

A BOOK FOR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

By Cornelius Krahn

"The young people of today live and grow up in a time of great decisions. This is the time of war and revolutions, which mean great changes. No matter what changes the future will bring—Christ, our foundation, will not change.

On this foundation our forefathers have successfully met times of war, trials, and persecution similar to and greater than those confronting us. For quite some time many of us have been looking for a book which records these facts that could be used in home and school. Dr. C. H. Smith has just published a book (The Story of the Mennonites, 823 pages) which informs us about the origin of the Mennonites in Switzerland and Holland, the spread and development of the different Mennonite churches in Europe, and their recent history in America.

This book is to be especially recommended for young people's meetings as a source for topics and material. The material of the book can easily be divided into a number of topics according to preference."

FELLOWSHIP BANQUET

The Eastern District Conference Young People's Union held their annual fellowship banquet Saturday evening, January 24 in the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa. There were about 175 young people present with practically every society in the union represented.

Special musical numbers were given by Ray Schrauger, trumpet, and Mr. Clemens, vocal. Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, Quakertown, Pa., offered a short prayer in memory of Miss Anna Bauman who passed away December 23, 1941. Miss Bauman was a very faithful worker in our union and last year served as mission secretary of the union.

The speaker of the evening was Rev. R. C. Steinhart, pastor of the Bethany E. C. Church, Reading, Pa. Mrs. Steinhart presented a poem entitled, "What Kind of a Church Would My Church Be."

Group singing was enjoyed, with Stanley Fretz, Lansdale, Pa., as the song leader. Rev. Howard G. Nyce, Allentown, Pa., served as toastmaster for the occasion.

We feel that these get-together fellowship meetings are of real worth to everyone; especially now do we need a "united youth fellowship" to work together for Christ and the Church. —Arlene Geissinger, Corr.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

Series for March: Devotional Training

WORSHIP IN CHURCH — Eph. 3:8-20

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Come Thou Almighty King," No. 8; "The Lord's My Shepherd," No. 579.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. Roll call answered by favorite Bible verses.
4. Offering for C.P.S. work.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Jesus said of the temple that it was His Father's house and attended the synagogue regularly. Today our churches are the places which we call "Houses of God" and where we worship together. Uniting in the singing of great hymns, praying together, becoming conscious of our common needs and of the great cause of the Church of Christ, deepening our sense of fellowship, listening to the pastor as he brings a message of truth and vision, waiting upon God to speak to us, re-consecrating ourselves together to renewed zeal to walk according to the revealed will of God—these are the opportunities and privileges offered by worship in church.

The radio which also offers its religious programs is a boon to shut-ins, and for times when weather or circumstances make it impossible to attend services at church, but it can never take their place. Christians by the score will testify to the fact that the week seems long if church has not been attended on Sunday, that the Sunday seems incomplete without it.

We need the "Day of Rest" not only for recuperation and refreshment of our bodies, but we need it as "time out" to refresh and invigorate our souls.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Samuel in the Temple, I Sam. 3:1-21; 2. Jesus in the Temple at the Age of Twelve, Luke 2:41-52;3. The Church, the Body of Christ, I Cor. 12:27-31.

IV. For Discussion:

1. Why should we go to church regularly? 2. How is the church service an aid to knowing God? 3. Could we make improvements in our church services? How?

V. Facts for Study:

Paul knew, and all good Christians know, that if we are to climb the ladder of Christian life successfully it would be necessary to "press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus." One of the means which has been a help to thousands is the church service. More use should be made of the open doors of the church where everybody is welcome to meditate and pray. Catholic churches offer more in this respect than our Protestant churches. Could we learn from them? If so, how?

God is a spirit and desires to be worshipped in spirit and in truth. We do not need a trained choir, a polished sermon, stained glass windows or flawless organ music to do that. But we do need a heart, a mind and will attuned to listen to God, and a very sincere desire to "wait upon the Lord." Then the "words of our mouth and the meditation of our heart" will be acceptable to Him.

VI. Illustration:

An infidel owned a sawmill near a church. Every Sunday the people filed by the sawmill on their way to the services. The infidel went right on with his work, and paid no attention to the people, nor to the fact that it was God's holy day. After some time the people noticed that each Sunday without fail, for a few minutes, before and after the church service, the machinery at the sawmill was silent. This interested them and they made inquiry as to why this silence. To their amazement the infidel said that there was one deacon who passed the mill every Sunday, and he had been watching the deacon and the way he lived, and had discovered that this life measured up to his profession. Then he added, "The deacon professes just what the rest of you do, but he also lives such a life that it makes me feel bad here (putting his hand upon his heart) to run my mill when he is passing."

VII. Food for Thought:

Muriel Lester dwells on the fact that we need to "discipline" ourselves in the practice of prayer. It would be well to observe the old-fashioned Christian disciplines: private prayer, family worship, regular church attendance, generous giving.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

By Huldah E. Myers

WHAT COULD OUR CHURCH DO DURING LENT?

Program for March 15, 1942

I. Watch conduct: II Pet. 3:11.

Our church is not measured by what it professes, but by the spirit it reveals in its service to God and its fellowmen. Could our church not concentrate on enlarging its vision of service?

II. Urge consecration: II. Cor. 8:5.

It is essential that the church members consecrate themselves first to God's will.

We suggest that your pastor be asked to present ways and plans in which the Intermediates can be of service in the church. Have an informal discussion about these plans and before the close of the meeting give the members opportunity to volunteer for the type of service in which they are interested and which they are qualified to render.

Some types of service which he might suggest are: helping in evangelistic campaigns by helping to advertise the meetings and by bringing people to the meetings, typing, singing in the choir, ushering, enlisting young people in the various Bible study groups, and planning for special services for the young people of your community.

III. Preach Christ: I Cor. 2:2.

IV. Promote fellowship: Acts 2:46, 47.

V. Challenge sinners: Heb. 2:1-4.

It is during Lent that many of our churches have special evangelistic meetings. Let us give our church our fullest support during these meetings by attending them, by praying, and by inviting others to enjoy them with us and perhaps bring them to a new life in Christ.

VI. Point to the cross: I Cor. 17, 18.

"The gospel of the crucified Christ is no foolishness to those who know its power. The wisdom of the world has been shown to be mere folly by the wisdom of God in Christ. Men in their wisdom wandered away from God, and it is by this so-called folly fo preaching that those who believe, both Jews and Greeks, have been saved.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for March 15, 1942

AN ACTIVITY PROGRAM

"I will do what he would have me to do,"

Luke 6:46-49

Today we consider the action side of the Christian life, as last Sunday's topic dealt with the heart side. Christ does want certain things to be done by his own, and now they are to be found. Certainly conduct, treatment of others, devotional practices, Church attendance, and similar things would be on this list. Then as we grow in our Christian life, we would share in the Christian program of missions, evangelism, and testimony. Maybe the Lord is speaking to some Junior today to give his life to preaching, teaching, or to be a home or foreign missionary. We must obey the Lord willingly and quickly when he speaks to us.

A Sunday school teacher was teaching her class of little girls the Lord's Prayer. She came to the phrase, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." She asked, "How is God's will done in heaven?" A little girl replied, "It is done quickly!"

It is a fine thing to always do what the Lord tells us to do, but we must first acquaint ourselves with Him by walking very close to Him.

The Question Bee

1. What did the Lord command to be done at the marriage feast?
2. What were the disciples to leave and to do, when they were chosen?
3. W-H-A-T-E-V-E-R Give a word beginning with each letter, telling us of what the Lord's command is. For example: W—who (is supposed to do His will. H—hear, etc.).
4. Name three missionary projects we could follow in our Junior C. E.
5. Why should I attend church regularly?

The Prayer List

(a) Daily devotional reading in our homes.
(b) A greater desire to know and serve my God.
(c) Bring others to Christ and the church.
(d) Give to missions.

the Lord as our object we have a wonderful hour together. Sunday morning usually affords the pleasure of ministering to the congregation. Sunday afternoon the young people gather for their own services. The group is not very large; nevertheless, the Lord is not bound by the number present. His blessings flow regardless of whether many or few are dipping their buckets.

It is also my pleasure to assist the Rev. J. J. Thiessen in the First Mennonite Church of Saskatoon. At present I conduct the choir and help in the morning services at times, and also in the Christian Endeavor meetings. What joy and satisfaction one receives from serving the Master! Truly, it pays to serve Jesus.

In the Normal School we have organized an Inter-School Christian Fellowship group. This consists of students who know the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and who wish to have fellowship one with another and be a witness to those who know Him not. I have been elected president of the Normal School group. Similar groups have been formed in the local university, the high schools, and the hospital. We are making arrangements just now for an Inter-Student Fellowship Conference, in which all groups will join for timely discussions, fellowship, witnessing, and supper. This also is a great work and something for which to be exceedingly thankful. What a privilege it is to work for the Lord unmolested.

BETHEL COLLEGE CHURCH

North Newton, Kansas

Since this is the first attempt by a newly elected correspondent, perhaps a few words about our church in general will be in place. Ours is one of the younger Mennonite churches in this part of Kansas, being organized in 1897. At that time the audience on Sundays consisted chiefly of college faculty members, their families, and students. For many years this church was a preaching station, rather than a parish or congregation. During the last two decades many Mennonites have moved to Newton, and our college church has enjoyed a steady growth. Of the 402 members on the church rolls at this time, at least three fourths have united with this church during the past twenty years. A brief study of our 1942 Year Book reveals some interesting data. At least one hundred different family names are found, and among these Unruh and Regier the most frequent. At least one fourth of our members live too far away to attend services here regularly. Our membership is still comparatively young. We have very few who have passed seventy, and therefore golden weddings are rather infrequent. However on January 18th Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Balzer were privileged to celebrate their fiftieth anniversary in the midst of their children and many friends.

In most respects our church is like other Mennonite churches. On New Year's Day we had our annual congregational meeting, and a few Sundays later the officers elected for the next year were solemnly installed in their duties by our pastor, Rev. J. N. Smucker. On the last Sunday in January we again observed Visitation Day, when nearly twenty teams of two each called on the members in their homes.

In some respects our situation may be a bit unusual. For instance, fully twenty of our members have been ordained as Mennonite ministers. A number of these are active in the college faculty, and others have retired from the active ministry. Our church does not own a church building, but rents these facilities from the college. The chapel is used for the worship service, and classrooms for Sunday School classes. For the church this arrangement has some advantages, but also some disadvantages. For a number of years we have reversed the usual order, and have our worship service first, followed by the Sunday School. It was first tried as an experiment, but by this time no one any longer suggests that we return to the former method. Some of us believe that worship service has definitely gained by this change, and we doubt if the Sunday School has experienced any handicap or loss of interest.

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Enid Oklahoma

There might be a number of news items of interest from here to our readers. The annual church report showed an increase in church attendance and church offerings. That was encouraging to us all. Since then the work has continued to prosper, and God is blessing us in many ways. On January 21st our baby, A. Glenn, two and a half years old, passed away in an Enid hospital. Now Mrs. Harder is also ill and will be confined to her bed for some time. As soon as arrangements are completed we expect to take her to a hospital at Clinton, Oklahoma. We are hoping and praying that she will not need to be there very long. So far none of our church members have been called to active service by our government, and our work has proceeded undisturbed.

Mrs. Harder was elected to serve as correspondent for this church, and she will probably send items occasionally.

—H. N. Harder

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Madrid, Nebraska

Our church is still there. Sometimes we begin to fear that our group will diminish so much that the burden of keeping the church going will become too great to bear.

One family left this month for their new home in Oregon. Another one has sold out and is leaving soon. In spite of all that we are carrying on. The interest in all departments is good, and the Lord is blessing us.

We have had a thick layer of snow since last Sunday (February 8th), and it is snowing some more. The outlook for a crop is good. The wheat was showing thick and green when this snow came. The days seem dark, but we hope and trust in the Lord, thinking of Luke 21:28, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." —Corr.

WADSWORTH MENNONITE CHURCH

Wadsworth, Ohio

In an inspired and inspiring service at this church Donovan E. Smucker was officially ordained into the ministry Sunday evening, February 8. Ministers of the General Conference who assisted in the services were Rev. A. S. Rosenberger of Dalton, Ohio; Rev. H. T. Unruh and Rev. Paul E. Whitmer, both of Bluffton, Ohio.

Rev. Rosenberger read John 15:1-16 and I Timothy 4:6-16 and also gave the charge to the candidate. He stressed four points: First, preach the gospel of Christ; secondly, be a good pastor; thirdly, promote the kingdom of God, and fourthly, be a fine example.

Rev. H. T. Unruh gave the invocation and a splendid prayer of ordination. Rev. Paul E. Whitmer, who on various occasions has filled our pulpit the past few months during the absence of a minister, delivered the sermon and also gave the charge to the church.

Throughout the entire service, even in the anthem, "Spirit of God," as sung by the choir and the solo, "How Lovely are Thy Dwellings" by Orlo Sprunger, the importance of the church's great task of building the kingdom of God and the great part men ordained to this service do in kingdom building was deeply impressed upon the many who filled the church. At the close of the service Rev. John Hiestand, as President of the Wadsworth Ministerial Association, welcomed our newly ordained minister into their association.

In the response Rev. Smucker said that he chose to enter the ministry simply because "he couldn't stay out of it." He further added that there were other forks in the road he might have taken but felt definitely led to the ministry and hoped to render his best services to that end.

We, as a congregation, feel indeed fortunate to have secured such a promising young man, whose early training and environment have given him a rich Mennonite heritage, and we know that as he and his wife will go forth into their services we shall be richly blessed. —Goldie Wurgler, Corr.

IN MEMORIAM

ABRAHAM S. HIRSTEIN, son of Abraham and Barbara Hirstein, was born about three miles south of Summerfield on September 25, 1865. For more than three years he patiently bore the affliction of an internal cancer. He passed away at his home near Summerfield at the age of seventy-six years.

In 1880 he became a member of the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield. In 1895 he was married to Carrie Kruger. This union was blessed with nine children. Two have preceded him to the Great Beyond.

He leaves to mourn his departure his bereft widow, five daughters, two sons, and five grandchildren. He is also survived by one half brother, three brothers, and one sister.

PETER P. SCHMIDT was born on January 21, 1860, in the village Kleefeld, South Russia. In 1875 he came with his parents, Peter and Margaret Berg Schmidt, to the United States of America where they settled in the eastern part of McPherson County, Kansas. With them he went through the hard experiences of pioneer life.

He was baptized on August 15, 1880, by the Elder Jacob Buller and joined the Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church in which he held active membership until his death.

After his marriage to Helen Voth, January 4, 1883, they made their home in Marion County, Kansas. There were ten children born to them and they are:

Mrs. Margaret Schroeder, Miss Mary Schmidt at home, Mrs. Elizabeth Schmidt, Karl Schmidt, Adolf Schmidt, Mrs. Helena Schmidt, Mrs. Anna Goertz, Mrs. Emma Duerksen, John Schmidt at home, and Theodore Schmidt.

Lately he began to complain more of failing health but was patient in suffering and helped on the farm in many little things, even so the last day. On January 6, 1942, he suffered a stroke while sitting at the table and reading. His left side was completely paralyzed and he was speechless. This was his first and last serious sickness. He was immediately taken to the Bethesda Hospital where after intense suffering, he gently and almost suddenly on January 8 was called to be with the Lord. He reached the age of eighty-one years.

He leaves to mourn his departure, his wife, all ten children, five sons-in-law, three daughters-in-law, one sister, Mrs. P. J. Unruh, and many friends.

Blessed with good health, a conscientious nature, his labors were generally well rewarded. He led a quiet life, had a peaceful disposition, and was not a man of many words, but his daily life was all the more an example of his piety, punctuality, and righteousness. Missions, relief, and education were a burden on his heart. The salvation of his household was his concern. That not one would be missing gave repeated cause for prayer. He is remembered by all as one whose life was a blessing to others.

Earth is to me a leaking boat,
Sinking, barely keeps afloat.
In it I am standing, watching for Him
One foot I have set on its rim.
Command O' Lord with but one glance,
I'll just reject it far from hence,
And holding on to thy saving hand
Rejoicing there—I have reached the land.

LUCY ANN LANDIS, née Moyer, was born in Springfield Township, Bucks County, Pa., on December 20, 1851.

On April 10, 1868, she was baptized and received into the East Swamp Mennonite Church. During the past seventy-three years she has manifested a constant interest in the work of the church. Due to her illness she was unable to attend services for the past two years, but she remained deeply interested in the Lord's work to the end. In November, 1873, she was united in marriage to Gideon S. Landis, who also preceded her in death on June 3, 1918. To this union were born ten children; four preceding father and mother in death.

In October, 1940, Mrs. Landis took quite sick and was finally removed from her home on W. Broad St., Quakertown, Pa., to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Menno M. Rosenberger of Milford Square, Pa. Having regained her strength she returned to her home in Quakertown several months later. After spending some time in her home she again became bedfast and was finally removed to the home of her other daughter, Mrs. Samuel T. Hilpot, Quakertown, where she remained until January 28, 1942, when she departed to be with her Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. She attained the age of ninety years.

She leaves to mourn two daughters and four sons: Mrs. Menno M. Rosenberger, Milford Square, Pa.; Mrs. Samuel T. Hilpot, Quakertown, Pa.; Howard M. of Souderton, Pa.; J. Walter of Quakertown, Pa.; Norwood M. of Souderton, Pa.; and Robert M. of Quakertown.

A short service was held for the family at the Strunk Funeral Parlor after which the body was removed to the East Swamp Mennonite Church where the regular funeral service was conducted. Interment was made in the East Swamp Cemetery. The pastor, Rev. H. D. Burkholder, spoke on II Tim. 4:6-8.

"To live Christlike in all is a more eloquent testimony than all the discourses that may be pronounced." —J. E. Gattinoni

MENNONITE SCHOOLING

"Our own school" was the goal of some Mennonites in a rural Pennsylvania community. Trees were felled in March, 1941. Thirty-nine men with seven tractors excavated for a thirty by fifty building. During the summer a two-room school house was built. Some of the children who entered the schoolhouse in September helped build it. The board hired a girl with strong Mennonite savor as teacher. Brethren selected the best available textbooks. In this school there are no books with fairy tales. All pupils from the third grade up are reading the Bible through. Some have already done it. The school was built because some Mennonites believed that they, and not the world, should train their children in the way they should go.

These men were awake to the importance of giving their children a Mennonite schooling. The short distance to and the low cost of the public grade and high schools and the state universities has tended to dull the spiritual insight of many of our people. Dollar value, and not spiritual value, has determined the education of many a young person. Ought such a short-sighted policy to exist in face of the fact that we build schools (a perfectly good thing) for non-Mennonite children in India and China? Are we not in danger of trying to make the branches bear fruit, while chopping off the roots? Good roots and fruit go together.

Therefore, if at all possible, Mennonites should send students and give money to all Mennonite schools of grade, high school, and college rank. They are "our schools" for the perpetuation of "our faith". We must teach the great doctrines of our faith; others can not and will not. These doctrines must become a part of our young people, or our young people will become a part of the world. This is the reason for Mennonite schools.

However, since a complete system of Mennonite grade and high schools (we should make much better use of those which we do have) does not exist, we should avail ourselves of another opportunity which is especially evident in communities that are predominantly Mennonite. This is the opportunity to place into the system Mennonite teachers, trained in our Mennonite schools. Such action is democratic and Christian, and very much needed in some communities which are largely or predominantly Mennonite.

It may be necessary for some of our young people to be trained in our colleges and then to take additional training in the particular state in which they may want to teach. This takes extra time and money. But why should this not be considered as a missionary enterprize? School boards which are nearly or entirely Mennonite could and should definitely encourage this.

All Mennonites on school boards should keep in mind and heart the teacher placement bureaus of our colleges. Certainly, we have reason to believe in the capability of our young people. Certainly, if we cherish our faith we have reason to support these young people and the schools which have trained them in the faith of our fathers.

Very likely there will be a scarcity of teachers for the coming school year. If Mennonite school board members will be prompt in inquiring for Mennonite teachers, then the latter will not be so apt to accept jobs in non-Mennonite communities, and the former will have more chance of getting the teacher that they desire. Requests should be made now.

Mennonite schooling should weigh heavily upon our hearts. Without it the church would have to fight against odds (parents and pastors already have a hard struggle as they seek to counteract the influence of public schools), which might easily become overwhelming. You "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old (of age), he will not depart from it." —rw.

What if They Say

What if they say, "Didn't God use the kingdom of Israel in the punishment of other nations?"

Certainly He did. He also used Judas Iscariot to betray His only begotten Son. But He does not induce men to sin. "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." (Jas.1:14) Judas was merely one in a chain of Israelites who had persisted in rejecting God's way of life.

Israel's selection of a king illustrates this point. They said to Samuel, "Now make us a king to judge us" (I Sam.8:5). God's assurance to Samuel was, "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." (vs.7) When Samuel brought God's answer they admitted the real reason for their request, "That we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles." (vs. 20) Israel now trusted more in the might of armoured hosts than in the God who rescued them out of Egypt without the force of arms.

Later Israel repented of her choice and said, "We have added to our sins this evil, to ask us a king." (I Sam. 12:19)

The fact remains that God has used and still uses war as punishment for the nations involved. He called Assyria, for instance, "the rod of mine anger". Note that it is the consistent testimony of history that once God uses a nation as a "rod" He soon discards it. Witness the cruel conquests of certain nations. They usually herald that nation's fall. God uses the wrath of man to deal out punishment. It does not, however, follow that it is God's will that men war. There is sufficient hatred in the hearts of men which God uses to bring out the necessary acts of judgment.

By logical inference it is important that a Christian is called to be a "branch" (John 15:5) that bears fruit (Gal. 5:22-23) and not a "rod" which is broken in meting out punishment on others.

What If They Ask

What if they ask you to spend several hours a day "spotting" enemy bombers? The first thing I would ask them in return would be, "Do you have spotters on the job day and night?" If not, I would remind them of their negligence, for most air raids are night raids.

Next I would ask, "Is there an anti-aircraft gun handy, with an experienced crew on the job all the time?" If their answer is "No", then I could reply, "If you have not enough fear of a raid to place a gun in readiness, what kind of a fool do you think I am if you suspect you can get me to fear a raid enough to sit on a roof several hours of the day to watch for bombers you don't think will come and which you are not prepared to shoot down?"

If, however, they tell me that there is a manned anti-aircraft gun, at least, at the other end of a communication system, waiting for my directions to shoot, then my answer leaves the purely logical realm and goes to the Mennonite doctrine of refusal to take part in killing. If a gunner is awaiting my directions to start his work of shooting and killing (he hopes), then I am the "man behind the man behind the gun." I am just as much implicated in killing, whether I pull the trigger or tell the other fellow to do it. Those who try to get you to be a "spotter" must admit this, because their advertising of stamps and bonds stresses the fact that the people behind the men behind the guns are playing just as important a part in the war as the men directly behind the guns.

ENCOURAGING NEWS

Tokyo Puts Captive Americans on Japanese Soldiers' Rations: The following appeared in the New York Herald-Tribune on February 22: "Washington, Feb. 21.—The Japanese soldier 'ration' is being provided for American prisoners of war in the Far East and their general treatment is 'good,' according to first detailed reports on prisoners of war and interned civilians received today by the American Red Cross through the International Red Cross in Geneva and made public by Chairman Norman H. Davis. Dr. Fritz Paravicini, International Red Cross delegate in Tokyo, cabled to Geneva under date of February 17 as follows: 'According to letter dated January 25 from Captain MacMillan, ex-Governor of Guam, 355 war prisoners from Guam are in Camp Zentsuji, Skikoku, since January 16. In addition, 134 civilians with thirteen Catholic priests and bishop from Guam sent to Kobe, January 23. Japanese soldier's ration provided to prisoners of war and treatment good—only request, more tobacco and toilet articles.'

The Prisoners of War Bureau of the Japanese government at Tokyo notified the International Red Cross that the following foodstuffs were given to interned civilians 'per day, at present, meat (beef, pork, ham or liver) and fish, 350 grams each; fresh vegetables, soup, fresh fruit and 690 grams of bread; jam, tea with cream and sugar. On Sunday, one egg and coffee.'

Another cablegram dated February 15, communicated by the Japanese authorities concerning treatment of American civilians interned in Japan reads: 'For the entire duration of the present war, the Japanese government will apply the articles of the 1929 Geneva Convention on prisoners of war, also to noncombatant internees of enemy countries, on the condition that belligerent countries do not submit them to physical labor against their will.' 'On the other hand, the Japanese legation at Berne,' an International Red Cross cable states, 'assures us that enemy internees in Japan benefit from conditions more favorable than those of the above mentioned convention, because apart from the furnishing by the authorities of bread, butter, eggs, meat and coal, internees can likewise receive provisions and clothing from third persons. Visits from families are possible, thanks to the proximity of the places of internment. Medical examinations and hospitalization for the sick are provided. Possibility of reading Japanese newspapers, using the radio and going out, if required conditions are fulfilled.'

Chairman Davis said the Red Cross has not been advised how many American civilians are interned in Japan. Also no word has been received through the International Red Cross about the number of prisoners of war and civilians from Wake Island. In answer to other requests from the American Red Cross, the International Red Cross cabled that it was endeavoring to obtain a delegate in Hongkong, China, in order to receive reports on the welfare of Americans there. Upon the request of Chairman Davis, the International Red Cross is negotiating for the appointment of a delegate in Manila to report on the welfare of Americans in the Philippines. The International Red Cross reported to Mr. Davis, however, that communications are yet difficult with Manila."

BUILDING GOD'S KINGDOM

Jesus once said to His disciples that He also had to go to other villages to preach the good news of the kingdom. With that He did not mean to say that all was finished in the village where they were. Certainly not all in that particular village had become followers of Jesus. In our Basna field the work among the missionaries has been so divided that Brother J. R. Duerksen travels among the villages. We have now more than sixty villages in which we have Christians. We believe with brother Duerksen that his first and foremost work is to shepherd these poor and mostly very ignorant Christians, but it is rather painful to brother Duerksen that there are so many villages in this area--still over five hundred--in which there are no Christians, who do not receive the good news. Yes, Christians go to their relatives and give their testimony there, and those testimonies bring marvelous results. So many of the baptisms you read about come as a result of the testimony of relatives already in fellowship with Christ. However, the overwhelming majority of our Christians come from one caste—the gara caste. We have some forty or more other castes in our area. It would be a most fruitful step if our mission board could put one missionary brother with a staff of Indian brethren into the field who would bring the good news to all these other castes. Brother Duerksen's time is overful. The other day, in terrific tropical heat, he peddled thirty-four miles on the bicycle. That is too much and too hard. Most of us could not undertake such a physical ordeal. He did it and does it for our Christian brethren in this area; but others, besides the Christians, should receive the good news too. The more the kingdom grows the more the challenge and burden also grow. Let us rejoice that our heavenly Father has given us burdens —I mean all of us—the workers on the field and also every church member in our whole conference, in America and in the Orient. —John Thiessen

Jesus the Messiah Foretells His Death

Mark 8:27-37 Read Matt. 16:13-28, Luke 9:18-25

TOPIC: Why the Messiah Should Die

Introduction

We have now come to the last summer in the ministry of Christ. As He heard the end of his ministry, He focused his teachings more and more on himself. He had found it necessary to leave Capernaum. The active persecutions of the Pharisees from Jerusalem, the scheming of Herod, and the growing indecision of many of the people pointed to the need of retiring from Galilee.

Jesus is the Messiah vss. 27-30

Jesus sought a retreat in the region around Caesarea in the northeast part of Galilee. Here He and the Twelve could be alone for a time, and He could instruct and prepare them for the events so soon to come. He saw clearly that his rejection was not far off. He asked the question one day, "Whom do men say that I am?" Jesus was not seeking information. He knew what men were saying about him. He was preparing the way for a much more personal question. He wished also to call attention to errors in the minds of the people concerning Him. The disciples were familiar with the popular mind (vs. 28). All acknowledged Him to be more than a common man or teacher. They believed that his mission was from God and that He was moved by the Spirit of God. They saw in him the continuation of John the Baptist, Elijah, and others of the prophets.

Jesus wished to test and strengthen their faith in Him as the Messiah. Some of His followers had gone away from Him. How did His chosen Twelve regard Him now? He asks the direct question (vs. 29). This question is the vital, the fundamental one for each person. What we, what I think of Him is the essential thing for us personally. The fundamental difference between the believer and the rejector of Christ lies in belief concerning Him. Peter's answer was spontaneous, unhesitating and in full conviction. He confessed his own faith and conviction and, undoubtedly, spoke for all the Twelve. He and they probably discussed this among themselves. Peter's confession recognized Jesus as the One whom God had anointed for a great task. Christ means "the anointed," and is the Greek form of the Hebrew word Messiah. Peter recognized Jesus as the Messiah of prophecy. The heart and center of our Christian faith is Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God.

What Messiahship Means vss. 31-33

Jesus indicated clearly what being the Messiah meant for Him. The Twelve could not understand this (vs. 31). They believed that Christ would be spared all suffering and surely He would not suffer death at the hands of his enemies. Jesus wanted them to see that his conquest was to be spiritual not political. Jesus spoke of his suffering and death as a necessity in order to fulfill his work as Messiah. The "must" expresses an inward constraint. Peter was so shocked that he could not believe this possible. He assumed that he knew better than Jesus himself. Jesus spoke very plainly to him (vs. 33b cf. Matt. 4:10). Peter's words reminded Jesus of Satan's temptation in the wilderness. Peter was thinking of the easier and popular way which appeals to the human heart. He showed a lack of spiritual understanding. The thoughts of men shrink from suffering.

What the Messiah Requires vss. 34-37

Jesus did not stop with showing that self-denial and death were to be his lot. He made it clear that all who would be his true followers must be willing to follow in his steps. Discipleship involves service and sacrifice (vs. 34). Self-denial means the renouncing of self as the supreme end of one's thoughts and interests. It ought to extend to everything, even to life itself, if it be needed, for the sake of Christ. Throughout the whole life, Jesus expects us to bear patiently and bravely such trials as may come to us. They who would avoid the cross and escape self-denial seek to save their life here, but they lose it hereafter. People who take the easy path and live for selfish ends, will lose their life. They will have little or nothing much worthwhile for their life's work. They who are willing to sacrifice for Christ's sake, will find, enlarge and save their life in the good they do, and will receive the eternal reward. A man's soul is of inestimable worth (vs. 36). It is eternal and can experience pleasure or distress forevermore.

In what sense may it be said that Jesus had to die on the cross?

Why did Jesus rebuke Peter?

What is the worth of the soul?

M. C. C. Insignia

Have you wondered what the insignia on our Peace Certificates and Stamp Albums means? Brother H. S. Bender explains it as follows: "The dove represents peace; the wheat grain heads the food being given in relief work; the clasped hands, the hands of brotherly love and help reached out to the needy, the upper hand that of the Mennonite Central Committee, the lower hand that of the one being served; the x is a cross, the St. Andrews Cross, a true cross of Christ, and is the monogram of "Christ". The year 1920 is the year of founding."

KILL HIM

By Howard H. Keim, Jr.

"Put to death . . . covetousness, which is idolatry" (Col. 3:5).

With what abhorrence Westerners read of or view pagans who fall down and worship before some heathen image or burn incense to a dumb, ugly idol in an ancient shrine!

We easily evolve a holier-than-thou attitude and condescend to give a nickel or a dime to help Christianize an "inferior" race. But not all idolatry is in "heathen" lands. It is a subtle sin which cloaks itself in garments of religion. It frequently appears among luxuriously clad and bejeweled worshipers in so-called Christian lands, as covetousness. For covetousness is the sin of loving things more than God, of giving things first place in one's life. It is possible to praise God on Sunday and then live such a life during the rest of the week that only Mammon is praised. Covetousness is a monstrous, ancient sin which knows a thousand tricks. His victims are innumerable. He has companioned with the great and the lowly, with princes and paupers, with the learned and the ignorant. He has fastened his shakles on the willing necks of otherwise good people of all classes in all ages. They have worshiped at his shrine.

Sometimes he is called Greed or Lust-for-things, but usually he is merely overlooked under the respectable guise of good business, custom, common sense, or self-preservation. He causes men to turn grasping, possessive eyes upon that which is of second or third rate importance and forget the primary goal of life—loving service to God and man. He urges men to heap up treasures on earth till they grow poor in their relationship with God. He has them seek an abundance of things here and now, so that they fail to lay up treasures in heaven. He makes them so anxious about food and clothing and shelter for their children's children that they forget to seek first the kingdom of God.

Paul says: "Put to death . . . covetousness, which is idolatry."

When we come to the end of the way, and the greater reaper stares us in the face, this will be our relationship to things:

What we saved we consign to rust, moth, and corruption.

What we shared we have evermore.

We can put covetousness to death by voluntary simple living and creative sharing.

Kill him! —Gospel Messenger

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Albert Schultz, Butterfield, Minnesota

The Christian Living Series

MARCH 16—"This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." Gal. 5:25

What does this mean? How can I walk by the Spirit for today? I am sure that all Christians want to, but how can I? I do want my life to be well pleasing to the Lord and I do want to be obedient to Him, but how can I? It means to be under the complete sway and influence of the Holy Spirit. It is the privilege of the Christian to have someone who dwells in him to fight his battles. He wants to control our lives for He came for that very reason to dwell in the believer. He will help us in our steps for today; He will help us in the decisions to make; He will help us in our problems. But we must recognize Him and give Him the first place in our lives. We must not grieve Him by disobedience; we must not quench Him by refusing to witness for Him; we must not insult Him by ignoring Him. WALK BY THE SPIRIT TODAY.

MARCH 17—"And walk in love, as Christ hath also loved us, and given himself for us and a sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling Savour." Eph. 5:2

Our walk for today is to be ruled and controlled by love for God and man. How much do I love God? Is there some way to measure, to weigh, or to read degrees as on a thermometer? Can I and do others know how much I love God? Do I love God anymore than my fellowmen? Do I love God anymore than I love those who persecute me for Christ's sake? Dare we say that we love God when we do not love our fellowmen? Is not our love measured by the service we do for the Lord? Is not our love weighed by the attitude we take towards those who persecute us for Christ's sake? Can men read the burning passion of love for the lost in my life as they read the degrees on a thermometer on a hot day? God's love for a lost world was manifested in the gift of His Son. Christ's love for His enemies, those who scurged Him, those who thrust a crown of thorns on His head, those who forced through His hands, was, "Father forgive them." WALK IN LOVE TODAY.

MARCH 18—"See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise." Eph. 5:15

This means to walk cautiously and give attention to all the circumstances. It means to consider the probable consequences of our actions. The question that should confront us for today is, "What will be the influence upon my life or others if I do this?" A little boy playing on the streets saw his Sunday school superintendent come out of the beer parlor to which the boy surprisingly said, "Do you drink beer?" This leader had not considered the influence his conduct would have on a little boy. A minister was asked to visit a man in prison and presented to him a picture of his mother. As the prisoner looked at the picture he said, "She has aged some, her hair have become more grey, a few more wrinkles, but take this back to her and tell her I do not want her picture. It is she who taught me to play cards in her home and made me a gambler which led to murder." She did not consider the probable consequences. Let us walk as the Word commands. WALK CIRCUMSPECTLY.

MARCH 19—"That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God . . ." Col. 1:10

Our walk for today is to be such that when we have reached the close of the day we can hear the Lord say, "I was pleased with your walk today." The Lord is much concerned about the walk of the Christian. Our walk is an evidence that we have been changed; our walk is a proof of our faith; our walk shows our interests; our walk according to the Word separates us from the world; our walk is being observed by the world. The Lord is anxious about the unsaved people, and since they do not read the Bible they read our lives. If we walk pleasing to Him and delight to do so the Lord can show the world what He is willing to do for them. Are you satisfied with Jesus? Do you have to go to the world to get some pleasure to be satisfied? WALK PLEASING TO THE LORD TODAY.

MARCH 20—"I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." III John 4

For today our prayer is that we might walk according to the Word and not according to our own ideas or popular opinion. Our final authority on all matters should be the Word of God. Every step of our life should be controlled by the Word of God. It is not our business to set our own opinions or ideas on a pedestal and disregard the Word. The Word is plain and positive in its teachings. We do not have to guess, think so, or imagine. The Word says, "Be not conformed to this world" or another translation has it "Let not your behaviour be like that of the world." The Word says, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth," "Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another—", "Recompense to no man evil for evil," a good motto in this time of war, and "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God". These are good mottoes for us to keep our eyes fastened on today. WALK IN THE TRUTH TODAY.

MARCH 21—"For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Eph. 2:10

God did not only save us from eternal hell, but He saved us to do good works. We should make it our constant aim and habit to do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith. The Gospels are filled with the good works of our Lord, and Peter says of Him that "He went about doing good." It is said of Dorcas that she "was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did", AND BECAUSE OF HER GOOD WORKS she had many friends. The Word commands us, "be careful to maintain good works" and "also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses." We are God's sample case, and He can show the world through our good works what He can do with regenerated men and women. Someone may need your help today; someone may need a smile today; someone may need to be encouraged today, someone may want to know how to be saved today. WALK IN GOOD WORKS TODAY.

MARCH 22—"For we walk by faith, not by sight." II Cor. 5:7

The Christian life is one of faith. We did not see Christ die for our sins, but we believe He did because the Word says so. We do not see the very act when God forgives the penitent sinner or the confessing saint, but the Word says so and we believe it. We believe that Christ is our sin-offering; we believe that we are reconciled to God by the death of His own Son; we believe that God makes us new creatures when we accept Christ as the one who died for us, and are the children of God; we believe that Christ is coming to take His Bride out of this world before the dreadful judgment is to come. It is such faith that motivates our lives. It is such faith that pleases God. Many people have trouble with believing God and they say, "I cannot believe." We are asked to take God at His Word and not force ourselves to believe something that we want to believe. Faith cometh by the hearing of the Word and so we can again teach and preach the Word so that men might walk by faith. It will please the Lord if we will WALK BY FAITH TODAY.

MARCH 23—"For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps." I Pet. 2:21

This verse was given to those who endured severe persecutions for the cause of Christ and their Christian life. They were not to revile nor take revenge, but suffer and reveal the spirit that Christ manifested on the cross. They are exhorted to follow in His steps. It means to walk as He walked. The one aim of our Lord was to please the Father. We find so many Christian people asking "May I do this?", but we should ask "Does this please Him?" The husband tries to please his wife because he loves her. The Christian is in love with the Lord Jesus, and therefore he does his best to please Him by walking in His steps. We will never err about knowing what pleases Him if we walk in the light of His Word. People often ask me when I come into their homes, "Do you eat this and do you like this?" My wife never asks me that, for she knows what pleases me. How did she know? We have lived together for a number of years. That is the secret. Learn to know Him. WALK IN HIS STEPS TODAY.

CORRESPONDENCE

EMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Doland, South Dakota

Greetings with Phil. 4:4, "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say rejoice." We are glad to give a report of the many blessings we had in the Lord the past year with our pastor, Jacob A. Friesen, and his wife Amanda Friesen who was bedfast for three years and now is again able to walk.

As a congregation we greatly appreciated the evangelistic meetings held by Brother H. Epp last spring. In October we had the privilege of hearing the blind evangelist, Rev. John Esau. Rev. Jacob Tiesen was with us for a mission festival.

Our church trustees are: Andrew E. Hofer, John J. M. Wipf, and Jake S. Stahl. Rev. Friesen was again called to serve as pastor for another year. Our church debt has been wiped out with the help of the Lord.

Our Sunday School superintendent is Jake S. Stahl. The assistant is Andrew J. Kleinsasser. The teachers meet once a month. Our C. E. meets every second Sunday in the month. Old and young take part. Recently our young people gave a program at Bridgewater. —Mr. and Mrs. Jake S. Stahl

Beatrice, Nebraska

At our annual church meeting we enjoyed an indoor picnic style meal at noon and "vesper" in the afternoon at four o'clock. Plans were made to enlarge the children's Sunday School rooms in the basement. These are also used for the Young People's C. E. meetings. Our membership dropped from 361 to 353. There were six deaths during the year, and Cornelius von Riesen has answered the Lord's call since then. Five members requested their letters to join elsewhere, and three cancelled their membership by marriage. Five were added by baptism and one by letter.

Rev. Franz Albrecht, elder emeritus, has somewhat improved, but he is not yet able to leave the house. Our pastor, Walter H. Dyck, is giving catechetical instruction to twelve young people. Last week he visited the C.P.S. camp at Denison, Iowa. One of our young men is stationed there.

We are glad for the opportunity to hear Jesse Hoover give a report of his stay in France. He left France two weeks after Helen A. Penner from Beatrice arrived there. News has arrived that Helen is sick. Although she enjoyed the work, it must have been too great a nervous strain to see so much misery and need. She very likely will be sent to Switzerland to recuperate.

We have had much snow and rain this winter. On January 1 everyone was snowbound, and there were no services. —E.H.T., Corr.

THIS WE WE WOULD SHARE—

Our basic interest in life must pivot in a permanent point lest we be caught in some panorama of tragic change and our lives be tossed far out to sea without an anchor to cast.

God is that point of pivot for the human soul. The Creator offers Himself to His creation as the changeless, abiding One in whom it can find its eternal anchor.

The Psalmist calls out: "God is our refuge. . . ., therefore will we not fear, though the earth do change." Ps. 46.

No, not fear, for the soul's resting place is the heart of God!

We want to share with you this morning's message brought to us by Rev. A. Warkentin. He led us to meditate on the truths found in verses 19-21 of II Timothy chapter two. (This is such a good chapter for the Church to read in these momentous days). Our hearts truly burned within as he taught us the fuller meaning of these verses of which I bring only a few nuggets:

1. "Howbeit the firm foundation of God standeth." Though the faith of some in the church of Ephesus had been overthrown by false teaching, the firm foundation of God remained the same and will remain the same, unchanging, eternal. It is Christ Jesus the immoveable Rock, the living Church.

2. This foundation has a two-fold seal: (a) "The Lord knoweth them that are His: and (b) Let everyone that nameth the name of the Lord depart from unrighteousness." There is such a comfort in the knowing Lord. Then He knows that we are clay: Then He knows our limitations, our efforts in service. But He cannot use sin. There is no place for faulty materials in the walls that rise from the firm foundation of the Church of Christ.

3. And the vessels for service in the Church are varied: some are of gold, some silver, some wood and some of earth. They are varied not because of the position they hold but varied because of their purity. What a challenge to our hearts! Paul exhorts Timothy: "If a man purge himself, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, meet for the master's use, prepared unto every good work."

Yes. sanctified, meet for the Master's use! Oh then

On the Rock of Ages
Firmly let me stand
Place Thy seal upon me,
Grave me in Thy hand
Clay am I unmolded,—
Jesus, Thou canst make
Out of me a vessel
For Thy glory sake.

With greetings from the First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas —Joanna S. Andres, Corr.

IN MEMORIAM

AGANETHA THIESSEN, née Epp, was born in West Prussia, January 31, 1857. Her parents were Peter and Aganetha Epp, née Andres. Her childhood was spent in Germany. When she was thirteen years old she, with her parents, left Germany to make their home in Russia. When she was seventeen years old she was baptized upon her confession of faith by Rev. Jacob Toews. On December 16, 1880 she was united in marriage with Heinrich Thiessen. Six children were born to this union, all of whom are living at present.

Surviving besides these six children, are forty-two grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren, one brother and two half sisters. Four grandchildren preceded her in death. Our dear father passed away November 12, 1931. This made her life very lonely.

In 1883 our parents came to America and settled near Beatrice, Nebraska. In the spring of 1888 they came to Kansas and joined the Emmaus church, where she remained a faithful member until her death. She enjoyed good health until old age made life hard for her.

On December 27 she suffered a stroke from which she did not recover, and very quietly passed away January 7 at the age of eighty-four years.

Sleep on beloved, sleep and take thy rest,
  Lay down thy head upon the Saviour's breast
We loved thee well, but Jesus loved thee best,
  Good night, good night, good night.

Interment was in the Emmaus cemetery, with her pastor officiating.

St. Francis and the Infidel

The life of St. Francis of Assisi is studded with exquisitely lovely stories of the spirit. He was as truly a miracle-worker as Jesus—"Since Jesus," said Renan, "the only perfect Christian." This gentle friar tamed birds and animals, subdued criminals and outlaws, healed disease and disarmed violence, brought peace and virtue to the hearts of men. St. Francis conquered more countries by his teaching than many a captain by his sword. His order seized more captives than the armies of Caesar and Napoleon. His power was love, and it was irresistible.

Of all the stories told of the Assisan, none is more remarkable than that of his visit to the Sultan of Egypt during one of the ceaseless Crusades. The Sultan must have held very much the same place in the life of that time that Hitler holds in ours. He was denounced and hated as an infidel, and the Christian world had taken up arms to destroy him. He was the enemy of all that was deemed precious in the world, and the war against him was a holy war. But Francis could not see it this way at all. In the first place he was perhaps the one living man who thought of the Sultan not as an enemy, but as a child, however wayward, of the living God. His soul was crying out for salvation! In the second place, Francis was certain that it did no good to fight and kill. What was needed, in the case of the Sultan as in the case of the wolf of Gubbio, was understanding and compassion, a mutual confession of sin, an endeavor to live at peace and to serve one another in kindliness and love. So, in the innocence of his heart, Francis resolved to go to Egypt and see the Sultan, and commend Christ to his heart.

By sheer force of will and in incomparable spirit of audacity, Francis made his way to the Christian camp at Damietta, where he was horror-stricken by the moral condition of the crusading army. He went to the General and prophesied defeat as God's punishment for such sin, and was laughed at for his pains. Then, taking his life in his hands, he crossed over into the Moslem camp, and sought audience of the Sultan. Here he was ridiculed and threatened. But simplicity, armed with courage, had its way; and in due course he was received into the royal presence. Just what happened we do not know. But tradition has it that Francis' earnestness pleased the Sultan, and he heard him gladly. But he was skeptical of the Christians. Was God in the Christian camp? Had the Christians repented, as Francis was asking him to repent? If he yielded to the Saint's appeal for peace and brotherhood, his own followers might well slay him; what assurance was there that the Christians would not do the same? And Francis, remembering what he had seen among the Crusaders, knew there was no answer to these questions. In contrition and shame, he bowed his head, and wept. He must first convert his own Christian brethren to the way of Christ, before he asked the infidels to walk in that way.

Just how much of this is legend and how much history, no one can say. But whatever happened in the Moslem camp, the lesson is plain. Not to hurt the enemy but to heal ourselves, is the only redemption.

The Ministry of Reconciliation*

Vincent in Greek word studies says, "God is the prime-mover of reconciliation. Man has made no move toward God. It was God who moved toward us in endeavoring to break down our hostility, commend His love toward us, and convince man of the consequences of sin."

It was "while we were yet without strength that Christ died for the ungodly." (Rom. 5:6) Then in vs. 8 we read how that "God commended His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Then in I John 4:19 we read, "We love Him because He first loved us." In II Cor. 5:19 "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." God was all through and behind the process of reconciliation. Vincent, in commenting on II Cor. 5:19 says, "the emphasis is not so much on the fact that 'God was in Christ,' as that 'God was..... reconciling,' and that the primary reference of the statement is, no doubt, to God's reconciling manifestation in the incarnation and death of Christ; yet, as a fact it includes much more." Vincent says further, "God was engaged in reconciling the world from the beginning, and that in Christ, as indicated by such passages as John 1:4,5,9,10, where reference is made to Christ as the Creator of all things, and how that He was in the world, and the world was made by Him and the world knew Him not." (vs. 10) This was all true before He came "in the likeness of sinful flesh," and before He "came unto His own and His own received Him not." (vs. 11)

Again we say that God sought to reconcile the world. Man did not seek reconciliation. It was the offended and not the offender who sought it. This shows the strength of His love, which resulted in providing a Mediator between a sinful people and a Holy God, in the person of Jesus Christ.

II. The Medium by which reconciliation was provided.

"Reconciled to Himself (God) by Jesus Christ." (II Cor. 5:18)

"We were reconciled to God by the death of His Son." (Rom. 5:10)

"Having made peace by the blood of the cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself." (Col. 1:20)

"That He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the Cross, having slain the enmity thereby." (Eph. 2:16)

Christ was truly the Mediator in the work of reconciliation, and as we see in Col. 1:20,21 and Eph.2:16 and II Cor. 5:18, it was not by His example, not by His teaching, not even by His sinless life, but by His death. We say it reverently that Christ in all His perfection during His life-time could have reconciled no one to God. It was only accomplished through His death. It was there that "God made Him to be

Glimpses of Our Civilian Public Service Camps

The Cascade Locks, Oregon, Camp

by Wendell E. Harmon

Did you ever try living in a test tube—working, playing, eating, and sleeping before the critical eyes of a master chemist?

More than a hundred boys in C. P. S. camp No. 21 at Cascade Locks, Oregon, are doing it, along with some 1,600 other conscientious objectors in other camps throughout the nation, and they're not finding themselves a bit cramped for space.

Day after day the wary scientist keeps his constant vigil. He is not watching the reaction of a combination of chemicals which have been mixed in the vial, but he is observing with rapt interest a mixture of lives, interests, and ideals in one of the most unique wartime experiments ever sanctioned by our government. This chemist is not an individual, but a composite of individuals, organizations and governmental agencies.

But he is still skeptical. And why not? Never before has an experiment like this been undertaken; never before has this wide variety of elements been brought together, combined into one large test tube, and the reaction recorded.

Although still doubtful as to the result, there is little indecision in the chemist's mind as to what he would like that result to be. Here, in the formative period, he hopes to find the ingredients of a new way of life, the elements of a doctrine which may become a brightly beaming signpost when a world gone mad with hate comes to itself once again and inquires for a better way.

But until it does, those test tube dwellers who are calling Cascade Locks home now, are busy learning to live together successfully, because they are of the firm opinion that camp society, with its diversity of religious backgrounds, its wide stratification of educational levels, and its varied social classes and personalities, is only the society of the world en miniatur. Whether it's around the dinner table or around the conference table, courtesy is courtesy, and whether it's electing a dormitory representative or a state representative, honesty is honesty.

This society of Camp No. 21 is still in its infancy but already the firmly built skeleton of a social structure is apparent. A camp council, including representatives from each dormitory is already meeting at least once each week to think together on important camp problems. Even before the council was organized, the campers were meeting in a body to discuss the basic principles on which the camp should be conducted. Already a religious committee is planning Sunday worship services, prayer meetings, and daily devotional periods. Already a camp chorus is rehearsing twice a week, a camp newspaper has published its first issue, a fire-fighting brigade has been organized, and an educational program is well under way.

But let's start at the beginning.

That beginning was nine men who, last November 27, first bounced up the rain-gullied driveway in the camp station wagon to survey an establishment which had been vacated by boys of the CCC only two weeks previously. For these nine men, C. P. S. camp life was nothing new, they had already lived for several months at the San Dimas C. P. S. camp in Southern California. They had volunteered to come to this new campsite and groom it for the arrival of a group of boys for whom camp life would be something new, very new.

An event somewhat comparable to that which took place in the Dionne household not many years ago occurred on December 5 when the camp family was increased by 71 new arrivals. In contrast to the Dionne event, however, these were all boys! Southern California had produced most of the new company but other sections of the Golden Bear state as well as other Western states, had made generous contributions.

The impact of the arrival of the group was apparent within a matter of hours from the time they spilled out of the trucks which transported them from the railway station. Cold, bare, barn-like barracks were soon well on the way to becoming neat, livable dormitories. Mothers who had never recognized any aptitude toward the domestic arts in their sons, would have been overjoyed, and no little amazed, to watch their grown-un Juniors, who always could scatter their toys across the living room floor but could never pick them up again, carefully making their beds, sweeping the floors, and dusting out their closet space.

But no boy could be expected to devote a great lot of time to such duties and soon the center of activity shifted to the out-of-doors, which, along with weather, is one thing that there is an abundance of at Camp 21. The second day after arrival of the large contingent, the buzz saw was started, preparing the winter's wood supply, and it has been going almost every day since. Camp buildings were checked and repairs were made where needed, washing machines began to hum in the laundry, and the kitchen utensils were already seeing good service, much to the satisfaction of all the new campers.

That first sudden burst of enthusiasm has passed. Now the camp has settled down into—no, not the proverbial rut, but into a more everyday routine. This is no summer vacation on the beautiful Columbia river, but this is home, this is work, this is play, this all that goes to make up life, for a little while, at least.

Let's go through a typical day with the campers. Think you can take it? They do, and with a smile.

Rising call is at 6 o'clock despite frequent protests from bleary-eyed dreamers that it's only a little past midnight. A piping hot breakfast of cereal, toast, jam, scrambled eggs or potatoes, and coffee is served at 6:30. Before the boys leave the tables, morning devotions are conducted by a camper who has volunteered for this particular morning. Scripture reading and prayer are most frequently used, but often excerpts are read from favorite devotional books or other literature.

Work call is at 7:45. To get a rounded picture of the work program it will be necessary that you spend almost as many days in camp as there are boys, and each day follow a different camper as he goes about his assigned job.

You would spend one day on Eagle creek, about seven miles west of camp near the town of Cascade Locks, where a crew is cleaning debris from a favorite vacation spot for summer tourists. The following day you will want to join the Herman creek crew which is engaged in one of the Northwest's major industries, that of logging. The logs are loaded on trucks driven by campers, with whom, incidently, you will be wanting to work one day, and are brought to the camp to feed the hungry buzz saw.

You will also spend a day at the Columbia Gorge ranger station, also located near Cascade Locks, where three boys are employed, one in the office doing clerical work and two in the warehouse. Then, if you are not too sore and stiff, you will want to come back to camp and juggle logs for a day with the wood saw crew which is cutting the wood into small pieces and stacking it in large sheds, ready to satisfy the appetites of the battery of wood stoves which heat the dozen camp buildings.

You are fortunate to have made your out-of-camp rounds now because later the work program will be greatly expanded. Roads must be built, waterfalls beautified, fire guards constructed, and ranger lookout stations erected. Each project anticipates the arrival of two guests, one desired and encouraged—the tourist—and the other feared and dreaded—fire.

But your picture of the camp work program is still unfinished. To complete your rounds you must spend a number of days in the camp itself, observing the camp overhead as it goes about its daily tasks. If you are a normal person, you will want to go first to the kitchen, and remain there longest, no doubt. There you will see campers doing the cooking, baking, washing dishes, waiting tables, and planning menus.

Then you will visit the laundry where two men do all the washing and ironing for the entire camp. You will make the rounds with those boys working on the wood detail as they keep the buildings well supplied with fuel. You will observe the camp maintenance man, the blacksmiths, welders, and mechanics. And if you are still game, you will stay up one night to track the night watchman as he makes his hourly rounds through all the buildings, feeding fires and keeping a general vigil over the camp while his weary compatriots sleep.

Your last day you will want to spend in the office, the nerve center of the camp. There you will observe the business manager, himself an assignee, and two men who comprise the clerical staff. And there you will meet the man who keeps the entire camp organized and moving, the director.

Rev. Mark Schrock, director of Camp 21, left the pastorate of the Church of the Brethren of Olympia, Washington, to supervise this project which is sponsored jointly by the Brethren Service Committee and the Mennonite Central Committee. But he would shun the terms supervisor or director. Rather he likes to think of himself as the individual who handles the business and technical details of the project and of the boys as the real directors. It is they who he would have make the decisions relative to the administration of the camp, rather than himself as a dictatorial watchdog.

Mr. Schrock is a personal friend of each camper. He can call them all by first and last names and he is never too busy to discuss personal problems. His work day starts early and ends late. Often he's in his office before breakfast wrestling with a knotty problem and throughout the day he's in constant touch with all phases of camp life. Besides his many camp duties, he finds time to accept speaking engagements before Northwest peace meetings or other gatherings. Like the rest of the boys, the camp is his home, but he has one advantage, he has his family with him. Mrs. Schrock serves as camp matron, and their four children help create a "homey" atmosphere.

The work day ends at 5 o'clock. And then the "family life" begins. You will want to watch the boys live together; so let's make a hurried trip through the dormitories.

But no, there blows the bugle for dinner so let's postpone our little trip and go first to the dining hall. To avoid the military touch, the bugler usually plays a well-known hymn as a signal to "come and get it."

The tired but happy campers pour through the door. Dirty work togs have been hung away and now the boys, still rosy from a hot shower, are wearing clean clothing, even if it is only overalls and work shirts. Yes, in a sense, they do dress for dinner.

All remain standing at the tables until grace has been spoken by one of the number. Or maybe this evening it has been suggested that they sing their thanksgiving to God, and someone leads in a verse of "Break Thou the Bread of Life" or "Day is Dying in the West."

The simple but sufficient food disappears as if by magic. The hand may be quicker than the eye, but the mouth has them both beat here. Waiters are kept busy keeping the tables supplied. You will notice the table conversation is of a light, cheerful, but not ridiculous, nature. The war situation is rarely mentioned. Not that the campers aren't interested—there are just too many other things to talk about. The day's work, girl friends back home, and camp "extra curricular" activities come for the most discussion. Following the meal, any necessary announcements are made and the group is excused.

We walk leisurely down the path toward the dormitories. Before entering we pause to look northward out over the mighty Columbia, now almost hidden under the thick blankets of the night. Across the river in Washington we see snow-covered mountains rising from the river's edge. Just behind these mountains but hidden to view from the camp are the majestic peaks of Mt. Saint Helens, Mt. Adams, and still farther to the north, Mt. Rainier.

As we turn to the south, our view is cut off by the high peaks rising directly behind the camp. Countless potential Christmas trees dot the sides of the slopes, and high on the cliffs we can count nearly a dozen different waterfalls, pouring cold, bubbling water down into the canyon streams.

By this time the campers have all left the dining room and are settled in their evening's activity. Let's pay dormitory No. 1 a visit.

All is relatively quiet in the long, low structure. There is the normal hum of conversation but no loud, boistrous talking. Near the center stove, Hugh, with his violin tucked under his chin, is working over a difficult Brahms score. He was a violin and piano teacher in a Southern California junior college before coming to camp and even here is keeping up on his practicing. Warren, weary from his mechanic's work of the day, has draped himself across his bed and is listening to soft music on his radio. Wendell, who had been a school teacher before being drafted, is weaving a belt on his tiny loom. A half dozen other boys are congregated around the table in the west end of the room, writing letters, reading or studying. Jake, who had been preparing for the ministry, is outlining next Sunday's Sunday School lesson.

We pass on to dormitory No. 2, where a lively discussion is in progress near the center of the building. Methods of how the dormitories can be made neater and cleaner are being aired. The results of the session will probably be presented to the camp council at its next meeting. That's democracy at work.

At a far end of the dormitory Bill and Henry are discussing photography. Henry was a photographer's assistant before entering camp and Bill was a photographer for a Los Angeles newspaper. Karl is sitting on his bed reading aloud to himself and is about to become the target for an old shoe which George, who is trying to read at the table, is ready to heave.

Dormitory No. 3 is better known in camp as Sleepy Hollow. Here, too, the inhabitants are gathered around the long table in the middle of the room. Walter, a former airline employee, and Wayne, a former logger and saw mill worker, are concentrating over a checker board. Bill, a Los Angeles art student, is painting signs to be placed at various places around the camp. Gene is hard at work with a needle and a thread un-air conditioning his overalls while Leonard is reclining on his bed reading his latest home-town papers.

We leave and go next door to dormitory No. 4, better known as Bar-barrack. Here too, letter writing and reading is the favorite sport. At one corner of the table sits Allan, graduate of the University of Southern California School of Music and director of the camp chorus, going over suitable music for his charges. Occasionally he breaks out in a high Irish tenor voice much to the displeasure of Kemper who is working on his latest oil portrait. He, too, holds a degree from U. S. C. Charles, a psychologist and one of the half dozen University of California at Los Angeles graduates in camp, is poring over a scholarly psychological work he has gleaned from the camp library.

And so we leave the dormitories, but we still have not seen all the phases of the off-hour activities. Nearly a dozen boys are in the recreation hall playing ping pong or checkers. Another small group is in the library reading or studying. In the camp newspaper office, just off the library reading room, Wendell, editor of the semi-monthly publication, is working on articles like this one or planning the next issue of the paper. Kermit, assistant editor and former school teacher from near San Francisco, is there too, dividing this time between his newspaper work and librarian duties.

So you have been through one complete day with the campers. But you will want to know something more of the general camp program.

The religious program is as varied as the boys themselves, and yet there is a unity which is inspiring and challenging. Each Sunday morning campers representing most of the major denominations gather for a worship service designed to meet the spiritual needs of all. The camp director usually occupies the pulpit, but occasionally a camper or a visitor delivers the sermon. Although held in the rough, unfinished chapel at the southwest corner of the campground, the service is every bit as inspiring as if it were held in a metropolitan cathedral. Some boys believe it is more so. On designated Sundays a communion service is held, with a different denomination in charge each time.

Preceding each Sunday morning worship service, three classes are conducted, with each camper free to choose which he would prefer to attend. One class studies the International Sunday School lesson, another examines the Bible as a literary work, and the other makes a study of the bases of Pacifism. All three classes are well attended.

Wednesday night is prayer meeting night. Campers who feel the need of midweek spiritual activity, meet in the chapel to sing their favorite gospel hymns, to hear the Scripture read and commented upon by the leader, and to kneel for a season of earnest prayer. Also a vital part of the religious program are the meditation rooms in the north part of the library building where campers may go at any time for a period of private devotion and prayer.

The recreational activities also hold a prominent place in camp life. A large recreational hall has been furnished with ping pong tables, checker boards, and other games as well as comfortable furniture for those who prefer just to relax. A camp store at one end of the building caters to the sweet tooth of the campers as well as to other personal needs. Each Saturday afternoon boys interested in basketball, volley ball, wrestling, or tumbling may go to the Cascade Locks high school gymnasium where an athletic program is sponsored by the camps.

And so you have lived for a little while with boys whose convictions forbid them to bear arms or resort to violence of any kind. You may call it routine, but for them it's as changing as the waters of the blue Columbia which roll ceaselessly past their front door. Every day is a new pattern of events just like formations of the billowy clouds that dance around the high peaks above the camp.

This is an experiment that must work, and here are 113 young Americans who know it will.

DEVOTIONAL TRAINING SERIES

LOVE HIM; SERVE HIM

John 14:15, 21; 15:12-17

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "What a Fellowship," No. 489; "Master Speak! Thy Servant Heareth," No. 219.
2. Reading of main topic and prayer.
3. "Stewardship or Selfishness" (a pageant at 10 cents. Order from Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander, Quakertown, Pa., or Mrs. A. E. Kreider, North Newton, Kansas.)
4. Offering for home missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"The call of Christ is ultimately a call to service. He bids all who love Him to follow Him, down the highways of the world and into all the by-ways, 'teaching and preaching and healing.' 'Come ye after me,' He says, 'and I will make you fishers of men.'

"To be a disciple of Christ one must first of all love Him. But to serve Him is the test of discipleship. 'Faith without works is dead,' said James. Love without service is a vain and useless sentiment which honors neither the one who loves nor the one who is loved. By his works may we know a man, whether he loves Christ or himself the better."

III. Topics for Talks:

"Loving Obedience" I John 5:2, 3; "Liberal Giving" Luke 6:38; "Living Example" Acts 4:13; "Lasting Endurance" II Tim. 4:7, 8.

IV. For Discussion:

1. In what sacrificial ways can we express our love and gratitude to Jesus Christ?
2. Why was Jesus so appreciative of Mary's gracious act of anointment? Mark 14:3-11.

V. For Study

Christian character is expressed in gracious personal relationships and kindnesses as well as in the support of great movements and public needs. Love leads the way in finding means of giving service. Love and devotion like that of Mary when she anointed her Lord with the precious ointment awakens a response in our hearts to resolve to commit our lives to Jesus in loving, faithful service. Not much preaching, but a lot of loving and living will win men and women and children for Christ today. The influence of a life of love and service is difficult to escape; it will have its innings no matter how often it has to get up and try again.

VI. Illustration:

A gentleman visiting one of the hospitals for lepers in India, and wishing to test the nurse on duty, said, "You must have a great deal of enthusiasm for humanity to labor here among those awful cases of disease."

"Enthusiasm for humanity, indeed!" replied the nurse. "That would not keep me here a week; but I do possess some of the compassion of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that is the reason why I am content to live and labor among such surroundings."

It is the love of Christ that is the motive of all true service for God. We love lepers because He first loved us.

VII. Food for Thought:

"'Tis the touch of the human hand that counts,
The touch of your hand on mine,
Which means far more to the fainting heart
Than shelter, or bread, or wine;
For shelter is gone when the night is o'er,
And bread lasts only a day,
But the touch of your hand, and the sound of your voice
Sing on in my soul alway."

"If You Love Him, Why Not Serve Him?"

Song: "Lead On, O King Eternal"
Scripture: Matt. 10:5-13, 37-42
Song: "Hark! The Voice of Jesus Calling" Poem:

The Faithful Few

When the meeting's called to order
And you look around the room,
You are sure to see some faces
That from out the shadows loom:
They are always at the meeting,
And stay until it's through;
The ones that I would mention
Are always the faithful few.

They fill the vacant offices,
As they're always on the spot,
No matter what's the weather,
Though it may be awful hot;
It may be damp and rainy,
But they are tried and true—
The ones that you rely upon
Are always the faithful few.

There's lots of worthy members
Who will come when in a mood—
When everything's convenient,
They can do a little good:
They're a factor in the class,
And necessary, too;
But the ones who never fail us
Are always the faithful few.

If 'twere not for these faithful members
Whose shoulders are at the wheel,
Keep the class moving onward
Without a halt or reel,
What would be the fate of others
Who claim so much to do?
They surely would go under,
But for the "faithful few."

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

"I Will Join With Other Christians"—Acts 2:41-47

March 22, 1942

"A FELLOWSHIP MEETING"

The goal to be set up in this meeting is that every Junior, having decided for Christ, shall also join the church. The benefit and duties of church membership are many, and you can be a good and useful member, or a lazy and weak member of the church, one who has fruits, or one who is not known among his own. The older members of C. E. should be of great assistance to the Junior C. E. member who may be ready for church affiliation, by being good examples of Christian living and giving. We must be willing to give our time, talent, and of our means to promote the program of the church.

The Question Bee

1. What are the benefits of church membership?
2. What are the duties of church membership?
3. What security do we feel when we are with Christian friends?
4. When should I join the church?
5. What must I forsake and accept to belong to the fellowship of the church?
6. What was the last command Christ gave?

The Prayer List

(a) To heed the voice of Christ. (b) To refuse to walk with the world. (c) A closer walk and talk with God. (d) To be a fruitful church member. (e) To love my fellow-men more sincerely. (f) To forgive the faults of others.

Which Is It?

The Past:

"I lived for myself
I thought for myself
For myself and none beside;
Just as if Jesus had never lived,
And if He had never died." —Anon.

The Future:

"My life, my love I give to Thee
Thou Lamb of God, Who died for me,
Oh, may I ever faithful be,
My Saviour and my God.

—R. E. Hudson

sin for us who knew no sin." It was there that "He bore our sins in His own body on the tree." (I Pet. 2:24)

Jesus Christ was indeed qualified for the work of reconciliation; in fact, He was and is the only one so qualified, for (1) He was endowed with a divine and human nature. Therefore He had the nature of both parties at enmity—God and man. Therefore, in the language of Job, He could "lay His hand upon both." (Job 9:33) (2) He was also intimately acquainted with both parties and knew what was needful to be done. He could say of the Father, "No man knoweth the Father but the Son." (Matt. 11:27) He also knew man so well that He could say that He needed no one to tell Him what was in man, for he knew it. (John 2:25) If Jesus did not know both parties as He did, He could not have served as an adequate Mediator. (3) He was also the friend of both parties. That He loved the Father, no one will question, and that He was a friend to man, and loved him, is proven by His life as well as His death in their behalf. As a friend of both He was interested in the welfare of each one. (4) He was also willing to suffer anything from each party in order to produce such reconciliation. From the Father He was willing to endure all things which He thought necessary to show His hatred of sin, by His vicarious sufferings, and thus make an atonement. From the hand of man He was willing to endure reproach and scorn if possibly He might be able to induce Him to be reconciled to God. (5) Then Christ also removed all the obstacles which stood in the way to reconciliation with the Father. He made it possible for Him to consistently pardon sin. He made atonement for sin so that God could be just while justifying the sinner. On the other hand, by the Holy Spirit He humbles the pride of the sinner in order that he may become willing to be reconciled.

By His death He has removed every obstacle between God and man. Let us not deceive ourselves. It is by the atonement alone that men ever become reconciled. Here lies the burden of our message today. Where will the modernist and liberalist stand who make light of the blood of Christ, or what they call "the slaughter-house religion?" They have no ground upon which to stand and are themselves unreconciled. They are blind leading the blind, and both shall "fall into the ditch."

We are reconciled to God only by the death of His Son. (Rom. 5:10) As an illustration, a mother in New York had a son who had gone quite deep into sin. After being corrected quite often by the father without avail, he was finally turned out of the house by the father. In leaving, the son promised never to come back without the father's invitation, and the father assured him that such a thing would never happen. Grief over the son laid the mother on her dying bed. In her last days the father asked her if there was anything he might do for her. "Yes," she replied, "you can send for my son." The father was unwilling at first, but finally consented to do so. The son arrived on the invitation of the father. As the son entered the sick room the father turned his back on him. As the mother was dying she endeavored to bring father and son together in some way, but the father would not forgive the boy, and the boy was too proud to ask for forgiveness. Just as the mother was expiring she made one final effort to reach the hands of father and son, and placing them together, held them tight as she breathed her last. It was over her dead body that they were reconciled, but it took the mother's death to bring it about. So, has not God made a great sacrifice that we might be reconciled—even the death of His own Son. (Biblical Encyclopedia Vol. V, p.32)

Going back to Rom. 5:10, we read, "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by (in) His life." Stifler, in remarking on this scripture says, "If God could do so much for His enemies, what can He not do for those who are not now reconciled?"

Some may. take the last part of this verse and emphasize the life of Christ, but you will notice that His life is mentioned following His death; therefore, Paul is saying that if the death of Christ accomplished so much, namely reconciliation, what will not His life, His intercessory work at the right hand of God today, assure us. We have thus far seen that God is the Author and Christ the Medium of this reconciliation.

III. The Recipients, which was the world.

"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." (II Cor. 5:19)

Dr. Lewis Sperry Chafer says, "The death of Christ was a priestly mediation by which the world was reconciled to God. Reconciliation results when enmity is removed, and, while it is never implied that the world's enmity toward God is removed, it is declared that the judicial state of the world is so altered before God by the death of His Son, that He is said to have reconciled the world to Himself. So complete and far reaching is that provision that it is added in scripture that He is not now imputing their trespasses unto them." Why? Faussett says, "For He imputed our sins to the sin-bearer, Jesus Christ." "For He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." (II Cor. 5:21)

It is the world of lost humanity whom God seeks to reconcile to himself; a world marred with sin; a world in chaos, which He desires again to make a cosmos. How has He decided to do this? Through His Agent, the minister of the gospel.

IV. The Agent

"And hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." (vs. 18)

"And hath committed to us the word of reconciliation." (vs. 19)

"Now then we are ambassadors for Christ." (vs. 20)

The pronoun we and us as used by Paul, refers to those who have been reconciled—the apostles and ministers of the gospel. Yes, and more than that, it includes all saints of God. It is every believer's duty to bring this message to a lost and dying world.

This ministry, which includes the message from "God in Christ," to "Christ in us the hope of glory," or from incarnation to imputation of His righteousness to our account through regeneration, has been committed to us. By us, as its agent, it is to be given forth.

The fact that man without Christ is at enmity with God and that God is at enmity with his sin and "wicked works;" and that Christ died on Calvary for that sin so that God might be just in justifying and reconciling the sinner to Himself; and that the atonement is the only way to reconciliation—all this must grip our hearts, yea, burden our hearts for un-reconciled mankind if we are going to be very much concerned about giving forth the remedy "the word of reconciliation."

Paul also reminds us that, as such, we are ambassadors for Christ, sent by Him to negotiate with men in regard to their reconciliation and acceptance of God's terms of peace. Tindal gives this translation: "we are here in the room or place of Christ."

What is the work of an ambassador? What do the ambassadors of other nations do when they come to the United States? Do they come here to establish a miniature kingdom for their nation? Fifth columnist workers may have that in mind, but a true ambassador is here to represent the head of his country in all business transactions between the two. They try to advance the cause of commerce, always endeavoring to keep peace between nations if possible.

As ambassadors of Christ, it is my firm conviction that we are not here to establish Christ's kingdom. He will do that Himself in the "fulness of time." He does not need our help to do that. Our business is to represent Christ in this world. We seek not an abiding place here for we are pilgrims and strangers. We are here to prepare souls for the place that Christ has gone to prepare for His own. That place is a prepared place for a prepared people.

In the same sense that Jesus spoke to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again He cannot see the kingdom of God," so are we to bring souls into that spiritual kingdom. Our business is to make known and to explain the terms on which God is willing to be reconciled to men. We are not to negotiate on just any terms, nor are we to change those terms which God proposed. Paul said, "for if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that which I preached unto you, let him be accursed," (Gal. 1:8).

We are to seek the honor of Him who sent us forth, as well as to seek only His will. We are not to promote our own welfare or seek personal popularity and honor. We must be willing to proclaim this unpopular message even if it means unpopularity for us. It is His message and is to be given forth in His name and on His authority.

Paul said, "Be ye reconciled to God," (vs. 20). This is the burden of our message which we are to bear to our fellow-men. If we can get them to be at peace with God through the Lord Jesus Christ our problem of peace between man and man is solved, and not before. They must submit to God's terms of mercy and peace. The obstacles on God's part have been removed. It now remains for man to lay aside his hostility abandon his sins and receive God's mercy.

This ministry is a most responsible and important work. There is no office of equal importance in the world. How wonderful to be able to make known the terms on which God is willing to bestow favor on sinful man. How wonderful the condescension of God to propose such a plan of reconciliation; to think that He not only was willing to be reconciled, but He sought it; so much so that He sent His Son to die on the cross to secure it.

Beloved, to those who have been reconciled, has been entrusted the ministry of reconciliation. It is a clear message, for "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself." It is a burning message, "Be ye reconciled to God." It is a bright message, "For we are to be made the righteousness of God in Him."

"And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us (who are reconciled) the ministry of reconciliation," (II Cor. 5:18).

O, that all Mennonites might rather be yielded 100 per cent to Jesus Christ and that they might launch out in a mighty offensive to win sinners to Christ. We are to war with the Sword of the Spirit and receive precious stars in our crown. Dare we yield more to man than to God?

REPORT OF THE FOREIGN MISSION BOARD MEETING HELD FEBRUARY 18-20, 1942, NEWTON, KANSAS

The session was opened by the president of the board with the reading of John 9:1-7 and appropriate remarks, emphasizing verse 4, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work," as it is applicable to the present world situations.

All board members were present, P. P. Wedel, A. E. Kreider, H. G. Nyce, A. P. Waltner. D. J. Unruh, J. E. Regier, and P. H. Richert, and also the president of the conference, C. E. Krehbiel, by special invitation, and the officers of the Women's Missionary Societies, Mrs. R. A. Goerz, Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz, Mrs. Dr. Lohrentz, and Miss Elizabeth Voran.

As usual the first report read was that of the treasurer, J. E. Regier. The following is a short resume of the same:

Receipts:
Balance in Bank, Jan. 1, 1941		$ 357.14
General Fund	$74,403.76

		$88,195.84
Expenses:
Disbursements		$88,195.84
BALANCE IN BANK Jan. 1, 1942		$ 161.07

1. Resolved to accept the treasurer's report as read with sincere thanks.

OKLAHOMA

2. Resolved to ask our traveling missionaries to make brief mention also of the work among the American Indians, whose missionaries do not visit churches so much.

3. Resolved to turn the church site matter over to the Board of Trustees of the General Conference.

4. Resolved to accept the Oklahoma budget of $2090.00, itemized as follows:

Fonda, Cantonment, Longdale, Canton
Station account	$300.00
N. Helper Account	600.00
Reshingling Arapahoe Church	90.00
Clinton, Hammon & Thomas
Station Account	$ 300.00
N. Helper Account	800.00
	$2090.00

5. Resolved that we continue to look for a new couple for the work among the Cheyennes.

6. Resolved to ask Brother Ediger for an estimate of the cost of the proposed new church at Clinton.

MONTANA

7. Resolved to allow the budgets for Montana as follows:

Lame Deer
Frank's work at Birney	$200.00
N. Helper in Lame Deer	$120.00
Budget at Lame Deer	180.00
Ashland
Budget	175.00
Busby
Budget	100.00
Birney
Fuel	50.00

8. Resolved to vote Miss Gibbs the same allowance as last year, i. e., $10.00 a month.

9. Resolved to report to Brother Petter that according to our pension rules (which require this annually) the board has decided to continue his services another year.

10. Resolved to refer the matter of Milton's and Miss Buller's employment back to the Montana Worker's Conference for recommendations. And if the Workers Conference is in favor of placing Milton Whiteman at Birney we plan to place Miss Buller at Busby as a lay mission helper.

11. Resolved that it is the policy of the board not to pay any bills that are not authorized by the board, except in emergency cases which are to be decided upon by the worker's conferences on the fields.

12. In view of the fact that Brother Petter has reached an age when it is necessary to lighten his responsibilities and duties, and also in view of the fact, that the board desires to have a superintendent who is able to visit frequently all stations on the Montana field, be it resolved that we ask Brother Habegger to assume the duties of superintendent, and we herewith express our sincere thanks to Brother Petter for his long services as superintendent.

ARIZONA

13. Resolved to allow the proposed budget for Arizona as follows:

Moencopi
Fuel	$ 65.00
Miscellaneous repair	35.00
Organ (folding)	90.00
Song books	30.00

(The last two items might be used as projects for the sewing circles.)

New roof on the house	$100.00

Oraibi
For interpreter's salary	$180.00
Miscellaneous repair	50.00
Total	$730.00

14. Resolved to cover the deficit of last year's church building account of $324.99.

15. Resolved to allow for further needs for the new church $450.00.

16. Resolved in regard to the matter of supervision, the board wishes to reemphasize that Rev. Suderman is the superintendent of the Arizona field, including the supervision of Hotevilla.

17. Resolved in view of the board's plan to rebuild the Mesa church, using as much of the old church for it as possible, we ask Brother Suderman to send us an estimate of the cost, although we cannot build this church immediately.

INDIA

18. Resolved to accept the total India budget of $18,563.00 for 12 months or $23,563.00 for 15 months.

19. Resolved, if at all possible, to send the Sisters Becker and Schrag to India this coming year.

20. Resolved, that the executive committee write a letter in reply to the proposition by the India Conference to create a "Provident Fund" for the native workers.

21. Resolved to employ Brother Wiens for another year for $650.00 in the Historical Library.

22. Resolved to give Brother P. A. Penner the opportunity to do deputation work during the year, as health and strength permit.

CHINA

23. Resolved that in the absence of definite information about the China needs, we set aside $10,000 as budget for China.

24. Resolved to approve the action of the executive committee to have the government and Red Cross continue their efforts to get information concerning our missionaries at our expense.

25. Resolved to report to the Home Mission Board that we are willing to continue the present arrangement with Miss Davis, if they so wish.

26. Resolved, that because of present international disturbances we do not think it advisable to reprint the pamphlet, "Missionary Life in China" at this time.

27. Resolved to ask Miss Fast to visit the churches of the Northern District Conference, including Iowa.

28. Resolved that we share with the evacuated missionaries the disappointment upon leaving the field, and with them we await the day when the doors to China will be open again so that they may return to their former work, and we encourage them to keep in touch with the board in the meantime.

29. Resolved if evacuated missionaries cannot find sufficient employment to make a living with their families, the board is plannng to supply the need.

30. Resolved to refer the matter of placement for Rev. W. C. Voth to the executive committee.

GENERAL

31. Resolved that retired missionaries that are entitled to pension are to receive full salary for a year with the hope that 6 months will be given to deputation work during that time. After that they are to be put on pension allowance.

32. Resolved in view of Brother G. A. Linscheid's long illness, the board makes no deductions from his pension this year.

33. Resolved that we pay ½ of the excess baggage of retiring missionaries.

34. Resolved to allow $75.00 for the budget of the F. M. C. on account of the added information we receive through them during this war.

35. Resolved that we allow up to $50.00 for a new cut case in the Historical Library.

36. Resolved that we authorize our executive committee to contact the Congo Island Mission, with the purpose of jointly sending some of our missionaries to Africa.

37. Resolved to ask the president and secretary to attend the Central Conference Mennonite Mission Board meeting in May, in compliance with their request.

38. Resolved to send Brother Linscheid our greeting with best wishes and prayer for a speedy recovery.

39. Resolved to encourage the writing by different missionaries of brief gripping mission experiences of approximaely 800 words for free distribution in leaflet form by the Women's Missions Societies.

40. Resolved to repeat our former resolution that all appeals for special gifts must be sent to the board.

41. Resolved to thank Brother C. E. Krehbiel, conference President, for attending our sessions upon invitation.

42. Resolved to thank the Kansas State Bank officials for the free use of their Directors' room.

43. Resolved to thank all our mission friends, churches, Christian Endeavor societies, and the Women's Association for their faithful and sacrificial support of the work.

44. Resolved to thank all our mission workers for their faithful and sacrificial service, both on the field and during furlough at home, as also for the many short gripping articles for our church papers.

45. Resolved to thank God for His blessing upon the work the past year in spite of adverse conditions on account of the war. While we do not know the results in China, the reports from India and America show that some 280 souls could be added to the churches on the field.

May the Lord soon open the China doors again, and continue to protect the workers wherever they are, and give opportunities even while perhaps interned to witness for the Lord.

46. Resolved to accept the total budget of $79,847.84. While this is $3,000.00 more than last year, it is several thousand less than the missionaries asked for, and we are sorry to make this cut.

What the China expenses will be, we can, of course, not yet know. At present we can send no money to China and the Philippines, but we must be prepared to send it as soon as our government or the Red Cross finds a way, as they hope they will. We will meanwhile put all special gifts for China into the $10,000.00, which are to be set aside for China.

47. Resolved to adjourn.

9. Offerings	$ 56.79	$ 13.50

The word of God has gone forth into most of the homes in all the villages. Daniel Schirmer reports that the women in the sewing classes listen very attentively and are often moved to tears when they hear the word of God. This is true also of the women in all the villages. At Oraibi the Hopis all listen, although some openly say they do not want it, but rather choose to follow the advise of the elders. But in Hotevilla there are those who will not listen so well, and others even close the doors to the workers. At Moencopi there are a few homes which have lately opened the doors to the gospel message. We workers find that a visit to the sick will do much to welcome also a message from the gospel. It is a slow work, but it is not without promises. God says that His Word shall not return without results, and we as workers in Hopiland rejoice that we have the privilege of preaching the gospel to lost souls, the souls for which Christ shed His blood on Calvary.

Respectfully submitted

Another year has come to an end, and more and more we feel like Paul said, "We walk by faith, not by sight." We have the promise, "Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not." We have to believe what God says, nor must we look to our feelings. Faith begins where sight ends, and so we must not become discouraged. This is true, not only here, but in all our undertakings as a conference.

Last week as I visited in the home of one of the government employees at the Cheyenne-Arapahoe agency at Concho, I noticed a stack of Mennonites. About a dozen back copies were sent along with me to be given to the widow of a former helper in our church. I mention this so that you may know that the Mennonite is being read by at least a few of our Indian brothers and sisters in Christ. A copy of the Junior Messenger goes to each home that is represented at our Sunday services. We hope and pray that the articles we write from time to time for these papers will create new prayer interests among all readers everywhere, and we must also keep in mind the immediate influence such articles will have here, trusting that all readers may be encouraged to a closer walk with God.

During the past year I was asked to officiate at twenty-two funerals, but six of these were for church members. We have an Indian population of a little over seven hundred in our district. The death rate is rather high, and only a small percent have accepted Christ as their personal Saviour. We hope and pray that those who have done so may lead a victorious Christian life.

One day just before Christmas I was called to officiate at two funerals. In the morning we had the services for Meat, an old Indian, who was very active in all kinds of Indian celebrations and ceremonies. In the afternoon there was the service for Harvey Whiteshield, another old man. Some may remember him as the man who, in the early days, assisted Dr. Petter in the translation of the Bible into the Cheyenne language. I think all former workers in Oklahoma will remember him well. Both of these funerals were well attended. Funerals are usually well attended, and for this reason I count it a privilege when non-Christians ask to have a service, for this gives an opportunity to present the gospel to many who otherwise do not attend any church.

Sunday was another very inspirational day. It was the Sunday of the month when it was my privilege to go to the government school at Concho to conduct the morning service with the students. The present boy's and girl's advisers are taking an active interest in the Sunday services, and we hope they will stay for a number of year. They have done much to bring about a worshipful atmosphere in the gymnasium where we have the services. Sunday morning a group of the older students were there with their vestments, and they greatly helped the service as a choir. One of the high school boys led the whole group of 184 in the singing. Everything was done in a real worshipful attitude. We hope teachers will be found so that the group can be divided into classes for the Sunday School period.

Last week I felt that I should visit two men in the county jail at Oklahoma City. One was released that afternoon, and on Sunday he made quite an effort to attend church. The temptation for drink is very, very strong with many. Would that all Christian people could see the evils that go with strong drink and unite their efforts against it. Then we might also be delivered from this evil—another evil that the White man has brought to the Indian.

Let us do as Hezekiah did, "he went up unto the house of the Lord, and spread it before the Lord." (Isaiah 37:14).

MONTANA

STATISTICAL AND OTHER INFORMATION

In 1900 President McKinley enlarged the Tongue River reservation, making it a permanent home for the Northern Cheyenne Indians. White ranchers were moved out. . . . The enrollment of this reservation at the beginning of 1942 is officially given as 1,661 Indians, which is an increase of 55 in the past three years.

The agency, with its force of government officials representing the Indian Department at Washington, D. C., is located at Lame Deer, which naturally makes the Lame Deer district the largest on the reservation. It has more than twice as many Indians as the Busby district, and over three times as many as either Birney or Ashland. Birney is the smallest of all.

Busby has a strictly up-to-date boarding school that cost over $450,000 and is controlled by the Indian Department at Washington, D. C. It has an enrollment this year of 140 Indian children. Lame Deer has a public school plant with two school buildings and three teacherages, with five teachers and also an enrollment of 140 pupils. This school is controlled by the state of Montana.

Ashland has a large Catholic Mission, and most of the children of that district attend that school. Birney has a small Indian day school with two teachers, and it is also controlled by the Department of Indian Affairs in Washington, D. C.

BUSBY MISSION SCHOOL

Founded in 1904, served by Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Habegger
Number of accessions since the work was started	178
Number of living members	106
Regular church services, Sunday School, prayer meetings held during the year
An out-station on the upper Rosebud is also served.
Average attendance at church services in 1941	36.4
Average attendance at Sunday School	21.6
Average attendance Sunday evening services	37
Four hours weekly Bible classes with various groups of the large boarding school, with an average attendance of over 100
Enrollment at Daily Vacation Bible School last summer	88
Average attendance at Daily Vacation Bible School last summer	88
Accessions during the year 1941	2
Marriage ceremonies performed during the year	4
Funerals conducted	9
Sunday School collections	$22.98
Other local collections	3.11
TOTAL	$26.09

Other social and instructional activities during the year, with camp visitation, sewing meetings, special meetings, etc.

LAME DEER MISSION STATION

Founded in 1908, served by Dr. and Mrs. Rodolphe Petter
Number of accessions since work was started	208
(A few of these were transferred from Busby and vice versa)
Regular church services, mixed Sunday School, and prayer meetings conducted during the year.
Native workers' training school each week of the year
Visitation at the large government hospital for Indians near the station, and camp visitation as time and strength permitted
Average attendance at services	44
Funerals conducted	8
Marriage ceremonies performed	3
Baptism	1
Collections at Sunday School and church	$71.77
Money in birthday bank at close of year	25.00
TOTAL	$96.77

The birthday money was again sent to the American Bible Society in New York City. The other collections took care of all Sunday School expenses, special cleaning, fuel and $34.88 was used to help pay the cost of repainting and re-decorating the chapel before the celebration in October.

Special Events in 1941

Two "At Homes" honoring Dr. Petter at the time of his birthday anniversary, one for Indians and one for white people.

Special prayer service for an Indian boy before he joined the army.

Funeral for a soldier boy accidentally killed in a Louisiana camp; the body was brought home in care of a private. The chapel was filled to capacity and many stood outside.

The "celebration" in October has already been reported.

An enjoyable Christmas tree program with full house.

BIRNEY MISSION STATION

Founded in 1910, served from Lame Deer by Frank Littlewolf, who has gone for the week-ends since Rev. Pankratz left in 1926; he is assisted by Miss Marie Buller, who since the spring of 1940 has occupied the large barren mission house and made if quite livable.

Number of accessions since work was started.

Birney is a heathen center, and offers great difficulties in the work.

A nucleus of worshippers comes quite frequently to the church services.

Miss Buller conducts children's meetings, sews with a group of women, conducted a Daily Vacation Bible School last summer and sponsored a Christmas tree program which drew a full house.

ASHLAND MISSION STATION

Founded in 1917, served by Mrs. Valdo Petter and Miss Marian Gibbs.

A native evangelist from Lame Deer goes to conduct a Cheyenne service when convenient.

Two accessions since work was started.

Regular church services are held during the year, together with mid-week meetings and Sunday evening prayer meetings. Attendance has been encouraging.

The field offers peculiar difficulties. The Indians of the district are very friendly to the workers and are appreciative of unfailing kindnesses shown them.

INDIA

GOOD NEWS FROM INDIA

Travel is irregular in these turbulent times. The Wengers left Bombay on November 20. An air mail card from Singapore, dated December 2, informed us that they had arrived there on that date. But where they are now is quite a mystery. The Isaacs were scheduled to leave on the 20th, but now they have word that their steamer has been detained in Manila on account of the extended war activities. Consequently, they are kept in suspence not knowing when they shall leave. Isaacs have renewed their activity at Mauhadih.

The missionaries are enjoying good health. Favorable progress marks the evangelism work. Thus far in 1941 some 170 souls have been baptized in the southern field. We hope that the two hundred mark will be passed before the close of the year. Several were baptized at Champa; others are candidates. Forty were baptized in the Leper Home on November 23. An impressive parade took place that evening. Another thirty-one are ready for Christmas week. That would bring the total for 1941 to seventy-one. The Lord's Spirit is working mightily.

—P. W. Penner

REPORT BY MRS. S. T. MOYER

Perhaps you mean me when you urgently requested all missionaries to send in brief monthly or quarterly reports. The emphasis was on the one that never writes. Because you are all so busy I had thought all along that my husband's long reports were more than enough, but I will give you a little idea now as to what I am assigned to do and for what I am responsible.

As soon as I arrived at Janjgir I was given the dispensary, the Bible women's work, the Junior Sunday schools and the women's work of the church.

The mission dispensary is open each forenoon and afternoon. Seolal, a home-trained man who had served under Mrs. P. W. Penner, is not as efficient as a trained man, but is loved and trusted by all the Christians here, and is much cheaper. All sorts of sores, skin afflictions, conjunctiontis, digestive disturbances, worms, fevers, etc., are treated here. First aid is given. We try to collect the cost of medicines, but cannot do it from the very poor. We have little overhead expense, no fancy room, not much waste of cotton and disinfectants, but due to war, prices of quinine in all forms has more than doubled. Quinine and santonine and a few other things are indispensible for private and community welfare. We help even when we do not get full returns. Also, when rainy season sores and epidemics come, fathers and mothers are out of work, there is anemia, disability and emaciation due to lack of right food and no food, and no income. We not only give free medical aid, but give out dry milk, a cheaper form than Klim, which comes from Australia; we give out Glucose 'D' or Cod liver oil and arrow root or barley, as the needs may be. For confinement help we also have not yet taken much in the way of fees. This year we had planned to take in more, but semi-famine conditions exist, which means not only "no big income," but more free help. We have encouraged Christians to take anti-typhiod injections just as we missionaries do, and many responded at a small fee. We had a fair degree of success to get everybody (nearly so) to take re-vaccination last year during a severe epidemic of smallpox all over the land. Not only Christians, but non-Christians also responded to taking the government doctor's anti-cholera inoculations on the compound. The result was that there were no cholera deaths in our community even though it took its toll all around us this summer. Other prophylactic measures were definite teaching on contagious diseases one by one, their cause, symptoms, spread, prevention, nursing, etc. The women then relayed these teachings through plays, programs and house-to-house visitation to the non-Christians all about us. We see encouraging results. So much for medical affairs.

There are three full-time Bible women locally and two part-time. Also, two full-time women live in the district. Their supervision is more difficult. One is living here for the time being, and she goes out with the regular ones. They are on duty all the year with the exception of one month's vacation. When it is too rainy or too hot they concentrate on the large Janjgir village with all its suburbs, on Naila, our railway station and other near-by groups. When the roads and weather are good they go daily to outlying villages. They start at 11 a. m. and stay till evening. I hire a "Chakra" or small springless cart to take them for about sixteen cents per trip. We think this is cheaper than buying a pair of new animals, feeding them and getting a cart. The present pair of mission oxen is always busy with station and compound running. The women are going out at a sacrifice to themselves, their children and their homes, but so far they have shown a real joy and concern and have glowing reports of warm-hearted reception. They go in pairs and reach as many homes as they can. They teach a regular course of lessons with picture illustrations and definite series of verses and songs and sell literature where they can. Later, when mixed teams go out, some will go on tour. Rain was scant this year, so due to dry ground we will send out more teams of husbands and wives together. The pastor's wife, Mrs. Rufus Asna, and other women volunteer and go along with these two pairs of workers. We see many signs of a greater yearning after the gospel, a warming up to our teaching. The semi-famine, war, and a greater earnestness in witnessing by Christians all have something to do with it. Ten adults recently came asking for baptism. They need following up. All are poor. All are related to humble Christians in our church. Still there are of other and better castes that are definitely showing interest too.

The Sunday Schools: We have divided the children into Primary and Junior Sunday Schools. A new text book for the Juniors put out by the Indian Sunday School Union and fresh memory material has given a new impetus to the older group. Teachers are women from the school staff and girls in the training department. They are faithful and love the children. You would greatly enjoy hearing the children sing the gospel songs we too learned when we were young: "Weist Du Wie Viel Sternlein Stehen," "Weil Ich Jesu Schaeflein bin," "Kleine Tropfen Wasser," "Gott ist die Liebe," "Jesus Bids us Shine," "Jesus Loves Me," "I am so Glad That My Father in Heaven," "This is My Father's World," and all the rich heritage of the Christian children's hymns as well as many Indian bhajans. Surely all this prayerful work in our day and Sunday schools upon these tender minds, in teaching and memory work is going to bring a great harvest. From the treasuries of these two Sunday schools the quarterly church session accepted from us a gift of fifty Rupees toward more benches in our church. We haven't enough to seat everybody these Sundays. The Christmas treats also come from the Sunday School treasuries. Parents cooperate well in giving their children rice or something to offer each Sunday.

A more recent department is the Sunday School for the non-Christian children. The Christian children behave almost like angels compared to these undisciplined ones. They know much more too. Consequently the two groups do not mix well. The non-Christian children cannot stay put and soon tire of sitting in one spot. It is really wearing to spend an hour with them, but the attendance has increased. We give either a card to each child each Sunday in all our Sunday Schools or a little something else to these raw recruits. These latter are unkempt, dirty and wild. The Christian children are all clean, combed and very dear. It is a living demonstration of what Christ does to parents and children.

The Women's work in the church: Friday afternoons are the time for the meeting of mothers or women. These are regular the year through. Careful planning keeps them interested. At present we have again a program committee which works out themes or study work and appoints leaders for the devotions and talks. Many are willing to lead the meeting or in prayer. We have studied the child, its instincts, habit formation and their bearing on the character formation, and the mother's duties and responsibilities in these. One mother wept bitterly, confessing her sins to her children when we studied "anger." Another one who reported on "obedience" said "I have raised many children, but never have I realized the importance of obedience." All the meetings are spiritual. We observe the Women's World Day of Prayer, give temperance programs, have studied founders of the Indian churches, etc. Last hot season a limited group studied daily "The Seven Root Sins" with real profit. The women also sew for charity for the Champa hospital, the leper hospital, for a charity sale now, by which they will be able to contribute to the Home Mission work and pastor's funds. Last hot season we took up the study of contagious diseases again as a refresher, then went to tell our neighbors about these things. The idea is this: To develop our women in all worthwhile interests to take leadership and initiative and be of service, to develop the prayer life and raise the home-life and child-nurture to the highest Christian level. Much remains to be done even as we all try to improve our life.

For the more backward women we have daily afternoon short sessions of sewing, learning to give audible prayers, and sing and learn Bible verses. This is a seasonal work on my porch, usually in the fall months. It is now in full swing.

The general missionary's wife is the general religious "Jack-of-all" work. There are kingdoms to be won on all hands waiting or her, for she is not tied down to an institution! Last spring I served as convenor and chairman of the Cchattisgarhi women's convention. God gave great subsantion and the meeting was a high mountainpeak experience for the leading paid and lay women of four mission areas, as well as ours. Likewise, annually come the lay-people's Bible course. I taught two classes daily.

Other seasonal work are standing committee activities of the conference. These are the little relishes in the common everyday meal or routine work. I enjoy the work. Many opportunities come to extend one's contributions to farther areas, but home, husband and child are also my first duty. When God gives us such good health and generous home-support in funds and prayers, then we go on with courage and new strength. I therefore also thank you for all you have done to make possible a smooth expending of our energies in this many-sided work. Without the budget and our salaries we would have to try to support ourselves, which would be very hard in rural India, even though we are both farmed raised. We would feel our God-given training misused. We believe He has called us and fitted us to do this work, and that this is His will for us.

I have not told you of the new community nurse, her work and the program we are now testing out, but shall tell you more some other time.

Since this will reach you near Christmas time, may I add here our hearty wishes that Christmas may this year bring you great joy and lasting blessings.

Times are unusual; oportunities are unusual. Heb. 12:28. —Janjgir, C. P., India, October 23, 1941

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

Pastors' and workers' retreats, committee work and meetings, and conferences have engaged our time. My wife has had an extensive program of work with women—course of study, teaching them to sew, to cut cloth, to be better mothers, to seek the welfare of their children. She conducts weekly meetings for the Christian women on Friday afternoons. She has charge of the medical dispensary. Over 1,500 patients were treated this past year.

Over and above these things we must mention the poor. Unless in a miraculus way climatic conditions change, we are faced with semi-famine conditions such as we have not known at any time during the twenty-one years we have been in India. Daily hungry, emaciated people come to our doors. Here in a land where people live from hand to mouth, too often there is nothing in the hand to put into the mouth. What then? Last year there were slack crops. This year they are worse; in many places there is an 80 per cent failure. What is not failure is in the hands of the rich. How can we face these hungry folks haunting our doorways, their shadows darkening our windows? —S. T. Moyer

Miss Augusta Schmidt underwent a major operation in Landour, U. P. and recovered successfully. We praise the Great Physician for her splendid recovery.

Mrs. J. R. Duerksen expresses her appreciation to friends at home for some splendid materials which they sent for the "Feltograph." This has saved her hours of hard work.

Pandit J. Walter, teacher in the Bible School at Janjgir and Minister of the Janjgir Church, has written four tracts for the North India Tract Society, the printing of which has totalled about sixty-thousand copies.

* * * *

Christian Mutual Aid Society has been organized at Janjgir. Its purpose is to help Christians to be mutually helpful one to another, not only in times of distress, but to enable Christians to make economic progress in getting homes, seeding fields, buying land, and digging wells.

The entire missionary body thanks the many friends who sent special gifts for 1940 through the mission board and mission treasurer. When we faced a cut budget, these were sufficient for us to meet our needs.

SAFELY AT HOME

We greet all our dear Mennonite readers with Psalm 115. We express our joy and thanksgiving in the wonderful kindness of our Heavenly Father for His protection and care on our trip home from India. All praise, honor and glory to Him Who abundantly pardons us from all our sins and answers prayers.

On the sixty-two day trip of seventeen thousand miles we were carried along by our Father in a most wonderful way. Before any action towards securing passage was taken, the whole homeward journey was definitely committed into our Father's hands, and He has "directed our paths". Prov. 3:6.

It is very wonderful now to learn of the host of friends and relatives who in their prayers upheld us before the throne of grace. We are conscious of a deep debt of gratitude to all of you and to a host of people. Many people outside of our Mennonite circles also remembered us in prayer. God has never failed any of His children at any time.

Will you keep on praying for the work and workers in China, the Philipines, and in India, and here at home just as earnestly as you did for our safe arrival? We cannot but ponder on the thought that we are not better than many others who have perished at sea. Only God, our All-wise Father, knows why He has brought us through safely, and we want to dedicate our lives anew, so that His purposes for us may be fulfilled. May we all be found faithful in these dark days in doing that which we know is God's will, and be earnest in prayer, in endeavor, and in Christian living. Thanking you all, we are your fellow-servants in His Kingdom.

HELPING CHRISTIANS TO HELP THEMSELVES

Miss Schmidt is continuing the work of the former "Christian Weavers' Association" amongst the converts of Basna Station. Weaving is a home industry, in which every one from the smallest toddler to the oldest grandmother finds something to do. The greatest difficulty is to find a market for the goods. This year Miss Schmidt took to the Himalaya Mountains two trunk fulls of the woven goods, made to various designs and articles. In a personal letter she reports as follows,—

"And now I must tell you of the GREAT SUCCESS we had selling those two tin trunks of woven goods. We had asked Mrs. Pickett whether we should put some up for sale. She said, 'Bring them on Friday to the Community Center'. I had sold Rs. 6|10 worth at Charles, and a dozen cushion covers to the houselady where Miss Burkhalter stays. She gave an order for fourteen dozen curtains plus tea towels and jharans. I jokingly asked Miss Burkhalter to be my saleslady, as I was not good at it. She consented at once, and Mrs. Isaac also agreed to help me and I went with my two big full tin trunks hoping to sell 'some'. The Ratzlaffs said, 'Hope you sell all. I said, 'Yes, I'll treat you to chocolate bars if we sell all'.

"Well, we laid the things out, and Miss Burkhalter and Mrs. Isaac and I sold quite a bit before the meeting. There were lots of announcements and the lady presiding, without warning, asked me to make my announcement. I quickly got up, and said that we brought luncheon sets, tea cloths, cushion covers, and a few other things, that our Christian weaver converts made. We'd like to show them to those interested and sell as many as they would like to buy. It was a project to help our weavers get a market in these difficult times.

"No more was the meeting over than there was a rush like in dime stores at Christmas time at home. Miss Burkhalter was bookkeeper. Mrs. Isaac took orders. I tried to keep the tea cloths and the napkins to match together and quote prices, because I had not marked every article. The orange tea cloths were with the napkins to match, and the blue ones likewise, and the luncheon cloths, etc.

"The tin trunks and the back seats were overrun with buyers. No saleslady was necessary, nor bragging of strong materials or fast colors. 'These are bargains if you know one' 'these are cheap' 'these are pretty' 'have you more of these?' were remarks we all three heard over and over again, and many asked me to bring them every year, and to be sure to put them on the Landour Sale.

"We got no lunch till around 2 P.M. and I was not a bit hungry either, because I was so happy the stuff sold so well. I am still getting orders and people greet me here and there. One lady said after we left at 2:40 P.M. that if we kept the prices so reasonable, we could sell more next year." A total of Rs. 150 worth of goods that our poor Christian weavers make in their homes was sold in a few hours."

AGAINST THE STREAM

There is a famous mission school in Kashmire. After forty years of service the principal wrote a book which he entitled, "Forty Years Against the Stream." On the dust cover he placed a picture of an old grizzly looking Kashmiri. He was seated in a Kashmiri boat, rowing one of the numerous water courses of that beautiful land. He was tugging for all that he was worth against the stream. That summarizes our life and work at Janjgir—tugging for all we are worth against the stream.

Yet we know that you are back of us and care. We know also that there is a great and good God who is working out His purposes through us, through His work, and in India. We deeply appreciate your faith in us, your loyalty and support. May this verse be fulfilled in your lives, "He that supplieth seed for the sower and bread for food shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness." II Cor. 9:10.

"Christ has no hands, but our hands, to do His work today;
He has no feet, but our feet, to lead men in His way;
He has no tongue, but our tongue, to tell men how He died;
He has no help, but our help, to bring them to His side.
We are the only Bible the careless world will read;
We are the sinners' gospel, we the the scoffers' creed;
We are the Lord's last message, given in deed and word;
What if the type is crooked? What if the print is blurred?

What if our hands are busy with other work than His?
What if our feet are walking, where sin's allurement is?
What if our tongues are busy with things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him and hasten His return?"

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

In the parable of the Great Supper, the lord sent out his servants to invite the people saying that all was ready for the feast. Then they began to make excuses. Finally the lord said to his servants: "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." Luke 14:23.

There has been a noteworthy emphasis on evangelism in almost all of our home mission stations. Whether this is a result of the work of the Committee on Evangelism or whether there is a definite spirit of evangelism abroad in our churches which gives encouragement to this committee, is difficult to determine. We are content to leave that with the Lord and rejoice in the manifestation of a greater interest in and concern for souls. The Committee on Evangelism was continued by the board at our annual meeting, February 24 to 26 held in Newton, Kansas. The membership is: Rev. John J. Plenert, 429 Knorr St., Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Erland Waltner, Mt. Lake, Minn., Secretary; and Rev. W. F. Unruh, Moundridge, Kansas, member.

In the report that the committee submitted to the board it was learned that the entire first edition of one thousand copies of the handbook on evangelism entitled, Other Sheep I Have has been exhausted. Individuals got copies for personal use and study; groups studied the book in a number of churches; while in other instances the church officers were given copies and were encouraged to make a careful study of this splendid booklet.

It was a source of satisfaction and occasion of praise to Almighty God that all the members of meeting. This was the first time in many years that the board held their meetings in the place where the president of the General Conference is at home. It was therefore a source of satisfaction to have Dr. C. E. Krehbiel, President of the General Conference, at our sessions. The Women's Missionary Societies were represented by Mrs. R. A. Goerz, editor of News and Notes; Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz, Treasurer also attended the sessions, while Miss Elizabeth Voran, Secretary, attended two evening sessions.

The different fields were carefully studied and plans and suggestions were made to carry on the work with greater energy and effectiveness. While there are many difficult questions that have to be solved, the board is deeply grateful to the Lord and all the many friends of the home missions that our task was not made more trying by a shortage of funds. Our prayer is that the Lord reward all for their help and support for this essential Church-extension and evangelism work. The board noted with keen satisfaction that commendable sums have been repaid in the past year on loans advanced to Canadian Churches for the building of churches in the past. This has greatly aided the board to make loans to groups who are ready to erect their own house of worship. Our building fund is thus rotating and helping many in achieving their goal—a suitable although humble place of prayer and worship—a church.

GLEANINGS FROM THE REPORTS
By the Secretary

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH, ALBANY, ORE.

In a handy little booklet issued by the minister the place of worship is called, "The Friendly Church on the Corner." In this booklet pertinent Scripture verses are given to help the reader appreciate the promises of God. Topics for the morning messages are given. In an expository manner Rev. Kliewer will explain the book of Galatians during January and February. On another page the Wednesday night prayer meeting Bible studies are outlined, and in another place the Christian Endeavor topics, leaders and Scripture texts are given for the first two months of the new year. Brother Kliewer uses every avenue of approach to people in order to help them find Christ as Saviour or come closer to Him in fellowship and prayer.

FIRST MENN. CHURCH, HUTCHINSON, KAN.

Rev. Clyde H. Dirks and the various church officers submitted their annual reports in an orderly and well-arranged way by putting them in mimeographed form, stapled together. The financial reports show that they are interested in almost all the conference projects and give a proportionate amount to each cause. Last year seven new members were received, bringing the membership to 123. The report shows the work in the Sunday School and all other auxiliaries, each one endeavoring to do their part in the whole program of the church. A large number of General Conference Mennonites live in Hutchinson and it is felt that if these would attend and support and join the church to make this place of worship a home for their families and children, the church could easily become completely self-supporting.

February 12-22 the secretary was privileged to conduct a series of evangelistic meetings. The officers of the church were greatly encouraged by the large attendances and active participation. It was a source of gratitiude that the Lord prepared some who indicated their willingness to transfer their membership to First Mennonite and others pledged to give more aid to the church and the cause of the Lord. They hope that by Easter there will be a large number who will become active members of the church.

Two resolutions passed by the church, are worthy of publication. (1) "That we designate $1.00 per Sunday out of the regular church offerings for the C. O. Camps to help meet our share of the expense." This in addition to a resolution authorising the taking of special offerings for the C. P. S. Camps during the year. (2) "That we recognize more fully the honest effort by the men in our denominational schools and colleges and that we support these institutions with our prayers, cooperation, and financial assistance as far as possible."

MENNONITE BIBLE MISSION
Chicago, Illinois

Selected paragraphs from the report submitted by Rev. John T. Neufeld.

Sunday November 2, week of services began with Rev. August Ewert, speaker. Services were held every evening of the week. On Thursday he showed pictures of the mission work in China.

November 11-13 Attended Ministers' Retreat at Bluffton College. Good inspiring time for me.

Saturday, November 15, attended conference on Conscientious Objectors and Civilian Public Service Camps, at which many leaders spoke, also General Hershey, national director of this work. It was inspiring to see so many present. The evening attendance was around five hundred. November 20, Thanksgiving Day. Had services at ten o'clock. Full house. Mr. Sam Schmidt, who is attending the Baptist Seminary, spoke. In the afternoon our Girls Choir made a trip to Tiskilwa, Illinois, where they gave a concert in the Mennonite Church. The girls enjoyed the trip, and the church enjoyed the concert.

Wednesday December 3, had silver wedding anniversary of Mr. an Mrs. Miller. Both are members here and had a fine service and attendance. December 24, Christmas Eve. The young people gave a pageant of the Christmas story. This had required a lot of time and preparation and much worry. It seemed that there was not quite enough interest in it. However, at the final stage all went quite well, and we felt rewarded for our efforts. At ten o'clock a group of forty young people went carolling. We went to about twenty homes.

December 25, had a service at ten o'clock. The younger children gave a program. This was enjoyed by all.

With a membership in the church of seventy, it is indeed inspiring to note that the average attendance of the combined double service of Sunday School and Morning worship for the past year was 94. —4221 S. Rockwall Street

THE FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS—1941 REPORT

In looking back over the year that has closed, we can see that God has been good to us and has blessed us. According to the promises in His Word, He has forgiven and overlooked many of our weaknesses and shortcomings. And we count it a blessing that we have the opportunity of serving Him and proclaiming the gospel in this great city of Chicago.

It cannot be said that there has been a great increase in attendance. But there is a definite feeling of growing strength, and we feel that the church is stronger and better united than it was a year ago.

As a mission church our aim has been to establish and keep alive the mission spirit and the spirit of evangelism so that the many who do not know God may feel their need of Him and seek His forgiveness.

The "open door" here is in the work with the children and the young people. Certain experiences of strife and discord in the years gone by still remain as a barrier in the work with the adult population of the community. But with the children there has been a fine response to the efforts of the workers in the church.

Church. At the annual congregational meeting held in December of 1941, the following were elected, or were carried over to serve in office another year. These with the exception of the pianist make up the council.

Deacons — Carl Aschenbrenner
Paul MacElfresh (Remained in office from preceding year)
Trustee — Edward Aschenbrenner
Richard Howard (Remained in office from preceding year)
Clerk — John VanLier
Treasurer — Archie Lind
S.S. Supt. — Peter Anderson
Chorister — Albert Lehman
Pianist — Mrs. A. Lehman

Worship services were held on Sunday morning and evening throughout the year. The average attendance at the morning services was fair; the evening services were maintained under difficulty because of lack of interest by the congregation. On the first Sunday evening of each month the regular worship service and the Young People's Fellowship were united to form a Christian Worker's Program. This program gave opportunity for the expression of local talent and was well attended.

During the year the Church was host to various speakers and groups from other churches and schools. These programs helped to arouse interest and gave variety to the presentation of the gospel. Among those present were: Rev. and Mrs. John Thiessen, missionaries from India; Rev. and Mrs. Toews, missionaries from the Belgian Congo; Miss Grantland, our own missionary from North Carolina: The choirs from Bethel College and Freeman Junior College gave concerts here; Rev. Barkman and Girls Quartet from Oklahoma Bible Academy; Gospel Team from Moody Bible Institute.

A special Communion service was held on Palm Sunday afternoon to which the Mennonite students and others of the Chicago area were invited. Approximately fifty Mennonite guests were present to share in the communion. Special services were also held on Good Friday, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and on Watchnight.

SUNDAY SCHOOL. The Sunday School, consisting of about 117 members, meets every Sunday morning from ten to eleven a.m. Attendance through the year varies a good deal with the change of seasons, with a low ebb in the summer months. However the average attendance per month does show a definite trend upward. This can be attributed to the unceasing efforts of Mr. Anderson and some of the teachers.

Special Sunday School programs were given on: Easter, Children's Day, Rally Day and Christmas.

A Sunday School picnic was held on August 9th at Wolf Roads Wood.

Daily Vacatin Bible School was held for two weeks in July. Mrs. Lutz the Superintendent was assisted by six teachers. A total of seventy-one students were enrolled in the school. It was closed with a program in which the children brought out some of the things learned and achieved in the school.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP. The young people have their regular meeting on Sunday evening at seven. On the first Sunday of each month they combine with the Church service. Once a month they took charge of a State Street Mission service, giving the message in word and song and serving refreshments.

An hour of Bible study and prayer was started during the year, meeting every Tuesday evening at the home of the pastor.

A Special Easter pageant, entitled, "Trumpets at Dawn" was given by the young people. The Fellowship has been active in their support of Miss Grantland, having through the year sent her approximately $150 in cash and a considerable quantity of used clothing to be distributed there. A Social meeting is held each month. Also a business meeting is held each month to discuss the work and make plans for the future. A Young People's organization composed of several South side Churches, including our Fellowship, sponsored two weeks of evangelistic meetings at the First Mennonite Church. James Stewart of England was the Evangelist.

CHOIR. The Choir consists of about twenty-five members. Working with Mr. Lehman as director and Mrs. Lehman as pianist, the choir has served at the Sunday morning worship services throughout the year, bringing the message in song. Cantatas were prepared and sung on Palm Sunday evening and during the Christmas season. Cloth for choir robes was purchased and the robes were made by the women of the church.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY. The Society consists of about thirty members. They meet the second Thursday of each month for their regular meeting, which consists of a devotional program or speaker, and a business meeting to plan the activities. Financially they give support to the church fund, they gave twenty-five dollars for support of girl in India, two dollars per month to Miss Grantland, with a special gift of ten dollars at Christmas. They also gave thirty-five dollars to a Russian Missionary family in the city, and made up six Kamp kits for C. O. boys, valued at thirty-six dollars.

CHURCH COUNCIL. The Church Council met ten times during the year. All of the meetings were marked by a splendid spirit of unity and cooperation, with every one seeking to further the material and spiritual welfare of our work. A new roof was put on the church building; the labor was donated by men of the church. The cost of material (approximately seventy-five dollars) was paid by the Mission Board. The council also voted to have the parsonage painted. This job was contracted at a cost of $120, which was paid from church funds.

ALBERTA COMMUNITY (MENNONITE) CHURCH

During the last quarter of 1941 we enjoyed many blessings that the Thanksgiving and Christmas season brings. It was a very busy month. At Thanksgiving the choir gave a cantata and at Christmas the Sunday School gave its regular program. At the latter we had a record attendance of 140 which crowded our little church to capacity. The young people also gave a very fine play on the 23d of December. One can say that there is a marked improvement in the cooperation and interest on the part of the young people over that of last year.

One of the most encouraging phases of our work has been the increase of interest and financial support. As you will see in our annual report we have nearly doubled our proposed budget for 1941. In our church treasury we started out with a budget of $440.00 and the total income amounted to $794.34. Rev. Baumgartner just itemized the receipts and disbursements from November 24 to December 31, for it was then that we had our annual business meeting. The interests for missions have increased also. During the fiscal year our church has raised over $250.00 for the various conference enterprises. about four times as much as last year.

We have had some very fine contacts with the C. P. S. Camp at Cascade Locks during the last few weeks. Our church is planning to go out there next Sunday to give them a program in the afternoon. We do not want to go empty handed, so have held an offering with which we want to buy several kits and supplies for the boys. Our girls also plan to have several cookie-baking parties. Our cars will be well-loaded when we go out there next Sunday. The boys will give us a return program three weeks from now. They surely are a fine bunch of Christian men, so we hope to create an interest in this manner.

Our people have been very faithful. Our morning services are always well attended and increasing week by week. Our attendance at the same is running about sixty now. The S. S. has had a little slump the past few weeks due to sickness and disagreeable weather. But we hope to go way over the top this year. Our evening service have not been too well attended, but they are picking up again now.

We trust that as we continue to work and serve Him that there will be further growth numerically and spiritually. —Arnold J. Regier,

FAITHFUL WORKER—ACCIDENT VICTIM

The board members were deeply moved to learn of the tragic accident that overtook Rev. J. J. Klassen, Sardis, British Columbia. The tragedy happened on the highway between Vancouver and Sardis. With Rev. Klassen in the car were, Heinrich Schmidt, driver, and Mrs. Schmidt, and Miss Betty Guenther. The other members in the party were injured as were those also in the car that collided with them, but none fatal except Rev. Klassen.

They had taken Mrs. Klassen to Vancouver on account of her health, and when they were about to return to Sardis, she asked Rev. Klassen to remain in the city with her. Reluctantly he declined to remain, saying that he had a very important message to deliver to the young people in his church at Sardis. He never delivered the message, but the sincere intention, will, no doubt, make a deep impression on all the young people as well as on the whole congregation where he served as Elder.

Our prayer is that the Lord be very near to all those that suffered injury, but especially so to Mrs. Klassen in this period of bereavement.

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare is past,
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last."

WINTON, CALIFORNIA

Greetings with I Cor. 1:3, "Grace be to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

We are happy in the Lord. The work is going on nicely. Our attendance is holding up well. We had rains a few Sundays then it went down some. We had a good program at Christmas time. We also made some improvements in our church building by putting in a new floor. The platform was also enlarged by building out a bay addition, and so now we have a fine church and all are happy.

Before long Rev. W. A. Regier, Los Angeles, is coming to hold evangelistic meetings for us for a week or ten days. Our prayer meetings on Wednesday and our other meetings are well attended. An actual count shows that the average attendance at morning Worship for the last Quarter in 1941 was 45. It is well to know that there are only 32 members in this newly organized church. (How many of our older churches can make a similar report? A.J.N.)

I have just returned from Merced where I heard Dr. William Evans speak; he was one of my former teachers. At this writing the weather is cold and rainy; that is what is called cold here. Otherwise we are well. God bless you all. Pray for us. —J. P. Glanzer, Jan. 7, 1942

How Can I Reveal God In My Giving

By Mrs. Ellen Crawford

We must remember that we can reveal God only when we reflect God. We might compare ourselves to the moon in that respect. The moon has no light of its own; It is bright only when it reflects the light of the sun. So it is with us—we have no light of our own, but we do have the power to reflect the light of God; or in other words, the spirit of God.

Now what is the spirit of God as regards giving? You will find it nowhere so clearly set forth as in the Gospel of John 3:16, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son. . . " There is the story of the perfect gift of God.

There are two outstanding reasons why God's gift was perfect. In the first place, there was a motive back of God's giving and that motive was love. People give for many reasons. Some people give that they might receive; some people give from a sense of duty; some people give to make an impression. But our giving will never be true Christian giving until it springs from one source and that source is love.

In the second place, we cannot overlook the quality of the gift which God gave. It was the very best He had—the thing which was to Him most precious. He gave His only begotten Son to die upon the cross. Are we willing to give that which is precious to us? And that doesn't necessarily mean our silver and gold. Of course, God does need our assistance in a material way, but money isn't all. God asks for something else—as Paul puts it in his letter to the Romans, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." That's the real gift which God requires of us. He doesn't ask all of us to die for Him, but he does ask us to live for Him.

Paul speaks of this as our "reasonable service." Paul was right; it is reasonable. God never asks the unreasonable, the impossible, of us. When the lame man stopped Peter and John outside the temple and begged for alms, Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." Yes, that is what God asks of us—just "such as we have."

How can I reveal God in my giving? It is summed up beautifully in this little poem:

"Go break to the needy sweet charity's bread,
For giving is living," the Angel said;
"And must I be giving again and again?"
My peevish and pitiless answer ran.
"Oh no," said the Angel, piercing me through,
"Just give 'till the Master stops giving to you!"

LOVE WILL LAST

'Tis not the mighty victory won,
Nor scars of valor from the strife,
But the little unknown deeds we've done
That linger throughout life.

Yea, the dauntless victor's deeds
Are now but classroom themes;
The student stands and glibly reads
Of conquest's mighty schemes.

But long ago, at Jesus' feet,
Mary let her ointment spill;
With sacrifice of love complete,
Its fragrance lingers still.

Oh, seek the kindly paths of love;
Diffuse love's perfume rare,
That you may find in realms above,
Its fragrance lingering there.

THE VALUE AND POWER OF PRAYER

(Luke 11:5-13)

I. Worship Service:

(1) Songs, "We Walk by Faith, and not by Sight," No. 152; "Prayer is the Soul's Sincere Desire," No. 184. (2) Reading of main topic and prayer. (3) A short prayer service. (4) Offering for relief.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Those who have tried prayer attest to its power. It is an open door through which they enter to be in the presence of God. Being with God has an influence on their character and their actions, just as being with a dear intimate friend makes a difference to our life. His way of looking at things and their relative value and importance, His ideas and ideals, will permeate our life as we commune with Him through prayer.

Prayer permits us to lay hold of resources outside of ourselves. What we cannot do, God can do. Christ has laid it down as one of the laws of His kingdom that "whatsoever ye ask in my name that will I do." The experiences of every Christian prove the truth of this promise. Those prayers which seemingly go unanswered are not unheard or unheeded—God in His own way and in His own time will take care of them.

Prayer puts us at peace and at rest. We can put our trust and confidence in God. Knowing that He cares and that He provides releases for us from worry and fear. It puts a song of joy on our lips. "Oh, how sweet to walk in the pilgrim way, Oh how bright the path grows from day to day. Leaning on the everlasting arms."

Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

(1) A penitent spirit and prayer, Luke 18:9-14. (2) A forgiving attitude and prayer, Mark 11:25. (3) Gratitude and prayer, Luke 17:11-19. (4) Persistance and prayer, Mark 7:24-30. (5) Faith and prayer, Matt. 18:19, 20; Matt. 17:14-20. (6) The power of intercessory prayer, Gen. 18:22-32.

III. For Discussion:

(1) What things may we pray for "in His Name?" (2) How does prayer "change things?" (3) What were the things Jesus prayed for?

IV. Facts for Study:

Prayer may be likened to a watch chain, for it links us to God. It keeps us from getting lost from Him. It is the way of talking with God, and it is one way in which God speaks to us. There are links in the watch chain: There are links in the chain of prayer also. There is the golden link of faith, that holds firm our belief in God and in Christ Jesus. There is the link of love, that bids us not only believe, but love Him in whom we have placed our faith, and love our neighbors also. Then there is the link of obedience that reminds us to be ready to do God's will. We might go on naming link after link in the chain of prayer. Truly, to pray means that we must believe in God who is mighty above all, love Him as our heavenly Father, and be ready to do His will."

V. Food for Thought:

HIS INFINITE RICHES

He giveth more grace when the burdens grow greater,
He sendeth more strength when the labors increase.
To added affliction, he addeth his mercy;
To multiplied trials his multiplied peace.

When we have exhausted our store of endurance,
When our strength has failed ere the day is half done,
When we reach the end of our hoarded resources,
Our Father's full giving has only begun.

His love has no limit, his grace has no measure,
His power no boundary known unto men,
For out of his infinite riches in spirit,
He giveth and giveth and giveth again.

—Author Unknown

PETITION

We need thee, Lord, when in the toils of life
Our strength breaks down;
We need thee, Lord, when in unbridled mirth
We thee forget.

We need thee, Lord, when by success upon our work
Is placed a crown;

We need thee, Lord, when crushed by pain and strife
We groan and fret.

So give us, Lord, the daily grace we need
To walk our way

Until the golden curtain falls and marks the close
Of our brief day.

I WILL BRING OTHERS TO CHRIST

John 1:40-45

A ROUND-UP PROGRAM

We have come to the last meeting in our series of this month. We have made our decision; we have taken Christ as our Saviour; now we are not content until others, our friends, neighbors, and relatives, too, know our Lord and Master and walk with Him. The program of the Christian life is not complete until each of Christ's followers seeks to bring others into the same experience. Winning others is not a process; it comes sometimes by the spoken word, or invitation, more often by silent, but wholesome, influence; sometimes in private, sometimes in public. Many persons are won by the prayers of their friends. But all Christians should be actively at work to win others. An old seer told his followers, "Turn to God before your death." To this the men replied, "How can we know the day of our death?" "True," said the seer, "therefore you should turn to God today, perhaps you may die tomorrow."

As workers together with God we are to turn a deaf ear to Satan; we are to plead with the people to come now to the Lord Jesus while it is possible.

The Question Bee

1. How important is it that we bring our loved ones to Jesus and the church?
2. What does the Bible say, "Where two or three have gathered in my name"?
3. Tell in your own words the story of the man sick with palsy. How was he helped?

The Faith of a Heathen Woman

In a little village in India, a church had been built, with a few Christians attending. As time passed by, many converts lost interest, and finally the missionary who came to the village said to one poor woman who alone remained faithful, "There is no use of our keeping the church open any longer; you may as well give me the key. There is another church three miles distant, and anyone wishing, may go there." The faithful woman with tears in her eyes said, "Oh sir! do not take away the key. Even if no one else comes, I will go daily to the church, sweep it and keep it clean; I will keep the lamps in order and pray that God will visit this village and touch the hearts of people!"

So the missionary left the key. The old lady did as she had promised, and God did send a revival. When the misionary returned to the village a few months later, he found the church crowded with penitent sinners, the harvest of the faith of one poor, East Indian woman.

THE TRANSFIGURED CHRIST MEETS HUMAN NEED

Luke 9:28-43a; Read Matt. 17:1-20, Mark 9:2-29

Topic: FROM VISION TO SERVICE

Introduction

The three Synoptic Gospels record the transfiguration. Each one connects this event in Christ's life with Peter's confession of Him as the Christ, made at Caesarea Philippi, six days earlier (last week's lesson). No one of the Gospel writers mentions anything that took place during those six days. Jesus had raised the apostles' hopes to a high pitch when He acknowledged that He was the Messiah and then shattered them when He told them about the cross and His sacrificial death. This fact they could not believe. They missed the force of His rising again after three days. The transfiguration vision demonstrated the relationship between the cross and the crown.

Christ Transfigured on the Mount vss. 28-36

Jesus went up into a mountain, probably mount Hermon, to pray quietly and undisturbed during the night. He felt the need for this quiet prayer "closet." He took with Him the three of "the inner circle." Peter was always the leader. He preached the first Christian sermon. James was the first one of the Twelve to receive the martyr's crown. John had the longest service of all, and he alone of the Twelve died a natural death.

While Jesus was praying a wonderful thing took place; a great change came over Him (vs. 29). His essential glory radiated and shone from His human body. This was not an illusion, but a real transformation. It was the glory of God within Him shining forth. It revealed to the three the Christ in His divine glory as the Son of God. They saw the real Christ. They also saw two men talking with Jesus (vs. 30). Moses represented the Law and Elijah the prophets. Their appearance bore witness to Christ as the true Messiah, prefigured in the Law and foretold by the prophets. God sent these two men to encourage Jesus. They talked with Him about His coming suffering and death, the very thing He had been speaking about six days earlier. His "decease" (vs. 31) includes His death, His resurrection, His ascension. It was to be an achievement, the supreme purpose and climax of His life. It was to be an accomplishment, not a defeat.

The sleepy disciples soon awoke and saw Moses and Elijah and their glorified Lord. The experience was so glorious that Peter wished to have it continue (vs. 33). It was too rich in blessing to be ended so quickly. Luke says that Peter did not know what he said. It would not have been good for him to have stayed there. A luminous cloud appeared while Peter was speaking, adding to the wonder of the experience. A voice, God Himself, spoke to them from the cloud (vs. 35), clearly declaring that Jesus is the divine Son of God, and supporting Peter's confession so recently made. They shall hear Him above all other authority. Christ was all they needed.

Christ Healing in the Valley vss. 37-43

The morning following the mountain-top experience, Jesus and the three disciples came down into the valley where there was sorrow, suffering, and need. A multitude of people were waiting for them and Jesus now mingled in the common life of the people and concerned Himself about their troubles. Here they faced a serious case which had baffled the other apostles (vss. 38-40). This is described very fully by Mark (9:17-27). He calls it a "dumb spirit." Matthew says he was "epileptic." All three accounts imply that he was demon-possessed. This case appeared to be hopeless. An unclean spirit had taken possession of the child. The father had appealed to the nine disciples for help, but they were helpless before this especially malignant spirit. Jesus told them (Matt. 17:20) that their failure was due to a lack of faith.

Jesus felt that the lack of faith was making His work harder. The disciples had been found wanting when put to the test. Christ declares that all present were faithless and needed more faith (vs. 41). Jesus commanded that the child be brought to Him. Demons can not endure Christ's presence and this evil spirit resisted unto the very end (vs. 42). With a word, Christ commanded the evil spirit to leave the boy and that word was obeyed. Christ's divine power was real and is effective in our day. Whatever our need may be, let us bring it to God. The people saw plainly that no power but that of God, could heal any one like this boy was healed.

Jesus came down from the Mount of Transfiguration into the valley of need and served there. Our mountain-top experiences are the preparation for service in the valley. Christ said, "Come unto Me." He also said, "Go ye, into all the world."

Why was Peter's suggestion unwise?

What benefits do we receive from mountain-top experiences? How do we use them?

Where is the valley in which we may help relieve need?

THE COMFORT SERIES

MARCH 24—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words," I Thess. 4:18.

Comfort means to console or cheer a person in distress or grief. The above words are a comfort because of their context. Three great facts are brought to us: The coming of Christ, the resurrection of our loved ones who have preceded us in death, and of our going to be with the Lord forever. A man worth thirteen million could find no comfort in his money and his beautiful home with its Persian rugs and costly furniture. At the dinner table was an empty high chair. The baby had been carried to the graveyard. But no comfort for this man with his wealth. What these few words can do, money, luxury, position, education, and other of men's achievements cannot do. These three facts are COMFORTING WORDS FOR THE CHRISTIAN.

MARCH 25—"Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. . . ." I Cor. 15:51.

We have a new truth here. This was not revealed to the Old Testament prophets. The word "mystery" means something never revealed before. The mystery is that not all shall die, and since we shall not die we shall be changed. These bodies that we now have shall put on immortality. This will take place when the Lord comes as we find it in I Thess. 4:13-18. He will come for His Church—the saved. It will only take a moment to change us. We will not die if we live till the Lord comes; we will not need a doctor; there will be no undertaker to embalm us; no funeral service for us; no mourners to pass by the coffin; no choir to sing; no preacher to bring words of comfort to the loved ones; but we shall be changed and have a body like our blessed Lord after His resurrection. "We shall be changed" COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY FOR THE CHRISTIAN.

MARCH 26—" . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first," I Thess. 4:16b.

Have you carried a dear father or mother, a wife or husband, a brother or sister, or a dear baby to the grave? There is a chill that creeps over me as I write those words, for Mrs. Schultz and I have carried a baby out there, and then come these comforting words, "the dead in Christ shall rise first." You will see that blessed one who died in the Lord if you are a Christian. You will again talk to them, and above all you will know them; and even better than that you will spend all eternity with them. They will again have a body. That body is going to be in a sense like the one they had. After Jesus had risen from the dead He said, "Behold, my hands and my feet. . . . for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me to have." Flesh and blood and flesh and bones are not identical for flesh and bones will be in heaven; but not flesh and blood. The dead shall rise are COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY.

MARCH 27—"For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," I Thess. 4:16a.

The coming of the Lord Jesus from Heaven is stated 318 times in the Bible. He told His disciples that "I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am ye may be also." They believed it for they preached it. They preached this blessed hope after Pentecost which indicates that He did not come on that day. Paul, Peter, John, and Jude all preached and believed it. (I Thess. 4:16; I John 3:2; Jude 14, 15; and II Peter 3:3, 4, 10, and 12.) He came the first time at the appointed time and will come the second time for His Church to take her with Him for the marriage supper. The first time He came to die for our sins; but the second time He comes to take us unto Himself. The first time He came as a Lamb to be slaughtered for our sins, but the second time He comes as a lion to judge the people and set up His kingdom and throne. There are two aspects of His second coming. The one for the Church and the other to be King here on earth and execute judgment. Both aspects of His coming are COMFORTING WORDS FOR THE CHRISTIAN.

MARCH 28—"Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." I Thess. 4:17.

Here we have the translation of the living saints and the resurrected dead. When He comes the dead shall be raised and the living shall be changed, and shall be transported to be with the Lord Who has come out of heaven to meet His bride. We have a most beautiful picture of this in the Old Testament when Isaac goes out in the field and there meets Rebecca. In this day of inventions it is not difficult for us to believe that we shall soar through the air and meet our blessed Lord. God will not use airplanes to perform this translation, for the Word says, "We shall be caught up." To know that we shall be together with our loved ones who have preceded us and to see our loving Lord are COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY.

MARCH 29— "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," II Cor. 5:1.

Our body is here called an "earthly house." We live in this body, but we are not the body. We have a house on wheels (legs); it has windows (eyes); and it has shingles (hair). God is going to make a body for all the dead saints even though they may have been dead for 1900 years. Paul, Peter, John, James, Menno Simons, and other saints do not have bodies now, but will receive them when Christ comes for His Church. This body will be a special creation and one in which we will live for all eternity. Last week I buried an old saint who for the last eight years was an invalid. She could not walk, but her new body will not limit her to a bed. It will not grow feeble and weak. It will not be subject to pain, sickness, and even death. COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY.

MARCH 30—"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hast done, whether it be good or bad," II Cor. 5:10.

Every man must some day face Christ, but not all men at the same time. The judgment seat of Christ is for the Christian only; the White Throne judgment is for the sinner. No sinner at the judgment seat of Christ and no saint at the White Throne judgment. The judgment seat of Christ is to reward the saints for their service for the Lord. Then we will find out whether we have worked or shirked, whether we have lived for God or self, whether we have lived by the flesh or the Spirit, whether we have obeyed or disobeyed, whether we have glorified the Lord by our walk or dishonored Him by our walk. It is a PAY DAY for the Christian. To know that there is a pay day for taking up His Cross and denying self are COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY.

MARCH 31—"If any man's work abide which he hath built thereon, he shall receive a reward," I Cor. 3:14.

Our works will be tested by God's fire on judgment day. They will be examined. If after the test and examination God can approve of them we shall receive a reward. If we have been placing hay, wood, and stubble into this building of God it will all be burned, but if we have been placing some gold, silver, and precious stones in this building we shall be rewarded for our efforts and service. The reward is not salvation, for salvation is a free gift. These rewards are, no doubt, positions the Lord will honor us with since they are connected with crowns. Whenever we speak of Christ as the Son of God we are placing some gold in the building; if we testify to the fact that He saved us we are placing some silver in the building; and whenever we bring some soul to a saving knowledge of Christ we are placing some precious stones in the building. To rest assured that He will reward us for speaking of His deity and the redemption that comes through Him and to bring others to Christ are COMFORTING WORDS FOR TODAY.

What if They Say

What if they say, "You speak of conscientious convictions. Do you mean to say that conscience is always a safe guide?"

Conscience is one of God's gifts to man. It may be used or misused. In its purity it caused our first parents to hide from the presence of God. It helped them remember the words, "thou shalt not." All humans have God's law written in their hearts (Rom. 2:14), "their conscience also bearing witness" (v. 15) even when they are in a state of ignorance regarding the revealed will of God. Used in its purity and enlightened by scripture it points the way to salvation and consistent Christian living. When misused it can be brought to condone gross sinfulness. Please note three points of New Testament emphasis.

1. Conscience must be personal. Individual sin is accompanied by individual pangs of conscience. They who brought the woman taken in the act of adultery "went out one by one" (John 8:9), "convicted by their own conscience". God renders to "every man according to his deeds" (Rom. 2:6). No parent, no friend, no government can assume the responsibility for another's personal transgression.

2. Conscience may be perverted. It is referred to as being "weak" (I Cor. 8:7), "wounded" (8:12), "seared with a hot iron" (I Tim. 4:2), "defiled" (Titus 1:15), and "evil" (Heb. 10:22). Disobedience tends to deaden conscience. Hindu mothers (so-called Christian mothers, too) offer their children for conscience sake.

3. Conscience should be pure. It is described as being "void of offence" (Acts 24:16), "pure" (2 Tim. 1:3), "perfect" (Heb. 9:9), and "good" (I Pet. 3:16). Conscience can be relied upon if we permit God to enlighten it scripturally and spiritually. The "testimony of conscience" (2 Cor. 1:12) is safe for those who accept Jesus Christ as Saviour and "follow his steps" (I Pet. 2:21). —Walter H. Dyck

OUR PEACE OBJECTIVES

By Earnest J. Bohn *

When we have a clear picture of the purposes, aims, and methods of the cause with which we are connected, and when these purposes, aims, and methods are sufficiently challenging, we do not have much difficulty in arousing men and women to its support. Those of us who are members of the historic peace churches should be clear in our minds as to what our peace objectives are. We ought to be able to tell all people who are not of the non-resistant faith why we as members of the historic peace churches can have no part in carnal warfare, and what we expect to do during this time when the great majority of Christian people and many of their leaders will support the most devastating war of all history.

The reason that this war is possible, is because the Christian church is not sufficiently clear in its own mind that all carnal warfare is sin. The leaders of the church are divided on the wrongness and rightness of war. Allowances are made for some wars. For some, this war is purely a matter of defense, and since they think it right for a Christian to kill in defense they will fully support it in the traditional way with arms. For others it is a lesser evil to fight than to let evil rule over them in the persons of tyrannical and Godless dictators. Again for others, it is an "Unnecessary Necessity," or a "tragedy," or "Hell" which was unavoidable because of our sins, and now we must fight because God has "condemned us to hell," and therefore to fight as our punishment. There is not yet a seeing of eye to eye among the leaders of the church on the question of war. There is still a clarifying process going on as to whether all war can be classed as sin in which Christians should have no part. The same thing seems to be in process now that was going on in the minds of Christian leaders about a hundred or more years ago on the moral issue of slavery. They could not all see alike on that question. Time, with the leavening process of the gospel has brought unity in the minds of Christian leaders and Christian people everywhere in our country that slavery, according to Christian standards, can not be sanctioned. When enough people once believed that, it was also possible to make it unlawful.

* Secretary of General Conference Peace Committee and author of Christian Peace—New Testament Peace Teachings Outside the Gospels.

The historic peace churches declared from the very outset that all war was sin. Our Mennonite forefathers shunned all participation in any form of carnal warfare as unscriptural. We quote only a few of Menno Simons' words on war: "Our fortress is Christ, our defense is patience, our sword is the Word of God, and our victory is the sincere, firm, unfeigned faith in Jesus Christ. Spears and swords of iron we leave to those, who, alas, consider human blood and swine's blood of well nigh equal value." In another part of his writings he says, "The regenerated do not go to war nor fight. They are the children of peace who have beaten their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and know no war. They give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's. Their sword is the sword of the Spirit which they wield with a good conscience through the Holy Ghost."

The Anabaptist faith was founded on the proposition of recapturing the life and spirit of the New Testament Church which had been covered up with a cold, non-spiritual type of ecclesiasticism through the dark ages. One of the tenets of the early Christian church for the first two centuries, according to C. J. Cadoux, who is an eminent authority on the attitude of the early church, was that, "They (the early Christians) closely identified their religion with peace; they strongly condemned war for the bloodshed which it involved; . . . . they declared that it was their policy to return good for evil and to conquer evil with good. With one or two exceptions no soldier joined the church and remained a soldier until the time of Marcus Aurelius (161-180 A. D.)." It is significant to note that our Anabaptist forefathers being strong Biblicists emphasized some of the same ways of life which had characterized the early Christians. And one of these ways was the principle of non-resistance. Therefore, Menno Simons in harmony with his faith that the Bible was the greatest religious authority for faith and practice in daily living, taught: "Since we are to be conformed to the image of Christ (Rom. 8:29), how can we, then, fight our enemies with the sword? Does not the Apostle Peter say: 'For even, hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps; who did no sin neither was guile found in his mouth; who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously' (I Pet. 2:21-23; Matt. 16:24). 'He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.' (I John 2:6). And Christ himself says: 'whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.' (Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23).' "

Let it be clear in our minds then, that the first great peace objective, for us, as members of a historic peace church, is to use the technique of spiritual weapons in this war or any other war. We fight only, as the early Christians or as Menno Simons said, with "the sword of the Spirit." Paul said something like this too when he said: "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh (for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds)," (II Cor. 10:3-4). We believe that this method of warfare is more powerful and effective than any weapon made by the hand of man. We believe that the spiritual weapons of love and good will, with the message of the gospel taught and lived by Christians will have tremendous conquering power over the hatreds which lead to violence and destruction.

Our second great peace objective should be to make our faith known to the world. Those Christians who have faith in this type of warfare, and which includes those outside and inside the historic peace churches, are in the minority. It may seem presumptuous for us to say that we have a message to bring that will deepen the moral vision of Christendom. Yet that is precisely what we must believe if we are to bring our message to the world. If we believe that we have a truth which the rest of the world does not have and ought to have, we will not hesitate to make it known. That is exactly the way Christianity got started and grew to such proportions that in the first three centuries it conquered the great Roman Empire which had been its enemy and persecutor. Remember that this happened as the result of one, Jesus of Nazareth, who had gathered about Him a handful of followers, and who so fired their imagination with a divine truth and faith that when He was gone they carried on even to death, while winning many hundreds of converts to that same faith.

In like manner small groups or remnants have often nursed along and kept alive a great truth, which finally, when the time was acceptable burst forth afresh into reality. Just so, all through the dark ages, for a thousand years there were kept alive vital truths of Christianity in minority groups, when the church in general had become corrupt and lost its power. Small groups like the Waldenses, Albigenses, Franciscans, and "Brothers of the Common Life," withdrew from the Church in its worldliness to retreats where they could live the Christian life more in harmony with the spirit and teachings of the New Testament church. Practically all these groups taught the simple life and the way of non-resistance. It seemed that when the new day dawned with the Reformation that the religious atmosphere was pregnant with hidden longings in the hearts of people for a more genuine, vital religious life, which had been restrained so long by a worldly, wealthy, and luxury seeking church. This desire for a new life now found vent when encouraged by the boldness of the Reformation leaders, thus giving birth to the Anabaptist movement in which multitudes of men and women found peace for their souls by accepting the Christ of the New Testament and being challenged to pattern their lives after His early followers in doctrine, faith, and conduct. The Word of God got a new grip on the hearts of people, and where there had been bareness and dearth of spirit there came new spiritual power. Where moral vision had been greatly blurred, there came deeper moral insight, and as a result a more sensitive conscience. The Sermon of the Mount literally became for them the pattern for daily living.

What happened then, can happen again. Christian people, generally speaking, surely can not be satisfied with the state of affairs today. There must be many people who are sick and tired of the kind of Christianity which is being subscribed to in a superficial manner in the life of this age. There too must be a longing on the part of many for a more genuine and consistent religion. The great question that should truly stir us is, Can we as historic peace churches, which exist because of a vital Christian faith for which our fathers died, be challenged to bear testimony, in the times that we face, to that which we believe to be Christian? If we really believe that we have more power in weapons that are not made of iron, there is no question of what we can do. Spiritual force has tremendous possibilities if we have it in our lives. Our forefathers clearly demonstrated that when they met evil with good. The early Christians demonstrated it as they conquered the Roman Empire. Is it possible that some among us are fearful and hesitant in declaring our non-resistant faith to the world because we lack faith in its power. We need to testify to the world that we do not fight with the weapons that the world uses, but we ourselves will first need the spiritual experience and insight which will make this possible.

Our third peace Objective should be that we clearly work out our methods and technique of procedure.

In just what manner are we Christians going to make our sacrifice in the warfare which we engage in? Let us first of all be clear on this one point: If we as Christians are going to testify to the world with any power at all as to our type of warfare, and the forces that we trust in, we will need to sacrifice. No matter whether we are engaged in carnal warfare or spiritual warfare; they both demand sacrifice of its participants. The great, worthwhile things of life always cost something. Jesus, Himself made that clear to all would-be disciples. He said to them, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

But before we proceed with the manner in which we would make our sacrifice, let us clarify our minds on these two types of sacrifice—the soldier's way and the Christian's way. Very often these two types of sacrifice, which in their nature are so different, have been made to appear as identically the one and the same. The fact that the cross of Christ is centered in the sacrifice of death has frequently been taken to establish an analogy between calvary and the battle field. Leyton Richards, the English Quaker, said, "During the World War one of the most familiar cartoons issued for the consolation of Christian parents, suddenly bereaved by the death of their sons in action, depicted Jesus with the marks of His wounds still visible, bending over the dying warrior and bestowing His blessing." Now we would not wish to say anything that would in any way depreciate the element of sacrifice in the soldier's deed; certainly there is sacrifice when it may mean the surrender of limb, sight or reason, or life itself. But, if we would think of war as primarily self-sacrifice, then, as Leyton Richards reminds us, we would have only a half-truth. War in its essence means that before anything else the soldier must be ready to kill and sacrifice not self but others. If war were waged purely on the principle of sacrifice, then there might be martyrdom, but there never could be a battle. The soldier's primary object must be to kill and if he does not succeed in that he is not a good soldier. The soldier who kills the most people will be decorated with medals. A good example of this was when recently an American soldier in the Far East was cited as a hero, because he had killed at least 116 Japanese soldiers.

The Christian sacrifice is that portrayed in Calvary—you give self in order to save the other fellow. It is this type of sacrifice that our historic peace churches were thinking about from the beginning of our history. It is this kind of sacrifice which is involved in the wielding of spiritual weapons. It is this which our historic peace churches were thinking about ever since this war started as they were planning the practical ways by which our boys may give expression to our manner of warfare.

Here is our practical procedure: While other boys leave home and go to a military camp to go into training how best to destroy other people's lives and their property, our boys will leave home too and go into training how best to do some worthwhile constructive good for our country and its people. They will refuse to bear destructive weapons made by the hands of man, but they will bear the constructive weapons made by the hands of God—love and good will, by word and deed. In our Civilian Public Service Camps they will testify in a practical way for Christ and His type of warfare by doing good with their hands, and by word of mouth to His saving power wherever opportunity is afforded them. Wherein soldiers are paid a wage by the Government, they will do all their work gratis. When men from the military camps will be called into actual battle where life is endangered, they will express a willingness to bring aid in the relief of those who are in need, distress or suffering, regardless of the danger in which they may be placed in bringing such relief, or the cost that be involved therein.

This we believe is fulfilling the Scriptural teaching: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Our boys will also have to be ready to take ridicule and criticism when the majority of the people and some of their close friends do not understand this way of warfare. This may be the hardest part to bear of the sacrifice that he would make. But if he truly has the peace of Christ in his heart, he will gladly do these things. He will be glad that he has an opportunity to give a testimony for his Christ in this way. He would do all these things in the spirit of humility and love. If he is criticized and ridiculed he would remember Him, "who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not." This too is part of the testimony.

Young men who would choose this way to give their testimony to the world need to be commended and not pitied. To them it is not a way of escape, but a real challenge. When youth can see that a cause is truly worthwhile they will make any sacrifice for it. If they can see that by this method new moral and spiritual vision may be brought to Christendom itself, they will be challenged to follow their leader—Christ, as much as any youth has ever been challenged to follow the dictators of Europe. Some will serve abroad in dangerous places, but others, as it is also true of those who serve in the army will never get across to serve at the "front." But whether they serve here or in some dangerous spot in the war areas of Europe they will all be helping to strengthen our Christian testimony to the world for the cause of Christ.

May we also add that the time of war is the most opportune time to make our testimony effective. It is then that what we have been talking about and training for during times of peace is put to the test. What we do then will speak more loudly to the world than at any other time. For us Christ should be the same Christ that He was before December 7, 1941. His message has not changed. The world will never believe that the church means what it has been preaching, unless it practices now what it had been preaching during times of peace. The world wants to know whether we Christians were in earnest when we said that Spiritual weapons are more powerful than carnal weapons. The world is watching to see whether the Word of God says the same thing to us now as in times when there was no danger. Skeptical people will have to see an unwavering testimony before they believe.

It is precisely this that won the hearts of millions of people throughout the centuries to follow Christ, because He put into action and deeds what He had been talking about, even when the supreme test came of going to the Cross. We are a minority but we can bring the message of a great truth to the world if we will now consistently live our peace testimony. And let it be very emphatically said that this can only happen if those who remain at home will be just as consistent in our testimony and willing to sacrifice as those who go to our C. P. S. Camps.

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

New Director at Sideling Hill

Brother Sanford G. Shetler, pastor of the Stahl Mennonite Church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, is the new director of the Sideling Hill camp, Wells Tannery, Pennsylvania. He succeeds Brother James Steiner who has resigned for health reasons. Brother Shetler arrived at the camp on February 15 and will be followed soon by his family. Besides leaving his pastorate, Brother Shetler also leaves his position as a schoolteacher in western Pennsylvania.

From February 4 to 16 Brother Phil Frey was again giving his services to the C. P. S. program by assisting in the administrative work of the Sideling Hill camp.

Camp Paper Enjoys Large Circulation

A recent issue of the Pike View Peace News, Colorado Springs Camp paper reports that this paper enjoys a paid circulation of around one thousand copies per issue. The subscription price of fifty cents per year is paid by interested persons in thirty states. Like other camp papers, the Pike View Peace News seeks to provide the constituency with news about the camp and to provide the boys in camp with a medium of the expression of their aims and ideals. About this ready response the camp paper says:

"We can only interpret it as being symbolic of your support and your desire to share our experiences."

Information on Physical Examinations

Inquiries are coming to us concerning physical examinations to be given to conscientious objectors. The preliminary physical examination is given to all draftees before classification. Before induction into the armed forces draftees are given a final physical examination by an army doctor. Those in Class IV-E are given a final physical examination by a non-army doctor. "The physical examination governing the final-type physical examination for registrants in Class IV-E (or Class IV-E-LS) shall be those applicable to physical examinations conducted at the examining station for the armed forces ." Induction will be issued to the draftee by his Local Board as to place and time of final-type physical examination.

New Camp Paper tells of Benevolent Association

The first issue of The Turnpike Echo, dated March 2, has now been published. The Echo is the camp paper of the Sideling Hill Camp, Wells Tannery, Pa.

Like the other camp papers, it contains an interesting number of items which reflect the camp life. Of particular interest is an article describing the Sideling Hill Benevolent Association. This association is an altruistic experiment organized and controlled by the boys themselves and has as its purpose "to assist in a financial way in bearing the expense of accident or illness" which a campee may sustain.

Membership is voluntary and open to each campee. Monthly payments are made by the members who, in case of accident or illness, are entitled to eighty per cent of each justified claim with seventy-five dollars as the maximum amount payable for each individual case.

First Unit of Hagerstown Camp Opens

On February 20 the large assignment of boys arrived at Unit 1 of C. P. S. Camp No. 24, Hagerstown, R. R. 5, Maryland. The total number of boys at this unit is now twenty. Like others which will be opened later, this unit is located on a farm and the boys will live in the large farmhouse and the dormitory which was built next to the house.

A house-father and house-mother, Brother and Sister Jacob Mellinger, also reside in the farmhouse. Brother Mellinger assumes management of the farm and Sister Mellinger supervises the kitchen and acts in the capacity of a matron. Brother Grant M. Stoltzfus is in charge of the administrative work connected with the camp. The project work is directed by Soil Conservation Service and is done in Washington County, Maryland.

M. C. C. Certificates and Stamps and Civilian Government Bonds

Judging from the constant flow of inquiries, there is obviously a rather general misunderstanding concerning the purpose and use of bonds, certificates and stamps. The Mennonite Central Committee has adopted a certificate for contributions to Relief or Civilian Public Service. This serves as a form of receipt for contributions to the services administered by the M. C. C. for the various cooperating groups. The minimum contribution for which these certificates were formerly issued was ten dollars. This has now been changed, so that any gift of five dollars or more will be recognized by a certificate.

For smaller amounts or for those who prefer the stamp-album plan stamps have been provided as a receipt for contributions. When stamps have been accumulated to the amount of five dollars, a certificate will be issued if desired.

"Possession of . . . . certificates and stamps by individuals who cannot conscientiously participate in the financial side of the military program, indicates their eagerness to support an alternative program of constructive service to their country and their fellowmen. These certificates and stamps are not officially recognized by the United States Government as alternative to defense bonds and stamps, but they are significant to the extent that they represent genuine sacrifice on the part of the contributors, and support to national service which they can conscientiously give.

"Neither the certificates nor the stamps are redeemable. Their only dividend is satisfaction in a service of good-will rendered in behalf of human freedom and welfare."

The certificates and stamps are simply evidence of gifts made to this testimony for peace and good-will, which is the spirit of Christ and is done in His name. Such evidence of support given to such humanitarian and constructive causes as are sponsored by the M. C. C. should have its effect in relieving pressure to contribute or lend to military purposes. But these are not officially recognized as alternatives to defense bonds.

As a direct answer to growing pressure to buy defense bonds the M. C. C. and other interested groups through the National Service Board are seeking to have a special issue of civilian government bonds or notes from the U. S. Treasury Department, which will be ear-marked for civilian services instead of for war. There is reason to believe that such will eventually be available from the government. But this is not yet certain. These bonds are not yet available. When they are issued, information as to where and how to obtain them will be given.

Meanwhile, the continued and consistent use of the "Statement of Readiness to Purchase Civilian Government Bonds" is encouraged. These have provided temporary relief of pressure in most cases where wisely applied. These are simply what the name implies, an indication that the individual is willing to purchase Civilian Government Bonds if and when such are issued. It is well to read carefully the statement which is carried on these. It should be self-explanatory.

When new developments come information will be given. Until then, it should help substantially to relieve pressure if you have evidence of generous contributions to the relief and Civilian Public Service program now being carried on by the Mennonite Central Committee. J. W. H. (Compiled by Grant M. Stoltzfus). (Released March 10, 1942).

Note: General Conference Mennonite churches should get their certificates and stamps from Rev. P. H. Unruh, Goessel, Kansas.

RELIEF NOTES

Number of Persons Benefiting by Mennonite Relief in France

Brother Joseph N. Byler in a letter of February 6 from Lyon says: "The results of our Lyon program have been beyond our expectations. We are receiving letters of thanks and appreciation nearly every day with many requests for more. Just now we are distributing the balance of the milk and some rice and beans that we brought up here from our Marseilles stocks. Many of the letters we receive are written by the school children themselves. If it were only possible to buy more."

A monthly report for January, 1942, shows that 17,580 persons (all but a few are children) received the regular amount of 50 grams per day of dried vegetables. This figure represents the most needy children which our workers help. Besides that number there were around 38,000 children who received some food through our workers during the month of January. Of this work Brother Byler says: "This is, I believe, a very practical way of doing relief."

Christ and Life After Death (Easter)

Mark 12:24-27 I Cor. 15:50-58

Topic: HE LIVES; WE LIVE ALSO

Introduction

Our lessons for the quarter have to do with the closing portion of Christ's ministry and, especially, with His last week. The gospel has now been brought to the greater part of Palestine.

A belief in a future life naturally accompanies a belief in God and in the existence of the soul. Such a belief is a matter of much importance. The belief in a future existence makes the life in this world mean vastly more than if death were to end all. Our conceptions concerning the hereafter are very important in determining human values and in shaping the course of our lives. However, mere belief in a future existence is not enough. Heathen peoples of all ages have held some belief in a continued existence after death. Usually, however, these beliefs have been very vague. We Christian people may well rejoice that through Christ we have given to us a satisfying conception of the future and an authentic and a true one. Christ by His coming from the tomb proved both His victory over death and His authority to speak about the unseen realm.

A Problem Solved vss. 24-27

In this section of our lesson, Christ answered a question asked by the Sadducees, who did not believe in a resurrection from the dead (vss. 18-23). They thought that their question (vs. 23) showed the absurdity of a resurrection and of a future bodily existence. However it merely showed their ignorance. Jesus told them that their beliefs were in error (vs. 24). They erred in not understanding the scriptures. They thought of life after death as being under the same conditions and relationships as the present life —material life under material conditions. Jesus made plain the fact that there will not be any marriage in the future world. Marriage is ordained of God to perpetuate the human family. There will be no deaths in heaven, so this ordinance will cease. Our existence, relations, and state will be similar to that of angels; heavenly, spiritual, immortal, each living an independent life in God's presence. God will endow us with the capacities suitable for an eternal existence. When God takes His faithful ones into His fellowship, He does not limit His purpose to their brief earthly existence.

An Incorruptible Body vss. 50-54

Our earthly bodies are perishable and these can not enter upon the imperishable life—the kingdom of God (vs. 50) in the heavenly state. The material body must be changed and clothed with immortality. This change will be experienced by all. Some will be living when Christ comes to fit them for their new abode (vs. 51). The dead will be raised incorruptible (vs. 52); all will be changed. Our future bodies will never grow old, for they are incorruptible. Paul says they will be spiritual bodies, glorious, immortal. They will be suited to the heavenly world. Death will have no power over them.

A Final Victory vss. 55-58

Christ's destruction of the "last enemy" secures absolute victory for Him and all His saints. Sin brought death into the world. Men have sinned and are unprepared to meet God and that causes them to dread death—to dread meeting Him. When men disobey God's law and will their sin is revealed to them. God gives us the victory through Christ. He gives us victory over death by giving us victory over sin. This victory is achieved through Christ's redemption work. Through His death He destroyed him who had the power of death, the devil (Heb. 2:14). The confidence of triumph should make us steadfast in Christian experience and diligent in the Lord's work. We are assured that our labors will not go unrewarded. The death of the Christian is the beginning of a larger and fuller life. In the final resurrection our victory will be complete.

Why is death dreaded by many people?

How does unbelief in a future life affect the estimate of the present life?

What proves to us that Christ gives us victory over sin and death?

OUR OPPORTUNITY IN THE CHACO

By S. C. Yoder

Thirteen hundred and fifty miles up the Parana-Paraguay River, deep in the heart of the Chaco, is a colony of Mennonite refugees. They came from Russia in 1930 and 1934 to escape the hardship, the persecutions and terrors which the Bolshevik regime imposed upon them. Before the Revolution in 1917 they were among Russia's foremost agricultural and business men. Their well-kept villages and wide-spreading fields were models of thriftiness and orderliness. Their schools, churches, hospitals, and institutions of charities were examples of order and efficiency. Their mills, factories, and banking institutions were sound and well-managed, highly productive and successful. Then came the hard years of confiscation, confusion, suffering, and sorrow during which they tried to adjust themselves to the communistic economic order without sacrificing their faith or their culture. No one can tell what they endured during those years—imprisonment, torture, banishment, fear and death became familiar experiences in their circles.

From 1923 on some twenty-five thousand migrated to Canada. Then this avenue closed. The United States never admitted many because of her stringent immigration laws. With the accession of Stalin it became more difficult to secure permits to leave Russia. In 1930 some three thousand came to Germany, from whence they found their way to Brazil and Paraguay, where the latter group settled close by the colony of Canadian Mennonites who had come a few years earlier. Those who came in 1934 are a part of the group that fled across the frozen waters of the Amur one winter night when three whole villages escaped from their Siberian homes.

These people came to Paraguay because there seemed to be no other place to go. Nations have little to offer to people who are without money and who have no passports or legal evidence of citizenship. In this dark moment little Paraguay in the heart of the great continent to the south of us opened her doors, as she had previously done to the settlers from Canada, and extended to these pilgrims her hospitality. They were accorded the same privileges that the Canadian group enjoyed—the right to manage their own affairs, to conduct their own schools, and to maintain their religious practices. Paraguay is a poor country, but such as she had she gave freely.

The first years in this new land were hard—in fact all of them have been. These fugitive settlers had no money. They owed for their voyage and transportation from their home to the Chaco. They purchased much of their machinery and equipment on credit in Germany. They went in debt for their land and cattle. The Mennonite Central Committee loaned them money to live during the first few years until their new fields could be made to produce. Seldom have people been face to face with a more difficult situation. They were in reality political fugitives in a great unsettled and untamed wilderness, where the climate and products were radically different from anything they had ever known. They were in the midst of a strange culture where people spoke a strange language. On every side it seemed they were walled in with debts. Disease rose from the swamps of the forest, and brooded over the colony like a deadly miasma. During the first year of their residence ninety-two of their number were buried in the new cemeteries at the edge of the forest—an epidemic of typhoid swept them away within a period of two weeks. They had no medical men among their number and army doctors were far away and hard to get. In addition to the loneliness, the physical distress and hardship, the rains failed and insect pests destroyed their crops. One of their number writing about those tragic days says:

> "The endurance of the settlers was almost gone. In Moscow the Lord had heard our prayers and had not let us fall into the hands of men. Here we fell into the hands of God who spake in terrible earnestness to us."

But the Lord rewarded their faith and heard their petitions. It rained again and better seasons came. Gradually they learned how to live in this new land, what to plant and how to cultivate. In time they completed building their houses—comfortable houses—of mud brick, plastered inside and out with mud. Schools and churches and a hospital were constructed of the same material. When they learned that cotton was a paying crop they put up a cotton gin. A creamery and cheese factory were set up and a refrigerator plant was installed. From the first they had a saw mill which they brought with them from Germany. They have among their number fine artisans—wagon makers, cabinet makers, and tailors whose skill and training are now put to a good use in the colony.

They were on their way of becoming self-sustaining and were beginning to make payment of their debts when the war broke out and practically closed the cotton markets. This was a serious blow to them since South America depends largely on Europe for a market for her grains, meat and cotton. In the last few years the value of their peso has declined until it is worth only one fourth as much as it was when they first came to the country. Recent letters say that the rains have failed again and insect pests are at work.

Today this colony that has been the concern of many of us is again in difficult straits. Their experiences in Russia brought some of them to the breaking point physically; some of them broke completely. Their life in the Chaco has brought its full quota of hardship and disappointment, and some of them are again losing courage. There are among them insidious forces—individuals who, under the guise of friendliness, are trying to break down their morale and their faith in the new country. Again they need the guidance of a friendly hand and help from the brethren whom they have learned to love and trust.

This raises the important question of their needs and of what we can do. They have not been in need of food, but the drought this year may change this situation altogether. There are, however, other things that are important and we are made to appreciate anew the saying of the great Apostle that "a man's life does not consist of the abundance of things which he possesseth." In this case their earthly possessions are meager, and some of them are wanting altogether, but even that is not our greatest concern. Nor is it theirs.

Their first need is moral support. If their courage fails, all will fail. Their life is incomprehensibly hard. They are separated by many miles from those of like faith. They are practically cut off from the outside world. Their problems challenge the wisdom and strength of people who are at their very best. They need kindly and brotherly counsel and above all they need our prayers and our sympathy. It means much to them to know that someone thinks of them.

Money is not the most essential thing. It is important only because of what it buys. Owing to the prolonged drought it is possible that there will be a need of food and clothing. The people who work for a salary such as teachers, or those who get an allowance as do their missionaries to the Indians are in especially hard circumstances and it is with great difficulty that their schools and missions are maintained. When people live seventy-five miles from the closest railroad it goes without saying that means of transportation are important. Thus far they have been so busy doing the things that must be done that they have had little time to improve roads. During certain times of the year the long, long trip to the railroad has to be made with horse or oxen and wagon. There is a truck in the colony and those who can afford it have their hauling done when the roads are passable.

The matter of health is not the least of their problems. If they are unable to work there will be no crops, nor food, nor clothing. The swamps are infested with malarial mosquitoes that carry disease far and wide. There have been times when entire villages were incapacitated on this account. These nests of disease could be broken up, but again the effectiveness of this work hinges on things that cost money. Tracoma is bad among the children. Going without shoes endangers them to infections of hookworm. Dr. Schmidt from the United States who is spending a year among them is doing a noble work. He is the first resident doctor the colony has had. Naturally, the health of the people was much neglected in the past and no doubt some cases have become irreparable. He works with a small staff of nurses in a hospital of about a dozen beds with the operating room and the maternity ward in separate buildings. His service is greatly appreciated and the colony is praying that he may be prevailed upon to continue after his term of service has expired.

What is of even greater concern than the physical welfare is the need for a revival of hope and courage and provision for the maintenance of the spiritual life of the people of the colony. They have faithful ministers, some of them are very able. Formerly they had Young People's Institutes, songfests, and other religious activities. In the more recent years they have been much handicapped because of a lack of means and in some cases a lack of leadership. Teachers in their schools give themselves unitedly and untiringly to the work for less compensation for the year than the most meagerly paid of our public school teachers get per month.

People who live under such conditions have their discouraging days and yet they press onward. They want to pay their debts. They want to provide for themselves physically and spiritually but they need encouragement and at times they need physical and material help. This latter is true now.

There is only one star in their firmament that sheds any light on their way—the God whom they know. And only one source among men on which they can rely for help—their brethren in the Faith. This latter group has practically dwindled down to those who live in North America. It was this group that under the guidance of the Mennonite Central Committee helped them to their new homes and has been a brother indeed. When we make up our budget for relief, missions and charities let us not overlook these struggling brethren in the wilds of Paraguay. Since the storm broke over Russia they have put up a hard long fight for their faith as well as for their very existence. They have been driven from pillar to post, from land to sea. They need our prayers and our support. Let us not fail them in their struggle.

REJOICE

We can see the Saviour's loving face
And hear His pleasant voice,
As soft and low He says, "If ye
Loved Me, ye would rejoice!"

He knows how hard it is for us
To smile when things go wrong;
And yet, if we trust, He will be with us
And give us a happy song.

To sing as we daily wend our way,
To what future, yet unknown!
We have cause to rejoice and grateful be,
For His great love we own.

When He was on earth and treading the path
That led to Calvary,
A great many sorrows were His share
But He bore them patiently.

How great the price that He paid for us,
How wonderful His great love,
We will never know till that glorious day
When we meet our Lord above.

As we tread our path on this earth below
Let us list to His loving voice,
And do His will as He bids us thus: "If ye Loved Me, ye would rejoice!"

OUR CHALLENGE

By

Jacob D. Goering

The late Dr. A. E. Holt, who until his death last January was honorary chairman of the Congregational-Christian Council for Social Action, made a statement recently which deeply challenges every thinking Mennonite, and especially Mennonite youth. The substance of this statement is the prediction that after the war the Protestant leadership will shift from the evangelical and preaching churches to the Historic Peace churches—the Quakers, Brethren, and Mennonites.

Very obviously this statement was made because of the stand these churches take on the peace and war issue. With that in mind it is interesting and revealing to take inventory of our present record. Are we really in a position to make a substantial contribution to religious thinking and action, let alone take the leadership? What are we doing now or what may we do in the immediate future of such significance that we shall be called on to take the leadership of the churches?

In the first place we have had a large share in the setting up of the whole Civilian Public Service program. This is certainly an accomplishment. We owe our gratitude to the church leaders who envisioned and worked so tirelessly for these camps, as well as to the government for permitting and even helping us to operate them. This is tremendously significant, but of far more importance now is the question of what will grow out of the camps. Many of our church leaders are convinced that from these camps must come the leadership of the Mennonite church of the future. Dr. Holt's prophetic statement seems to point to just such a view. This implies of course that the camps must set up a real educational and training program. Much has already been done along this line, and surely progress will be made.

There are, however, other implications which it seems are well worth noting. How can we take effective leadership among the churches in bearing out our testimony if a large per cent of our own group does not support our program? Many—far too many— of the young Mennonite men who are drafted are choosing the army instead of the C.P.S. camp. This may of course be their conscientious position, but it certainly is not the Mennonite position. We have but to refer to the resolution passed by the General Conference last August to verify that. A teacher in a Methodist Seminary said recently that he could not conceive of a Mennonite who is not a pacifist. To him such a person seemed a living paradox.

It is very disconcerting indeed to hear reports which tell us for example that out of the first seven men called only one went to a C.P.S. camp. Other congregations find that approximately half of the boys go to a C.P.S. camp. Still others have better records, of course. One wonders if the boys themselves can be held wholly accountable for this. Do not the adult leaders have some influences over the younger men in the congregation? Dare we suspect that, perhaps, some of the pillars of our churches are not supporting our cause? That would indeed be a sad commentary on our professed stand.

Debatable as many issues are, this one thing seems clear, in order to meet the challenge placed before us by Dr. Holt, we shall have to make every effort to improve our record and to support unflinchingly the stand we have taken. It may cost us considerably in terms of money, jobs, or even social prestige, but these are at best only transitory values and can not be compared favorably with the greater spiritual values which may be won. Yes, we can meet this challenge if we pledge ourselves to the way of Christ, cost what it may. —North Newton, Kansas

No. 1 Series of Six Studies—Church History

CHRIST IS RISEN

Matt. 28:1-8

Program for April 5, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Jesus Christ Is Ris'n Today," No. 114; "Low in the Grave He Lay," No. 452; (Songs are always taken from Mennonite Hymnary).
2. Reading of main topic, prayer and leader's opening remarks.
3. Several numbers of Easter music.
4. Offering for general C. E. Fund, for such things as printing of prayers, calendars, standards, postage.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Easter means that we worship a living Lord, not the memory of a leader who died long ago. It means that Christ is a living influence in the world today, in my life, in your life. His resurrection marks the birth of the church, His spirit and His power work through it. He gloriously and abundantly proves that He is alive forevermore. The experience of each individual Christian verifies this, but more the history of the church attests to it. The church under the many persecutions, and beset by many temptations, consisting of frail, sinful men and women would long ago have ceased to exist, were it not for a living Christ. "I live and ye too shall live," is the promise He is vindicating, even in our day of world up-heaval and turmoil.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Resurrected with Christ.	Matt. 27:52, 53.
2. Report of the resurrection.	Luke 24:33-35.
3. Reliving in Christ.	I Cor. 15:20-22.
4. Risen with Christ.	Col. 3:1.
5. Revelation of Christ's eternity.	Rev. 1:18.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What impression did the resurrection of Christ make on the disciples?
2. What does Paul say about Christ's resurrection?
3. How is His resurrection an assurance of our immortality?

V. For Meditation and Study:

"This is what happened: A strange young man, with nothing but grave goodness in his life and kindness in his words, scourged to the fainting point, crowned with thorns until his forehead bled, staggered under a heavy cross, along the Via Dolorosa, or Way of Sorrows, in Jerusalem, through the Damascus Gate, and out to Calvary. There rough Roman soldiers drove nails through his hands and feet and lifted him between earth and sky. There he hung in torture for six long hours while an earthquake shook the place and clouds gathered in the skies; and though usually it took three days to kill a man this way, and though he refused to partake of a stupefying drug, he died in the middle of the afternoon. This was on Friday. Then on the morning of the first day of the week, the first Easter Lord's Day, before the dawn some women, always first at the cradle and last at the grave, came to add spices to his sepulchre. They debated, as they skirted the northeastern wall of the city, coming up from the shadows of the Kidron where lay Gethsemane, as to how they should get the huge stone rolled away from the tomb. When they got there, the stone had already been rolled away, and the only light in the surrounding obscurity, came shining out of that cave-like grave. They looked in and saw nothing, but a radiant, angelic presence, and the grave-clothes folded and laid aside. Then they heard the words, "He is not here, but is risen."

Beginning with the dawn next Sabbath morning in Jerusalem, the singing and the rejoicing will roll westward to the blue Mediterranean, will come up from a thousand ships, will roll on to modern Athens, old Corinth, and, leaping the Adriatic will swell up in a mighty paean in Rome. Then over the Alps it will go to many an Italian village and Swiss chalet, on to the capitals of Europe—Vienna, Paris, and Berlin, across the channel into Britain and then, in the cabins of great ocean going liners, it will be carried across western seas to our shores and will roll on—North America, South America, Africa, China, India—Easter and its message is for all—bringing life—new, unendng, everlasting."

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

THE CROSS

Song: "Tell Me the Story of Jesus."
Prayer:
Prophecy of the Cross: Isa. 53:1-9.
Song: "The Old Rugged Cross."
Bearing the Cross: Matt. 27:27-32.
Solo: "The Way of the Cross Leads Home."
The Crucifixion: Matt. 27:38-60.
Song: "Beneath the Cross of Jesus."
Questions:
References:
Consecration Hymn: "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross."
Benediction:

Suggestions

All parts of the program, with the exception of the songs, should be written on the back of a cardboard cross. Punch a hole in the top of each cross.

At the close of the service turn off all the lights except two candles at the foot of the cross. (A cross made of laths and white cloth can have lights built into it.)

Each person hangs his small cross on the large cross, which has a row of nails on each crosspiece. He then joins the rest of the group in a circle around the cross. They sing "Jesus Keep Me Near the Cross," and follow it with the benediction.

Questions

1. Should we use the cross as a decoration on church buildings?
2. What is your favorite song about the cross?
3. What do we mean when we say we have a cross to bear?
4. How many crosses were erected when Jesus was crucified?
5. Who took Jesus down from the cross?
6. Tell some things Jesus said while on the cross.
7. Name something which happened while Jesus was on the cross.
8. What was written on the cross on which Jesus was crucified? And why?
9. What prayer did Jesus offer while He was on the cross?

Scripture Reading: Matt. 28:1-8.

Prayer Hymn: "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

Sentence Prayers:

Poem: Christ is Risen

Come, rejoice, 'tis Easter Day!
Lo, the stone is rolled away!
Empty lies His tomb.

Death hath lost its bitter sting—
Ring, ye bells of Easter, ring!
Christ is risen today.

Lo, He comes to you and me,
Bringing immortality,
That we, too, may live.

Priceless gift from Christ our King!
Ring, ye bells of Easter, ring!
Christ is risen today.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for April 5, 1942

THE FIRST GLAD EASTER

John 20:1-18

A VICTORY PROGRAM

Resurrection Day is important to the church for two reasons. First, it gives us hope of life eternal. Second, it gives us the power we need to live for Christ and witness for Him.

This morning, we hope, all Juniors attended the Sunrise Easter service. Easter makes it possible to join with other societies to have such a service in your own church or community. This kind of a service should be reviewed in song, story and scripture, and the place of resurrection in the belief of a Christian today.

I think it would be well to make your Easter program one which contains many numbers of music. Why not have a short prelude with trumpets and piano, playing the hymn, "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth." When we can sing this song truthfully because we have had such an experience in our lives and have triumphed over sin, then we have a victory to tell others about. The following are a few verses of a poem by "Avis Christiansen."

The Empty Tomb

What saith the Empty Tomb to me
This hallowed Easter morn?
It speaks of life and victory
And glorious hope newborn.
It tells of One who hung in shame
Upon a cross of woe;
That all who call upon his name
Eternal life might know.
It tells me that because he lives
I, too, shall never die;
And everlasting hope it gives
Of joy with him on high.
What saith the empty tomb today?
It saith, the Lord hath risen,
Dispelling evermore the gloom
Of death's foreboding prison.

It saith, Look unto him and live,
For he hath power to save;
Life everlasting, he doth give,
And victory o'er the grave.

The Question Bee

1. In what way is the resurrection of Christ remembered in our church life today?
2. What do we mean by the living Christ?
3. What is a good memory verse? John 14:19.

The Prayer List

(a) Thank God for (1) victory of Christ over death (2) for the love of Christ for us in opening the way to eternal life (3) for the joy of knowing we have a living Saviour today.

(b) Ask God (1) to help in our daily living (2) the courage to speak to others about accepting Christ (3) for willingness to put Him first in our lives.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

"I WILL SUP WITH THEM——"

In these words we are granted a vision of what the attitude of our heavenly Father is to those who would join themselves to Christ. We had the good privilege of having our co-workers from Korba—the Wengers and the Jansens, with us on Sunday, June 1. They and we were anxious to go to see some of our far-away brothers and sisters in Christ. In the Basna area we have Christians in more than fifty villages. Brother Duerksen had arranged for communion services in two church and baptismal services at a third. Rev. Jansen was willing to give his car, so we went over rough road and around tree stumps to Dhabakar, a village which we too had visited many times in 1924 and 1925. The little congregation has gone through stormy periods there. A few of the brethren were driving too much for the things of this world, and consequently had a chilling influence over the spiritual life of the little group. Those guilty ones, however, have seen their own condition of "nakedness" without Christ, and have turned to Him again. To these brethren I was asked by Brother Duerksen to preach the communion sermon. We could remind our brethren how Christ wants to become a part of us as bread becomes a part of us when we eat it; and how He wants His blood to flow in our veins so that His life becomes our life. Then we gathered around the table of our Lord and supped with Him and He with us. It was a simple occasion. The symbol of the bread was an Indian pancake; the symbol of the cup was rozelle water. The meeting was outside under a tree, because the church here is also too small for the congregation, but our Lord was with us.

From Dhabakar we went to Kutendhara, a place entirely new to me, and far away from the mission station. Here was held the baptismal service. Rev. Jansen, one of our youngest missionaries, preached the sermon. (We were delighted to hear our new fellow missionary speak in the Indian tongue so well. When we left on furlough just over two years ago the Jansens were in the A B C's of the Indian language. Now they use is well). Then Rev. Duerksen baptized nine converts out of Hinduism. To see the joy and hope on the faces of these "newly born" followers of Christ is a joy to behold. They are as new plants, full of promise for the future, but also exposed to the withering conditions of life with all its temptations. We have good reasons to believe, however, that in their own way and under the guidance of the Spirit of God they will bear fruit.

The third place for this Sunday was Balsi, a village I have never visited, but from which our younger brother, Yohan Pal, had come to our Mauhadih school several years ago. Therefore Balsi village was known to me by very intimate contact, yet never a physical contact. Here too, it had been arranged to gather around our Lord's table. Again Brother Duerksen asked me to preach the communion sermon. I had never preached two communion sermons in one day, so I had a new experience also. It was getting late in the day and we had to hurry because of this, and also the fact that rain was threatening. It was suggested to this congregation that in the Orient no two eat together unless they are friends. The fact that our Lord wants to sup with us is the clearest proof that He wants to be our Friend and Companion on the path of life. A crippled brother was carried to the service. We met by the side of a home. Many non-Christians gathered around to see what we did. They also kept a devout silence, and I am sure their observation of what we said and did meant that an enormous testimony for Christ was given; also they comprehended that, in some way, Christ was present. These communion and baptismal services in the far outlying villages are a tremendous force in the building of Christ's kingdom in our Basna area.

Though we had been lifted so high in the experience of the day, yet God permitted us to realize the fact that we were still in this world. On the way back it got dark, the road awfully bad, rain threatening; then suddenly Rev. Jansen's car stopped. The gas pipe was clogged up, and it took an hour of patient coaxing before we could go on again. Yes, we are still in this world. —John Thiessen

IN MEMORIAM

KATHERINE SCHRAG KREHBIEL, June 1, 1875—Feb. 2, 1942. Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Schrag who came from Rusia around 1875. Lived at Yankton, South Dakota; near Eugene, Oregon; near Lind, Washington, and in Ritzville, Washington. Married Jacob Krehbiel. Member of Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington.

REV. JOHN FLAMING, March 28, 1863—Feb. 4, 1942. Son of Andrew Flaming and Helen Unruh-Flaming who came from Russia in 1874. Lived at Shardau, South Russia; near Peabody, Kansas; near Inman, Kansas, and around Corn, Oklahoma. Married Maria Enns. Children who mourn his passing: Mrs. H. N. Kroeker and Mrs. G. N. Kroeker, both of Corn, Oklahoma; P. J. Flaming, Weatherford, Oklahoma; H. B. Flaming, Corn, Oklahoma; John W. Flaming, Parlier, California; Ernest B. Flaming, Reedley, California; and Fred, Alvin, and Clarence of Weatherford, Oklahoma. Church Elder for twenty-one years.

"A sturdy oak has fallen; a fruitful tree has gone the way of all flesh. In truth, Rev. Flaming was a sturdy oak which had struck its roots deeper and deeper into a faith in the merciful God no matter how the storms howled around his head and threatened to dislodge him . . . We must say, 'Here truly was a soul that trusted in God, that saw its way clearly and then went that way no matter what the odds were or the difficulties.' Though rather unschooled he nevertheless did a noble work as minister and Elder of the Bergthal Church. If these walls could only speak, they would tell of many a sound gospel truth which was fearlessly proclaimed to the world by this entrepid leader. He was a servant of God for thirty-two years and Elder of his church for twenty-one years. It was no idle whim for fancy which brought him to tell the world of the Great God and Mighty Saviour whom he loved and served. When in 1895 a tree crashed him to the ground and for two hours he was thought dead, a solemn promise made to his God made him a willing tool in the hands of God. As S. S. president and also teacher he began his work in the vineyard of God. Then on June 16, 1899, came the call to the ministry. Though knowing his weakness he followed the call and was ordained April 16, 1902, as minister and on the fourteenth of May, 1911, as Elder. His sermons were not the outpouring of personal knowledge nor the idle seeking for acclaim, but as he himself put it: "I got it all on my knees from the Lord." Again his faith was put to the test when his beloved wife was struck by lightning in 1896, and a few years later again, but he found a bottomless well of help and sustaining power in his Bible and in his petitions and prayers to his God. The crowning test came when in July, 1938, his beloved wife was taken from him. Instead of much complaining and faultfinding he looked more and more to his God and finally had the only objective in life to see his wife again by being with his Lord. And so his life's sketch abounds with this one thought: There was nothing of value left in this world; to be wih his God and Father and rest in the arms of his Jesus was all that interested him, and toward that he was striving. It gave him great joy to receive me and my family as members of the Bergthal Church, and he was ever a challenge to my work, always in his place when possible, always attentive; even prayer meetings were not too late or too tiresome for him to attend. We have lost a leader and friend; the children have lost a father, but heaven has gained a tireless worker and a faithful servant. There he is now "safe in the arms of Jesus," his hopes attained, his objective reached." —Rev. Henry Hege, Pastor, Bergthal Mennonite Church

ELIZABETH EDIGER-BERGEN, August 18, 1881—January 24, 1942. Lived near Inman, Kansas; in Washita County, Oklahoma; near Corn, Oklahoma; in the Home for the Aged at Goessel, Kansas, and in the Home for the Aged at Newton, Kansas. Church memberships: Hebron Mennonite Church and Bergthal Mennonite Church. Church work: S. S. teacher and leader of sewing society. Married Jacob Bergen. Children who mourn her passing: Mrs. Henry Nikkel, Clinton, Oklahoma; Ernest Bergen, Cordell, Oklahoma; Jacob Bergen, Oklahoma City; John Bergen, Weatherford, Oklahoma. Her husband survives her.

JACOB BERG, June 21, 1879—Jan. 30, 1942. Son of Peter and Catherine (Rogalski) Berg who came from Germany in 1896. Lived in Ellerwald near Elbing, Germany, and at Whitewater, Kansas. Member of Emmaus Mennonite Church. Married Anna Harder who now survives him.

A. A. STUCKY, Aug. 21, 1876—Feb. 2, 1942. Son of Peter C. and Maria Stucky. Lived in McPherson County, Kansas; in Oklahoma, and at Monroe, Washington. Married Anna Flickinger, daughter of Rev. J. J. Flickinger. Children who mourn his passing are: Edmund W., Ella Ruth, Oswald, Dora, and Mary, all livng around Monroe. Church activity: Helped organize S. S. which first met in homes. Became one of the original organizers of the present First Mennonite Church, Monroe, Washington.

CORNELIUS VON RIESEN, May 21, 1870—Feb. 4, 1942. Son of John and Marie von Riesen who came from Germany in 1876. Lived at Tralau near Marienburg, West Prussia, and near Beatrice, Nebraska. Education: Blakely District School, Mennonite Bible School, Beatrice Business College. Member of First Mennonite Church. Married Catharine Penner who survives him. Children who mourn his passing are: Mrs. Helmuth Penner, Plymouth, Nebraska; Clifford, Neligh, Nebraska; Cornie, Omaha, Nebraska; John, Beatrice, Nebraska; Harold, Chicago, Illinois; Gerhard, Fort Morgan, Colorado; Ronald, Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas.

PAUL MYERS, age twenty-three years. Son of Levinus and Estella Myers, members of the Deep Run Mennonite Church, Perkasie, Pa. He left his home on motorcycle for his work on the state highway. About fifteen minutes later he was found lying beside the road . . . unconscious . . . He was hurried to the Grand View Hospital where he passed away without being able to tell what happened.

FRANK. H. GOERTZ, Feb. 19, 1860—Feb. 23, 1942. Son of Henry and Eva Janzen Goertz who came to America in 1874. Lived in village of Alexanderwohl, South Russia, and in Marion County, Kansas. Church membership: Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church and Tabor Mennonite Church. Life work: farming and carpentry. Married Susanna Hiebert who survives him. Studied under Cornelius Wedel.

CORRESPONDENCE

WAYLAND MENNONITE CHURCH
Wayland, Iowa

Since our last report three members have gone to their eternal rest: Waldo Boller, Amanda Klopfenstein, and P. P. Schowalter. At Christmas carols were sung for shut-ins. At our annual business meeting, with Rev. William Penner in charge, the following officers were elected: W. J. Eicher, deacon; Sam Elder, trustee; and L. H. Rinner, secretary.

Our group participated in the observance of the World Day of Prayer, held in the Eicher Church with Mrs. D. E. Welty in charge. A large number attended, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit was keenly felt. Now, during the Lenten season, Rev. Penner is giving very inspirational talks on different phases of Christ's work. On March 1 Rev. Penner and Rev. Nunemaker, Donnellson, Iowa, went to Fortuna, Missouri, to participate in the ordination service of Rev. Leonard Metzker. We appreciate the timely and deeply spiritual messages of our pastor. May we all be more faithful in His service. —Corr.

ZOAR MENNONITE CHURCH
Goltry, Oklahoma

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." In January our pastor, Rev. J. W. Bergen, conducted evangelistic services in the Mennonite Church in Kingman, Kansas. During that time Walter Regier, Rev. Barkman, and Rev. Kuhlman, all teachers at the Oklahoma Bible Academy, served us.

During the five weeks Bible course at the academy we were fortunate to hear different ministers, for they served neighboring churches in the evenings. The ministers that served us on the various Tuesday evenings were: Rev. J. Baergen, Chicago, Illinois; Dr. A. Warkentin, Bethel College; Dr. A. S. Schultz, Bluffton College; and Rev. E. J. Neuenschwander. Dr. P. A. Penner was with us on a Sunday morning. Students from the academy and the Thiesen Brothers' Quartet from Whitewater, Kansas, furnished special music at the meetings. Two have been taken in by church letter this year. —Corr.

SWISS MENNONITE CHURCH
Whitewater, Kansas

We are still on the map and functioning, probably in a more earnest way since we are under the pressure of a world conflict; we are more or less anxious about the safety of our relatives (missionaries) of whom we have not heard since we are directly involved.

Our dear pastor admonishes us often to claim the promises of Psalm 91 and others for our loved ones. We are wondering if this world's blackout will prove to be one of the judgments just preceding the rapture as the blackout in Egypt was the second last plague before the delivery of God's people. Thank God, there is light in the dwellings of God's own. On March 8 Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Langenegger celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

EBENEZER MENNONITE CHURCH
Gotebo, Oklahoma

Rev. Noah Unruh has consented to serve us as minister in this year. We are looking forward to receiving many spiritual blessings. Although we have been without a minister for several years there have been few Sundays when we did not have preaching services. Rev. Rudolph Schmidt from Carnegie, Oklahoma, served us on February 1. Several Sundays this year we did not have Sunday School because of the bad roads. Everything is white with snow today. This is our first real snow this winter.

—Mrs. A. H. Brandt, Corr.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH
Fortuna, Missouri

November 9 we closed a week of very inspirational meetings conducted by Rev. J. N. Smucker. The speaker based his remarks on the Beatitudes. The meetings were well attended.

New Year's Eve the young people observed an old custom of going out to serenade the members of the church. A very enjoyable evening was reported by all that took part.

The Missionary Society has been very active. They have been sewing for Relief. They sent a large box of clothing to Akron, Pennsylvania, and cookies to the C. P. S. camp at Denison, Iowa.

The church is making plans to celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church. This celebration will be held April 15 to April 19. The church has enjoyed many rich blessings in the seventy-five years. May God continue to guide and direct us in our efforts to aid in the Kingdom.

November 5 Calvin Hilty was called to service at the Civilian Public Service Camp at Denison, Iowa. He is the only member in service from our church.

February 1, Raymond Garber and Susanna Aeschbacher were united in marriage. They are living in Versailles, Missouri. —Corr.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska

APRIL 1—"The Lord appeared to Abraham, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect." Gen. 17:1.

The more perfect the sight is the more delightful the beautiful object. The more perfect the appetite, the sweeter the food. The more musical the ear, the more pleasant the melody. The more perfect the soul, the more joyous the joys of heaven and the more glorious that glory. Perfection consists not in doing extraordinary things, but in doing ordinary things extraordinary well. Some of our most trivial actions may be great in the eyes of God. No one will attain a perfect stage in life except he has a desire for better things. In I Cor. 12:31, Paul writes, "Covet earnestly the best gifts." The size of donations never excited Jesus. It was the personal expression that went with it. To him who obeys Jesus' law of love, wealth simply affords an opportunity.

APRIL 2—"I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eyes." Ps. 32:8.

He that takes truth for his guide, and faith and duty for his end, may safely trust to God's providence to lead him aright. If we acknowledge God in all our ways, He has promised to safely direct our steps, and in our experiences we shall find the promise fulfilled. The famous Apostles' Creed begins with the word "I" and every personal confession of faith has to begin that way. Our God is the great "I am and I will." For most of us it is easy to understand the sunshine and fair weather, but Jesus as our guide has an interpretation also for the storm. Wars and rumors of war, earthquakes, famines and strife are all about us today, but in Him we have the assurance that He will not leave nor forsake us.

APRIL 3—"But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." Isa. 53:5.

The lives of mankind can be divided into three classes. First, the forgotten, second, the historic, and third, the influential. To which of these classes did Jesus belong? To none of them. First of all, Jesus is our Saviour from sin and death. Second, the giver and sustainer of our spiritual lives. Third, He dwells in the hearts of His people. Not only do we draw nigh to Him at the communion table, but daily we must be in contact with Him. In times such as these, violence and physical force appear to be the only means which individuals and nations choose for their safety. As surely as the world perishes by its hate, its lies, its violence, so surely does the spirit of Christ, of sacrificial love, offer a constant and certain hope.

APRIL 4—"Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." Matt. 14:27.

Jesus asked Peter "Wherefore didst thou doubt?" It was not Christ or His power that failed, but Peter's faith. It was easier to believe in his ship for safety, than in Jesus. Yet Christ did not fail Peter. Doubt has many disadvantages and dangers. It withdraws the mind from Christ. It breeds fear; it gives Satan a peculiar advantage against our soul. It gives false comfort. It tarnishes the profession of the Christian. When Peter sank he prayed. Sinking-times are praying-times. The fears of the real believer, however strong, are still accompanied with a cleaving to Christ. Our final faith is in the fact that we may live in Him and thereby in the mighty purposes of God, who, through Christ could: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

—First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana: The Men's Chorus recently sang at a vesper service in Bluffton College and Brother C. H. Suckau spoke.

—Rev. A. E. Sommer, for the past eight years, pastor of the Warren Street Mennonite Church at Middlebury, Indiana, has accepted a call to the Pulaski Mennonite Church, Pulaski, Iowa, and expects to take up his duties at the Iowa church the latter part of April.

—The Foreign Mission Board budget for 1942 is $79,847.84.

—The Grace Mennonite Church, Albany, Oregon, has a "Debt Account" thermometer and a "Building Fund" thermometer. Ten dollars given towards the church debt brings the red of the first down one-half inch. Ten dollars given for the building fund raises the red column one-half inch. The church board has decided to take turns in doing the janitor work. The ten dollars saved thereby each month is to go to one of the thermometers. Needed repairs are: new roof, painting, basement finished, and minor repairs. A second-hand hot air furnace was recently purchased.

—Bethany Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa., On the evening of February 22, the C. E. service was combined with the church service to commemorate the beginning of the Christian Endeavor movement. Ernest Bennett, who has done relief work in the war-stricken countries, was the main speaker. Rev. Jacob H. Jantzen, Waterloo, Ontario, recently conducted evangelistic services in our church. He spoke on the Ten Commandments, taking two every night from Monday through Friday. On Sunday he spoke on "The Decalogue As a Whole."

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: "Mr. Herman Neufeld reports that the goal of $500.00 was reached by March first and that a good start has been made toward our quota for the C. P. S. camps for the next six months."

—Letter from Red Cross Headquarters: "The entire Red Cross organization and all of its services are so interwoven in the War Relief Program, the principal part of which is Services to the Armed Forces, that it is not possible to segregate our activities in a way to utilize contributions separately for civilian use." —Fellowship

—Some "must" pictures. Reporting on the five week Bible course a student of the Oklahoma Bible Academy writes, "The last week we had the great privilege of having our pioneer missionary, Dr. P. A. Penner, with his forty years of experience in India. It definitely was a capstone on the five-weeks course. Every church should have Dr. Penner at least for one day or a series of meetings to relate his experiences in the work and show the best pictures we have seen on missions." Dr. P. A. Penner is now teaching Bible in Freeman Junior College. The true missionary spirit is exemplified by Brother Penner. He arrived from the mission field very tired. Did he seek a life of ease? Well, he filled numerous speaking engagements, taught at the Western District Retreat, spoke at conferences, was willing to fulfill the need for a pastor at the Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and has now moved again to teach at Freeman and thereby help them. He will be seventy-one years old on April 2. Why not cheer him with a thank you letter on that day?

—Special Services: According to the Freeman Courier Rev. John Bartel will serve at Madrid, Nebraska, and Rev. Willard Vetter of the Free Church in Minneapolis, Minnesota, will serve the First Mennonite Church at Butterfield, Minnesota. Rev. Walter Gering, pastor of the large Eden Church, recently conducted services at the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas.

—The Hebron Mennonite Church near Buhler, Kansas, heard Miss Aganetha Fast, former missionary to China, on January 25. On February 8 Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman spoke to the congregation in the interest of Bethel College. A group of high school girls, organized as the "Helping Hands" rendered a recent Sunday evening program in which they told us of the hard life of migrants.

—Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On March 1 we were glad to welcome Rev. J. J. Plenert to his home church and to listen to him as he brought the morning message, basing his text on Exodus 3:1-17. He especially pointed out the importance of knowing that the presence of the Lord is with us at our worship. In the evening Rev. Arnold Funk brought a message based on I Tim. 1:13-14..

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Wolf Point, Montana: "We are happy to report that a very good interest has been shown in our Sunday morning services and also in our weekly Bible study in the book of Revelation. We meet in the various homes for the Bible study. These are often times quite crowded." —Albert Ewert, pastor

—Bluffton College plans to continue its weekly Thursday evening broadcasts from station WLOK in Lima at 9:30 p. m., throughout the remainder of this schoolyear. The Youth Secretary of the projects.

—Rev. Albert Claassen is now visiting Northern District churches in the interest of Freeman Junior College, but his permanent address is 1508 Elk Street, Beatrice, Nebraska.

—The reports of our district conferences do not specifically state how much money each church contributed for peace work. Should not our church and district conference reports indicate how much was given for each of the six main phases of our work in the Kingdom: Education, Publication, Peace, Relief, Foreign Missions, Home Missions?

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Upland, California: "At the close of the service the ushers will be at the door to receive your offering for the C. P. S. camps. Our boys in these camps are giving their time and energy without any renumeration, and hence we believe they are giving a real testimony to the cause of peace; surely we at home should make some financial sacrifices toward this same cause."

—Rev. Carl J. Landes, Rural Secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation recently preached in the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

—From September 1, 1941, to March 1, 1942, all churches should have contributed on an average one dollar per member for the C. P. S. camps. The General Conference has fallen short on its quota. We should do better.

Helen A. Penner improving rapidly. A telegram from Joseph Byler, relief director in France, says this about Miss Penner, "PENNER IMPROVING RAPIDLY CONVALESCING IN MOUNTAIN RESORT NEARBY." H. Ernest Bennett of the Akron office wrote on February 24, "I am inclined to feel that she is in capable hands and after a little while will be able to carry on her work again."

The Secretarial Bureau at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, maintains up-to-date lists at all times. The bureau is especially anxious to keep names and addresses of all Mennonite preachers and other church workers. Any help received along this line will be greatly appreciated.

BUT PETER FOLLOWED HIM AFAR OFF. O, how men and women are tempted to follow Jesus from afar off. Follow Him, yes. But closely, no. Why? O, the world doesn't like this non-resistant Lamb of God, and I want to stand good with the world. I want to be loyal to both. And with this attitude men and women follow afar off. When the crisis came in the temple court it is said of Peter, "Then began he to curse and to swear, I know not the man". He warmed himself around the same fire around which the enemies of Christ warmed themselves. He did not want to seem different. And so men and women who in a manner want to be true to the non-resistant Christ and yet not offend those in worldly power, warm themselves around the fire in the community courtyard by certain investments. By speech and action they seek to deny the fact that they are "one of them". Perhaps, Christ has reason for looking sad today.

AND HE WENT AWAY AND HANGED HIMSELF. That was the end of a course of action that Judas had insisted upon. Men are still puzzled as to why Judas betrayed Christ. Did he do it for the money? Later he threw it away. Did he seek revenge for the rebuke which Jesus gave him when Mary had anointed His feet? Did he try to force Jesus into a critical situation so that Jesus might declare Himself the Messiah in an earthly manner, and thus fulfill the ardent wishes and hopes of the disciples for an earthly kingdom? Whatever the answer, one thing is clear. Instead of seeking to do the will of Christ with fear and trembling, he callously insisted upon following his own selfish will. Satan entered into him. Self-will in a human being is a good indication that that has happened. It is self-will that is antagonistic to the will of Christ that makes betrayal inevitable. Self-will leads to self-destruction. "Not what I will, but what thou wilt," said Jesus in Gethsemane. Dare we say otherwise?

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST was and is precious blood because the blameless Son of God shed it for the salvation of an unworthy mankind. It is Christ on the cross that arouses the deepest and greatest awe, reverence, and love possible in man. Christ on the cross is the redemption point of the ages. But it was not His physical suffering which was most painful. The robbers, too, bore that. The pain that was nearly unbearable to Christ was not physical but spiritual pain. O, how it must have pained Christ, the blameless Song of God, the true Messiah, to be rejected by those He yearned to save. What pain must have pierced Him when men abused Him as a traitor and as a blasphemer against God. They took Him not for what He was and made of Him what He was not. No wonder that there was great darkness. No wonder Jesus cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Can anyone imagine a more forsaken feeling than that which comes when light is called darkness? Lonesomeness and pain reached its climax when the light that lighteth the world was made to appear as the greatest darkness. What guilt on the part of man! What patience and forgiveness on the part of God! Man made it a terrible Friday for Christ, but God through the blood of Christ made it a Good Friday for man.

HE IS RISEN! To die is human. To rise again and live eternally is divine. What assurance, what comfort there is in Christ's resurrection! Because He lives we can live. The Bible is the written witness that Christ lives. We can and should be the living witnesses of the fact that He lives. How good a witness we are depends largely upon how we permit Christ to live within us. As Christians we can live so that by words and actions we deny that Christ is alive and lives in us. Rabbits, eggs, and new clothes do not testify of the risen Christ, but a cleansed and renewed heart does. We rejoice in Easter; we treasure the fact that He is risen, for it assures us of victory over death and of the privilege of being with Jesus always. Dare we rejoice unto ourselves? Ought not our lives be such a living testimony of the risen Christ, that others too will learn to know Him and find life eternal? What attitude we take towards our problems, towards suffering, towards death itself and what treasures we seek to pay up either tells or fails to tell others about the risen Christ. Christ is to live in us. What a holy responsibility to think about on Easter Day. May we permit nothing to crowd Him out of any part of our lives. May the glad note of "He is risen" order all our days and fill our lives with divine harmony as we permit the Risen One to live in us. Let us abide in Christ, let us beseech Christ to abide in us at all times, and we shall live throughout all eternity.

A SONG OF THE HEART

I said to my soul,
Sing a song to thy Beloved,
And the soul sang:

Thou didst find me, my Beloved,
Find me
When my heart sought Thee.
From afar I heard Thee calling,
Calling,
Calling, "Come to Me."
And Thy voice
Was like the waters
Like the music of the sea;
Like the song of many harpers,
Sweetest,
Sweetest melody.

When I came
Thy arms were waiting,
Stretched upon the cruel cross.
'Tis for me,
I heard Thee saying.
—For my sin to suffer thus?
Then I'll stay
Upon this hillside,
Stay beneath this love-lit cross
Where Thy precious blood shall cleanse me,
Free me
From all guilt and dross.

O Beloved, I have found Thee!
Now,
I'd give my life for Thee;
I would suffer shame and sorrow,
I would do it willingly.
O I love Thee!
Yes, I love Thee,
Wrap,
Enfold me in Thy grace;
Keep me in Thy holy nearness
Till,
O till I see Thy face.

What if They Say

What if they say, "Why were not soldiers who became Christians in apostolic times commanded to leave the army?"

The purpose of Jesus' life and teachings was not to attack any traditional institutions as such. He did not directly condemn slavery with its attending oppression, nor war with its vicious results. His mission was to win men, to implant within them new hearts, new desires, new standards of conduct. What the law of Moses demanded Christ made available by virtue of the power of the new life.

So the testimony of the New Testament church was: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are becoming new" (II Cor. 5:17). Possesing a new life, a Christian does not need to be commanded to shun the methods of the world. Old things do pass away when all things become new.

Lest He be mistaken for a mere social reformer, rather than the Redeemer from the ways of sin, our Lord did not attack outward evils. He condemned, however, the outcroppings of the underlying attitudes of unbelief, selfishness, greed, and hypocrisy which made slavery, war, and other kindred evils possible.

Though Jesus did not attack slavery openly, He left no doubt as to His estimate of oppression when He preached "deliverance to the captives" (Luke 4:18). Spiritually, of course, in the primary sense, but notice the actual progress in understanding which Christians were making when the Apostle Paul wrote to Philemon to receive Onesimus, an escaped slave, but who in the meantime had become a Christian, as a brother in Christ. "Receive him as myself" (Philemon 17) Paul says. Today Christians regard slavery as basically evil—and that in practice.

Though Jesus did not attack war openly, He left no doubt as to the inevitable results of carnal self-defense, when he said to Peter: "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Many of the early followers of Christ were simple enough to believe that when Jesus rebuked Peter He also had all Christians in mind.

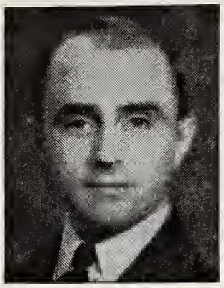
NEW SERIES BY DR. J. WINFIELD FRETZ



In this issue is the first of a series of articles on the general subject, "Mennonites and Rural Life" by J. Winfield Fretz. Brother Fretz was reared in a Pennsylvania farm, graduated from Bluffton College, has a Bachelor of Divinity degree, and holds the M. A. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Chicago. As a member of the Bethel College faculy he now specializes in the teaching of rural sociology and Christian economics.

MENNONITES AND RURAL LIFE

By Winfield Fretz

There is a very close connection between a man's occupation and his religion. Before the present age of industrialism it was common to refer to a man's occupation as his "calling." This term is almost totally confined to the ministerial profession today, but it applies equally well to the vocation of agriculture and many related vocations in rural life. I say in agriculture and rural life because it is not as easy to fulfill the definition of a calling in the modern city jobs of millions of men and women in factories, shops, and offices.

A calling implies a Divine bidding to give one's whole life, his entire devotion and resources to a particular task or occupation. In the majority of jobs in factories and offices where there is such extreme specialization that one person performs one small operation in a long process of production he can hardly give himself wholeheartedly and enthusiastically. The work is to monotonous, too mechanical, too unnatural to call forth the best in man. In the occupations of rural life this is not so generally true.

Mennonites in America are about ninety per cent rural people. The other ten per cent who are residents of cities have, for the most part, come from rural backgrounds. Granting then that there is a relation between a man's work and his religion and that occupations of rural life, such as farming, may be sacred or divine callings we can see a reason for the general subject of "Mennonites and Rural Life" in a church paper.

The Bible is replete with pictures, symbols and descriptions of rural life from Genesis to Revelation. Christianity had its beginning among agricultural people who were accustomed to grain fields, herds of cattle, olive groves, vineyards, birds and trees. Of course, God works in the city as well as in the country, but it seems today, as throughout history, that rural people are more naturally religious than their city brothers. It is easier to sense the presence of God when one can daily witness his handiwork in the fields of grain, in the setting sun and the rising moon, in the singing of the birds and in the growth and blossoming of flowers and trees. The complicated mechanisms of city life with its masses of concrete, steel, and machines often stand between man and God, and it certainly denies the modern city dweller the thrilling pleasure that comes to the rural man when he gets the first whiff of freshly plowed good mother earth in spring or sees the glory of a beautifully colored wooded hillside in the fall.

INFORMATION ON DRAFT AND BONDS

Deferment of C. O.'s in Draft

The Mennonite Central Committee is not advocating greater efforts on the part of the conscientious objectors to obtain deferment. On the contrary, there is evidence that too much of appealing has been done. We will enhance the testimony which we seek to give if we undertake our task in this crisis with the spirit of "the second mile". Instead of seeing how far we can escape our duty as non-resistant citizens, we should cheerfully throw ourselves into the task of leaving a positive example of what a true Christian attitude will accomplish in "such a time as this."

However, for those cases where obviously a due consideration has not been given registrants by their boards, where lack of essential information is working a hardship, the following is presented as the methods to be employed for getting a reconsideration: Remember that in every case we should be humble and considerate of the feelings and viewpoints of others, and display a high example of Christian courtesy. The following steps may be undertaken in the correction of classification where too great hardship might be wrought. Again, we must be cautious of making ourselves a nuisance to the authorities, and in the end causing greater hardship to the larger cause.

The Selective Service Regulations provide that a registrant's classification may be reopened and reconsidered upon written request of the registrant, the government appeal agent, a dependent, or an interested person where occupation is involved, provided that written evidence is presented of facts which were not considered at the time of classification and which, if true, would justify a change in classification.

Provision is also made of filing an appeal to the Appeal Board within ten days of classification where the registrant feels that proper consideration has not been given him. Such appeal is filed, in written form with the Local Board. Copies of such papers should always be retained. There usually is a government appeal agent associated with the Local Board who will assist in the preparation and filing of such appeals.

Civilian Bonds Not Yet Available

There are constant inquiries about Civilian Government Bonds. As yet there is no definite information about them. When such information is at hand, it will be passed on without delay. Meanwhile, there are the temporary expedients of "Statement of Readiness to Purchase Civilian Government Bonds" and the Contributor's Certificate. Probably these possibilities have not yet been exhausted in most cases. —J. W. H.

THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR IN HISTORY AND NOW

By Emil J. Waltner

The story of the conscientious objector goes far back into the history of the ages. His problem, far from being a new one, has occupied the minds of many of the rulers of antiquity. Even before the Prince of Peace taught men to love their enemies and to do good to those who persecute them, a little group called the "Essenes," who lived in ancient Judea were conscientious objectors to war. In every age and in every civilization since then a handful of men and women have carried on the tradition.

Mommsen, in his Provinces of the Roman Empire, speaks of the Jews as having been exempted from war on account of their religious principles, and the Jewish Encyclopedia tells us that "Marc Antony, at the request of Hyrcanus, exempted the Jews from service in the armies because they were not allowed to carry arms or travel on the Sabbath. It was reserved for the Christian emperor Honorius to issue a decree—renewed by Theodosius, by Clotaire II and by Byzantine emperors—forbidding Jews and Samaritans to enlist in the Roman army, probably in view of their Sabbath observances." Gibbon, in the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, thus records the fate of two objectors in the third century: "A sentence of death was executed upon Maximilianus, an African youth, who had been produced by his own father before the magistrate as a sufficient and legal recruit, but who obstinately persisted in declaring that his conscience would not permit him to embrace the profession of a soldier. It could scarcely be expected that any government should suffer the action of Marcellus the centurian to pass with impunity. On the day of a public festival, that officer threw away his belt, his arms and the ensigns of his office and exclaimed with a loud voice that he would obey none but Jesus Christ the Eternal King, and that he renounced forever the use of carnal weapons and the service of an idolatrous master. The soldiers, as soon as they recovered from their astonishment, secured the person of Marcellus. He was examined in the city of Tingi by the president of that part of Mauritania; and, as he was convicted by his own confession, he was condemned and beheaded for the crime of desertion."

In Holland it was Menno Simons, who in 1536 laid down his priestly office, renounced the Catholic church, shut the door on a brilliant career, a life of ease and pleasure, and deliberately chose instead a life of uncertainty, misery and poverty, threatened with imprisonment, persecution and death. Said he, "The regenerated do not go to war nor fight. They are the children of peace who have beaten their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and know of no war. They give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's. Their sword is the word of the Spirit which they wield with a good conscience through the Holy Ghost."

In England a hundred years later the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, carried on the tradition. The Quaker "testimony against war" began with George Fox, who, in jail in 1651, was offered his freedom if he would fight for Cromwell. Fox refused and answered quietly, "I live by virtue of that light and power that takes away the occasion of all wars." In 1655 he was sent a prisoner to Cromwell, who, having ascertained the pacific tendency of his doctrines, had him set at liberty.

In 1708 another small group in Schwartzenau, Germany, the Tunkers, or Brethren, founded another church, much along the lines of that founded by Menno Simons. Like the Mennonites they rejected infant baptism, refused to take oath and refused to participate in war. From the foundation of these three historic Peace churches to this day, the tradition of non-resistance was carried on largely by members of these churches. The followers of Jacob Hutter are generally included in Mennonite history.

In the early history of these churches, wars in Europe were carried on largely by professional soldiers, men who hired out for the money there was in it—the Hessian soldiers for example hired by England in the War of the Revolution. Armies were small in size, and volunteers usually supplied all the needs. When it became necessary to raise armies by conscription, matters became more difficult for the conscientious objector. Although exempted from military service in Holland in 1575, in Zeeland in 1577, and in France in 1793 and accorded similar exemptions to the Mennonites of the Vosges, which exemption was confirmed by the great Napoleon, who employed them in hospital work in his campaigns, such exemptions usually required noncombatant service. The true conscientious objector to war, rather than compromise chose to migrate from place to place. From Switzerland to Holland, from Holland to Germany, from Germany to Russia, and from Russia to America.

In the early history of America the conscientious objector did not encounter very great difficulty. In the Story of the Mennonites by Dr. Smith we read, "Exemption from military service was generally recognized, and conscientious scruples were always given careful consideration by those in authority. The only Colonies in which Mennonites were located at the time of the Revolutionary war were Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. In each of these Mennonites were exempted from military musters, upon the payment of a sum of money usually called a fine. In Virginia, however, in 1777, where provisions were made for conscription, Mennonites in case they should be drafted for service were to be discharged upon furnishing a substitute, who was to be paid by a levy upon the membership of the entire church. A law in Maryland, in 1793 provided that Quakers, Mennonites and Tunkers and all others who are conscientiously scrupulous of bearing arms and who refuse to do military duty, shall pay a sum of three dollars annually.

"In the Civil War, both the North and South were finally forced to conscription. The Federal Act of February 24, 1864, exempted those having conscientious scruples, permitting them to accept hospital service when drafted, or to pay three hundred dollars exemption money. Under this law Mennonites were able with but few exceptions to live their life of nonresistance undisturbed in their various communities."

World War I is of so recent history that many of us vividly remember the experiences of the conscientious objector. Many of our men prominent in the Civilian Public Service program today were conscientious objectors in the last war.

At the time of registration, June 5, 1917, about six thousand registered with the draft boards as conscientious objectors. Their ranks included college students and graduates, a few professors, social workers, socialists, I. W. W. workers, Quakers, Russelites, Mennonites, Seventh Day Adventists and almost every other religious denomination. The Selective Service Act, however, made provision only for objectors who were members of religious sects opposed to war, and released these from combatant service only. This left wholly out of consideration many sincere and convinced objectors. The law assumed dogmatically that only organized sectarian religion could develop true conscience.

After the arrival in camps conscientious objectors were offered work (in the Medical, Engineering and Quartermaster's Corps here and abroad), and some four thousand, in all, accepted. The remaining eighteen hundred to two thousand the Secretary of War, on September 15, 1917, ordered camp commanders to hold segregated, forbidding any "punitive hardship" pending further disposition. Once in the hands of camp commanders, conscientious objectors were at the mercy of these men and subject to all sorts of brutalities and tortures. The cardinal mistake was, in fact, that these men were ever given into military control. A special Board of Inquiry was appointed by the Secretary of War for the purpose of individually interviewing all conscientious objectors in order to determine their sincerity. The interview with the Board of Inquiry seldom lasted longer than five minutes. For those found sincere a "farm furlough" was provided. Those pronounced "insincere" by the board were ordered to combatant service, and upon refusal were courtmartialed and sent to military prisons. Due to what the War Department termed "pressure of other work and resulting delays of making the farm furlough thoroughly effective" a large number of "sincere" objectors never received the furlough. The majority of these not only suffered injustice, but underwent cruel mistreatment as well.

The brutalities and tortures inflicted upon the conscientious objectors in World War I read like the stories of the Spanish Inquisition. Crucifixions in the twentieth century they have been called. They can be read in Mennonite history books, in the Congressional Record and elsewhere. We recite just one case here: Jacob Wipf and three Hofer brothers, religious objectors with families, served one year in Arizona prison; transferred to Spanish dungeon of Alcatraz, San Francisco Bay; stripped to underwear; "strung up" for thirty-six hours; five days without food; one glass of water every twenty-four hours; slept on cold damp floors, in the stench of their own excrements; beaten and otherwise manhandled; contracted scurvy; sent to Ft. Leavenworth; put in solitary on bread and water; "strung up" nine hours per day, seven days per week; slept on the bare floor with cold drafts passing over their emaciated bodies; two contracted pneumonia and died; one was sent home with the bodies. Jacob Wipf was on a hospital cot when he told this story. These men were all married and had one or more children, therefore should not have been drafted at all. (Report carried to Theo. H. Lunde, president American Industrial Company of Chicago by an army officer).

After the close of World War I Major Kellog, one of the members of the Board of Inquiry wrote his story of the conscientious objector. Said he, "The question: What shall be done with the conscientious objector? has never yet received a satisfactory answer. Some day, undoubtedly, a solution will be attained, but that day will not come until the subject is given the thoughtful and sober consideration which it deserves." This problem has been given the thoughtful and sober consideration. On May 15, 1941 the first humane, nonmilitary camp in history for conscientious objectors was opened near Elkridge, Maryland. "It is an experiment," said General Lewis B. Hershey, acting Director of Selective Service, "an experiment such as no nation has ever made before. Through these camps for conscientious objectors we are going to find out whether our democracy is big enough to preserve minority rights in a time of national emergency. I don't know whether the experiment will work or not. But I hope and pray that it will."

The story of the conscientious objector in World War II is only being written now. It is more than an experiment; it is another chapter in the history of the Mennonite church. We don't know the full story yet. To paraphrase Abraham Lincoln—We (the historic peace churches) are now engaged in a great "spiritual" war, testing whether the Mennonite church, or any church conceived in "brotherly love" and dedicated to the Prince of Peace can long endure.

This is the day and opportunity of the Mennonite church to lead the way. Dr. Arthur E. Holt, honorary chairman of the Congregational Christian Council for Social Action, predicted in Chicago recently, that after the war Protestant leadership would shift from the evangelical or preaching bodies to the traditional "peace" churches—the Quakers, Mennonites, etc. Dr. Daniel Poling said, "For the first time in American history, recognition for the conscientious objector has been written into a universal service law, although I am and cannot be a conscientious objector I believe that the conscientious objector has a vital contribution to make to American unity, to the nation's defense, and to peace in the world. Always I shall support him in his rights. I am glad that the selective service law—and never before did this happen in our history—has recognized the status of the conscientious objector on religious grounds."

Such other prominent men as Dr. Dykestra, Senator Robert Taft, Mayor LaGuardia, and Attorney General Francis Biddle have made similar tolerant statements. The statement of General Hershey on a recent visit to Camp Denison is reassuring. Said he, "I know something of your views—your neatness and humbleness. You have not found it necessary to publish them in public places, while others unfortunately have. I come not to chide you. All I have heard is entirely favorable. You are impressing people with your sincerity, honesty and meekness—I think you need have no fear."

Will the Mennonite Church with the Quakers and Brethren be equal to the task of supporting and maintaining the Civilian Public Service Camps? I think they can and will.

Will the boys in the camps live up to the tradition of the Historic Peace Churches? I think they can and will.

RELIEF

Message from Brother M. C. Lehman

Sumner Welles, Under-secretary of State, has informed Brother Orie O. Miller that a telegram dated March 6 and sent via Bern, Switzerland, contains a message from Brother M. C. Lehman, Mennonite relief worker now in Germany. Brother Lehman is, according to his own report, in good health and expects to accompany the embassy staff to America. This is the first direct message from Brother Lehman since the entrance of the United States into the war. Compiled by Grant M. Stoltzfus; released Mar. 17, '42

Impressions of French Need; Expressions of French Gratitude

Bro. Joseph N. Byler's recent letters present a twofold picture of France. The first letter (January 25) tells of definite needs:

"Yesterday morning I could see people standing in lines out in the cold and snow waiting for their rations of food at the markets. There are a few open markets out along the river that I can see from my hotel window. Since I know that many of these people do not have sufficient clothing and especially poor shoes, I could not help but feel sorry for them. Even in the snow yesterday I saw numerous people with wooden shoes. It is sometimes hard to say which is needed more: food or clothing."

The second letter tells of supplying needs and contains excerpts from seventeen letters sent to him by school children, school directors, numerous individuals, and the mayor of Roanne. These excerpts express sincere gratitude for the distribution of dried vegetables and milk to the school children in Lyon. The pupils of a girls' school have expressed their gratitude in the following words:

"It is a very big pleasure for us to utter our gratitude for the condensed milk you have sent to our canteen. Due to your gift the little children in France will be less hungry. Owing to you we feel that in spite of war and the massacre of men, there are still brotherly and compassionate hearts in the world. With our whole heart we say to you: 'Thank you!'

Clothing Reaches England

Bro. John E. Coffman's letter from London, England, dated February 5, contains this sentence: "I am again happy to report that we have received the cases of the shipment from Akron, Pa. of October 31." Bro. Coffman reports a special need which he is trying to meet among the disabled refugees in and around London by supplying them with needed footwear.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska

APRIL 5—Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again into a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. I Pet. 1:3. The hope of the Christian is a lively hope. Its author is God. Its source is mercy. Its medium or channel is through the resurrection of Christ. When the Pharaohs of Egypt died their bodies were placed in the chambers of the pyramids. Today their mummified bodies are still to be found there. On Easter morning the angel said: "He is not here, he is risen". This is not only a text for an Easter sermon, but should be our slogan throughout our life. "Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones, And be ye glad of heart; For Calvary day and Easter day, Earth's saddest day and gladdest day, Were just one day apart."

APRIL 6—Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Prov. 4:23. There is a watch shaped instrument on the market, which a person may carry in his pocket. It registers how far he walks during the day. All have a still more delicate instrument with us, which we call the heart. It does not tell us how far we went, but where we went. It will tell us if we have been to a good or a bad place. Our heart is a register of our character. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he" Prov. 23:7. Is this not a good reason to keep our hearts with all diligence? Suppose that a man would advertise to take photographs of the heart; would he get many customers?

APRIL 7—Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and give his life a ransom for many. Matt. 20:28. The noblest aim in life is service. "Ich dien" is on the crest of some kings. Do we like to seek the soft places, or are we willing to go where no one else will go? There is room at the top. And there is room for service. Do not be a parasite; help instead of hinder. Luther once said, "Three things make a servant, prayer, meditation and trials. A servant should either be at the anvil or in the forge; shaping others or being shaped. God had a Son on earth without sin, but not without suffering."

APRIL 8—There came a voice out of the cloud, This is my beloved Son; hear ye him. Mark 9:7. Only by descending from the mountain to the common daily life could the vision remain in the lives of the three disciples. In "The Legend Beautiful" in Longfellow's Tale of a Wayside Inn, a monk had been longing and praying that he might see Jesus himself. At length one day, the vision came, flooded the room with its radiant shining. While he was gazing entranced upon his Lord the convent bell tolled the hour when it was his duty to go out and feed the poor. He hesitated, for he hated to leave the vision and feared it would not remain for his returning. But he heard the voice, "Do thy duty; that is best; Leave unto thy Lord the rest". He fed the beggars, and returning, found the vision still there. The blessed vision said: "Hadst thou stayed, I must have fled".

APRIL 9—Hath not the potter power over the clay? Rom. 9:21. We are as clay in the hands of the potter. What a possibility lies in a lump of clay. With skill and labor a thing of joy and beauty is formed. Some one asked a hermit in Italy, how he could venture through life alone in a single cottage, on the top of a mountain, miles from habitation? He replied that Providence was his next-door neighbor. We are apt to believe in Providence so long as we have our own way; but if things go wrong, then we think, if there is a God, He is in heaven and not on earth near us. God make us eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and hope of all who are ready to perish.

APRIL 10—I said I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. Ps. 39:1.

If slander comes to you, do not mind it too much. If you are free from blame, you live in a castle that cannot be broken into, and you at least can use these words: "They say: what do they say? let them say." Trust in God and do the right. Trust your reputation to Him. You have committed your soul to Him; commit to Him also your reputation. But, personally, watch, fight, pray, and use every possible means to remedy any tendency to the many faults of the tongue. What a happy place this world would be if all would take heed to their ways that they should not sin with their tongues.

APRIL 11—A word spoken in due season, how good it is. Prov. 15:23. We can have no idea, unless we stop and think, how many people there are in this world in need of encouragement. People bear their burdens, do their work, and work out their life-problems almost alone. Children try to be good, but no one seems to know it or notice it, or speak a word of appreciation or encouragement to them. A boy once said: "Father, you often scold me and tell me when I do wrong, and I am sure I deserve it; but why do you not sometimes tell me when I do please you?" A word of warning may be as faithful and full of love and comfort as a word of encouragement. The warnings of the Bible are all as truly love-prompted as the wooings are.

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Message from Dr. Fast

Brother Henry A. Fast, Director of the Mennonite Civilian Public Service Camps, presents the following message which deals with certain problems that have recently arisen in connection with the Civilian Public Service program:

"The Civilian Public Service program from its very beginning has been treated with a remarkable spirit of public good will and tolerance. This tolerance and good will have continued even after the incident of Pearl Harbor and of our entrance into war. The whole future of this C.P.S. program is dependent on whether this public good will continues. We must do our share in helping maintain a friendly public attitude. People obviously feel more tensely since we are at war, and they observe us and our boys and our camps more critically than before. Criticisms have come to the attention of both the Selective Service and the Akron office which if not properly taken care of could seriously spoil public good will.

"One of the things that has caused unfriendly criticism is the presence of cars in camp. We have urged boys in all our camps to take them home and leave them there lest people get the false impression that our boys run around at will. In all our camps the use of cars is restricted to trips home when they have a weekend leave or furlough, but the mere presence of cars in camp leads the public to believe the boys can use them when they please. We would like to urge parents, and home communities to encourage boys not to take cars to camp and to take those home which are now in camp.

"Another reason for unfriendly criticism is based on the impression that C.P.S. camps are too lax in granting weekend leaves or furlough time. They have the impression that some boys from a particular C.P.S. camp are always at home over weekends. In order to remedy this situation and to avoid this criticism, whether justified or not, the boys in all our Mennonite camps have agreed among themselves to restrict their weekend leaves to ten a year. Parents and friends in local communities sometimes make it difficult for boys to restrict themselves to these regulations by urgings or by sending them tempting invitations to come home for some wedding or for some other attractive social function. Parents and friends in local communities should rather encourage boys in every way they can to conform to camp regulations regarding weekend leaves and furlough. They should encourage them in every other way to help us set up and maintain high camp standards and a truly Christian atmosphere and spirit. Only such regulations are set up as help to maintain camp standards for which we need to make no apology.

"Spring work is now getting fully under way, and farmers are beginning to feel the serious loss of farm help caused by large-scale drafting of boys into camp. As a result numerous letters are sent to the Akron office, and often also to camps, inquiring whether it would not be possible to furlough or even discharge their boy so that he may help in the urgent work on the farm. Sometimes people have gotten encouragement from members of Local Boards to try to get their boy discharged or released for farm work. At times people have gotten the impression that it is comparatively easy to get such a furlough or release. That is an entirely false impression. In critical cases where serious accident or sickness disables the present farm owner or manager and where clear evidence is presented that no help can be gotten, it is still possible to get a boy released. Such a request should be drawn up by the boy in camp, addressed to General Hershey, and sent in triplicate form to the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 1751 "N" Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. The parents can draw up an affidavit, clearly and in detail describing their situation and petitioning the Local Board to reclassify the boy in view of this acute need. Unless people find themselves in a situation of acute need they should not be encouraged to hope that their efforts to get the boy released from service will meet with success. At an rate, they should not worry the boy in camp by complaints and by raising false hopes in his mind. It makes it difficult for him to perform good service in camp and to adapt himself happily to its program. These are difficult times, and we need to be prepared for even more difficult times. We need to be prepared to bear them with fortitude and poise, and with a willingness to bear in a truly Christian way the sacrifices and sufferings which these troublous times bring upon us."

Recent C.P.S. Statistics

According to figures recently released by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors there are men from 125 denominations on record as being in Class IV-E. These figures, as of March 1, 1942, list 2057 boys in 26 camps or functioning units with a total of 509 to be assigned during March.

Of the number of boys in camp the Mennonite groups have a total of 764, Church of the Brethren 319, and the Society of Friends 165.

Among the non-historic groups the following have the largest numbers: Methodist 174, Presbyterian 55, Baptist 48, Congregational-Christian 44, Jehovah's Witnesses 43, Catholic 35, Church of Christ 32, Church of God 30, Lutheran 27, Evangelical Reformed 22, Disciples of Christ 21, and Episcopal 21.

They've Crucified Our Lord

By Alice Hansche Mortenson

They've crucified our Lord! Our hearts
In indignation cry
Against that ancient mob who caused
The Son of God to die!

They've crucified our Lord! Alas,
Are we less guilty now,
Than they who drove the cruel nails,
And mocked His thorny brow?

They've crucified our Lord! And we Are wounding Him the same,
Forgetting Him, neglecting Him,
Ashamed to own His name.

They've crucified our Lord! But we Have done the same today.
We've crucified our Lord! O Christ,
Forgive, forgive, we pray!

FATHER FORGIVE THEM

"Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." Father, they are doing it in Thy name. They are killing men who wronged them, they are killing them in Thy name. They believe they are doing justly when they kill in Thy name.

When Thy Son, the Prince of Peace, came, the very heavens burst forth in angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

He did not come to slay those who wronged Him. He did not demand justice when evil men spat in His face and mocked Him. He bought our salvation by letting them crown His head with thorns, pierce His side with a sword, and hang Him like a thief on a wooden cross. He gave His life, asking no vengeance, demanding no justice. We would live and die like that, Lord.

We cannot believe that Thou wouldst have gone to war. We cannot believe that Thou wouldst have taken up the quarrel, no matter how much Thou hadst been wronged. Thou wouldst not shoot at those whom they sent against Thee. Thou wouldst not plunge a bayonet through their bodies. Thou wouldst not drop bombs on them, Lord; to tear their bodies asunder and blow them into endless eternity. Neither can we, Lord.

Men accept Thy salvation, Lord, but laugh at Thy way of life, the way which made salvation possible.

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."—Carl M. Lehman, in The Bluffton Peace Sentinel

WESTERN DISTRICT ORATORY CONTEST

Have you sent in your blank for the contest? If you haven't, act quickly. An important change has been made concerning the oration titles. The general titles of "Peace" and "Missions" have been narrowed down to more definite ones. Within the phase of peace, the oration theme will be "The Christian Way in War Time." For missions the theme will concern "Missions in a Post-War World." This gives the contestant a more definite subject on which to speak. The contest will be held on May 30th, the day before the Mennonite Song Festival. The contest will take place at two o'clock in the Bethel College administration building.

Send in your entry blank immediately. The sooner you begin the more chance you have to win. Winners will be rewarded with an expense paid retreat. For further information write to Rufus Baehr, North Newton, Kansas.

Thirty Pieces of Silver

Thirty pieces of silver
For the Lord of Life they gave;
Thirty pieces of silver—
Only the price of a slave!
But it was the priestly value
Of the Holy One of God!
They weighed it out in the Temple,
The price of the Saviour's blood.

Thirty pieces of silver
Laid in Iscariot's hand;
Thirty pieces of silver
And the aid of an armed band,
Like a lamb that is led to the slaughter,
Brought the humbled Son of God
At midnight from the garden,
Where His sweat had been like blood.

Thirty pieces of silver
Burns on the traitor's brain;
Thirty pieces of silver!
Oh, it is hellish gain!
"I have sinned and betrayed the guiltless!"
He cried, with a fevered breath;
And he cast them down in the Temple,
And rushed to a madman's death.

Thirty pieces of silver
Lay in the House of God;
Thirty pieces of silver,
But oh, 'twas the price of blood!
And so for a place to bury
The strangers in, they gave
The price of their own Messiah,
Who lay in a borrowed grave.

It may not be for silver
It may not be for gold,
But still by tens of thousands
Is this precious Saviour sold,
Sold for a godless friendship,
Sold for a selfish aim,
Sold for a fleeting trifle,
Sold for an empty name.

Sold in the mart of Science,
Sold in the seat of Power,
Sold at the shrine of Fortune,
Sold in Pleasure's bower,
Sold where the awful bargain
None but God's eye can see!
Ponder, my soul the question:
Shall He be sold by thee?

Sold! O God what a moment!
Stifled is conscience' voice!
Sold! And a weeping angel
Records the fatal choice.
Sold! But the price of the Saviour
To a living coal shall turn,
With the pangs of remorse for ever
Deep in the soul to burn.

Speaking in Psalms and Hymns

"Proclaim Him King
Pronounce Him Blest;
He's your Defense,
Your Joy, your Rest;
When terrors rise,
And nations faint,
God is the Strength
Of every saint."

"Yea, amen! Let all adore Thee,
High on Thine eternal throne!
Saviour, take the power and glory,—
Claim the Kingdom for Thine own!
O come quickly!
Hallelujah! Come Lord, come!"

AFTER EASTER—WHAT?

April 12, 1942

They Saw Him

At the close of that bleak and bitter day when the earthly and physical life of Jesus seemed to have closed completely on Calvary, the faith of the first followers of Jesus was shattered. Splendid expectation had closed in utter darkness and dismay. Then something took place which needs adequate explanation.

Their drooping faith was restored. They came back to a new life. They were so sure and so confident that many of them later sealed their certainty with their lives. They affirmed that they knew that Jesus was alive again. They claimed to have seen Him, to have touched Him, to have talked with Him.

On the first Easter morn incredulity was conquered; doubt gave way to delight. The voice of Christ, clearly recognized, soothed the anguish of Mary. The fellowship of Christ on the way to Emmaus convinced the two disciples that the tomb no longer held their beloved Jesus. As they walked they were engaged in arguing about the crucifixion, the tomb and Him. A stranger joined them and asked why they were sad and of what they were speaking. And as he talked to them of the fulfillment of prophecy they understood the scriptures.

When they came to Emmaus they went into an house and the stranger made as if he would go farther but they pressed him to come in. And as he sat with them and took bread and blessed it their eyes were opened, They saw Him!

In the evening the ten apostles were together in the upper room, with the doors shut for fear of the Jews. Thomas was not there, and Judas was also no longer among them. Eagerly the two had seen Jesus, told their friends of the meeting, and while they were speaking, Jesus Himself stood in their midst and they heard His voice say "Peace be unto you." They saw Him! The next Sunday evening, Thomas and the other ten were in the upper room, when Jesus again came and stood in their midst. Thomas heard a voice say, "Thomas, reach hither thy hand and put it into my side." The doubter's lips framed the words "My Lord and my God." He saw Him!

Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord. John 20:20.

Mary also had caught the accents of the Master's voice and responded in exclamation of delight. Her weeping was changed to exultation. It was no emotional ecstasy that characterized Mary when she returned to the disciples and cried out, "I have seen the Lord." She saw Him.

At the Sea of Galilee Jesus ate with His disciples. In the cool of the dawn a voice came across the waters, "Children, have ye aught to eat? Have you caught anything?" They had not until they cast their net on the other side at His command. And John cried out, "It is the Lord." And Peter leaped into the lake and swam ashore and heard Him say "Feed My Sheep." They saw Him.

Once five hundred people saw Him. Yes, they saw Him!

Finally on Olive's brow the disciples heard His final words of instruction and consolation. Here they received their glorious commission. Matt. 28:19, 20.

Easter declares that Christ is risen. He who died lives again. "Because He lives I shall live also." "Let not your heart be troubled." "Ye believe in God, believe also in me."

Through experience let us answer with Mary, "I have seen the Lord." And exclaim with Thomas in unshakable faith, "My Lord and my God." We worship a living Christ. He ever liveth to make intercession for us. "Death is swallowed up in victory!" Hallelujah!

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for April 12

PLACES OF WORSHIP Ps. 27:4,5

"A Missionary Program"

Our next three lessons are based on the Missionary Education Movement. A textbook for Juniors is We Gather Together, by Grace McGavran. Then there is also a Junior Teacher's Guide on Worship Around the World by Lola Hazelwood. Both books may be purchased from the International Society of C. E., Boston, at very reasonable prices.

It is natural for those who love the Lord God to worship Him. The Bible says, let us worship, bow down, kneel before the Lord, bring offering, and give glory due his name. We can worship God wherever we are, the Bible says, "God is a spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." The place we worship in is not as important as the condition of our worship. Our heart must be in our worship, we must not go through forms of worship while our heart is far off from God, or our worship will not be acceptable to God.

The Question Bee

1. Where did Christ love to worship?
2. Why do Christians have places where they worship?
3. What kinds of worship places do Christians use around the world?
4. What follower of the Lord taught by the riverside "where prayer was wont to be made?"

The Prayer List

(a) That we may not only be hear-ers but do-ers of the word. (b) Grateful for churches which are standing for the faith. (c) Grateful for ministers who preach God's word. (d) Thank God for the fellowship of Christian friends. (e) Thank Him for the privilege of coming together for worship in our churches.

THE MISSION OF THE SEVENTY

Luke 10:1-7, 17, 21-24

Topic - PERSONAL EVANGELISM

Laborers Sent Out vss. 1-7

It is known that others beside the Twelve, were loyal followers of Jesus and were with Him much of the time during His public ministry (Acts 1:21, 22). From these He selected "other seventy" to go "whither He himself would come" (vs. 1). This was done shortly before His personal ministry. The fact that He had so many followers whom He considered fit to be sent out, shows that His labors were not in vain. These were sent on a mission similar to that of the Twelve (9:1, 2). They were to heal the sick in the name of Jesus, and also publish the approach of the kingdom of God (vs. 9). They were to prepare the people for Jesus' evangelistic tour in Perea. It would be much more successful if the way were properly prepared. Churches need to make good preparation for evangelistic meetings if they wish to receive any real benefit from them. Jesus sent out a large number because the work was urgent and the time was short. Two going together could encourage one another.

Jesus saw the largeness of the task and the need for many laborers. He likens the many unsaved ones to ripened grain waiting for the harvesting (vs. 2). He wants the Seventy to see these people who are waiting for the gospel message. The solution to this pressing need was prayer. They were to pray for additional workers whom God could send forth. Jesus clearly indicated the place of prayer in God's work of evangelism. He will send forth His Spirit calling workers into His service, in response to sincere prayer.

Jesus did not minimize the difficulties which they would face (vs. 3), but His words challenged them to be bold and fearless. They were to go without any needless baggage or encumbrance of a load of provisions, "scrip." They were to depend upon God and the people to provide what was needed on their tour. They were not to spend time in long salutes. They were to go as men in haste and on urgent business (vs. 4). They would not be admitted into the synagogues, so would be obliged to preach in private houses. A courteous and kindly salutation (vs. 5), the usual Hebrew greeting, would help to prepare people's hearts for receiving the gospel. They were to consider the food and shelter given to them, not as a charity, not as alms, but as well-deserved support, "hire," for the work of ministering to the people with the gospel (vs. 7). Some people still look upon giving to the minister's support as an act of charity.

A Successful Ministry vss. 9, 17

The Seventy had received instructions very similar to those given to the Twelve (9:1-5). No reference to demons is recorded in the charge to the Seventy. Their success would depend much upon following their instructions. They returned greatly rejoicing in their success, even beyond their expectations (vs. 17). No doubt their work was chiefly personal evangelism. This will always be needed.

Christ's Thanksgiving vss. 21-24

Jesus rejoiced greatly on hearing the report of the Seventy (vs. 21). These men were laymen from the lowly walks of life: men selected for their faithfulness to Him. He thanked God that spiritual insight had been given to these. God used them. Spiritual giants usually are humble persons who surrender wholly to God. Jesus declares His universal sovereignty over all things needed to the realization of the kingdom (vs. 22, cf. Matt. 28:18). These disciples of Christ enjoyed inexpressibly great privileges. They could see now as a reality that which the most favored of the Old Testament desired to see (vs. 24).

Personal Evangelism

The leaders of the Church in the early days were won for Christ individually. Jesus called the Twelve by personal invitation. Paul met Christ, a solitary soul. Justin Martyr and Augustine came to Christ alone. Revival meetings and larger evangelistic movements have their value in rebuking and persuading the sinner. There is, however, no short cut to true revival—the personal method, and with much prayer. Fundamental laws must be obeyed. The Church of the Living God grows best when each Christian accepts his missionary responsibility toward the unsaved. A true revival results from the "won-by-one" method of faithful Church members.

Why did God not reveal spiritual truths to the wise?

Why is personal evangelism especially needed today?

What do Jesus' words, "the laborer is worthy of his hire," mean in the practical life of our Church today?

CORRESPONDENCE

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH
Pandora, Ohio

Our one week pre-Easter services are history. Rev. Jacob Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, ministered unto us. It was as though we sat together in heavenly places. Brother Janzen spoke from rich and deep experiences. In 1924 he and his family of ten children migrated from Russia to Canada in order that the children might be taught God's Holy Word, which was forbidden in Russia. Brother Janzen's subjects were: "God", "Sin", "Redemption", "Jesus of Nazareth", "The Son of God", "The Holy Ghost", "The New Birth", "Sanctification", and "The Coming of the Lord".

As Brother Janzen broke to us the Bread of Life evening after evening the people were richly blessed. Loren McNeal led the singing each evening. One evening the high school chorus sang. This week of blessings is looked upon as a reward for the small effort put forth in helping the Russian brethren to a land of free worship. May the Lord richly bless them and use them to His glory. Rev. Janzen stayed at the home of our pastor, Rev. Forest Musser.

Jacob H. Janzen Writes

After having been put aside to work quietly in my own little congregation at Warterloo, Ontario, I have been sent out again by the Lord as a traveling minister to do itinerary work, as I used to do in former years.

I spent a week of intimate and blessed communion with the good people of Pandora, Ohio,—the town which has been named after that fickle Greek goddess that was entrusted to keep humanity free from suffering by keeping the lid firmly down on a little vial, which she did until her curiosity got the better of her, and she opened the vessel, and out came all sorts of disease, misfortune, and other unpleasant things, and spread through the world.

Now the Pandorians try to crowd the imps back into their viole, doing their best to fill the world with good things and powers, and thereby to make things hard for the powers of evil and darkness, and, I believe, that is the right course to take. No use hitting back if you are struck by some evil force. Evil can only be overcome by good, as Paul puts it. The world must be so filled with good that there will be no room left for evil. Let us all join together to drive evil back into its confinement. I am sure, once the imps of evil are back in their viole, the present day Pandorians will keep that vessel tightly shut, thereby counterbalancing the fault of their namesake-goddess.

In Pandora we have tried to find out together whether the Christian faith is really as foolish a thing as it is often spoken of, and, I believe, we found that the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and that we may trust securely God who created and redeemed us that we may be blessed and happy, and thereby praise His holy Name.

Now I am with the Bethany people of Quakertown, Pa. Bethany, as you know, is the place where Jesus liked to visit, and I have already found out that here are many Marthas who are glad to do things for Jesus, even in doing so for the least of Christ's servants. At eventide these Marthas seem to have turned into Maries who sit quietly at the feet of Jesus, choosing the good part that cannot be taken away from them, and which is imparted to them by Christ through His humble servant. Where there is God there is a good time and an abundance of blessings.

At home my wife is recovering slowly from her recent conglomeration of illnesses. Reports from the congregation are not very encouraging as many in the same have taken sick these days, and I am not quite sure whether I will be able to stay as long as I proposed to. I will follow as He leads me. In spite of the discouraging reports that reach me from home I am looking forward to a blessed time here in Quakertown, as with the Lord nothing is impossible. Remember me and my home church in your prayers.

ALBERTA COMMUNITY (MENN.) CHURCH

5138 N. E. 23rd Avenue
Portland, Oregon

Our little church is planning to have a series of evangelistic meetings from March 22nd to the 27th. Rev. Walter Duff, Jr. from the Kenilworth Presbyterian church of this city and formerly an evangelist has consented to conduct them for us. He has traveled quite extensively in our country and is known by some of our Mennonite people. At the present we are making a religious survey of our district, each family in the church being responsible for one block per week. We are recording these findings on cards for filing. We hope to contact all of the churchless homes the second time prior to the meetings. This requires lots of work, but it is a wonderful experience to make these contacts.

There are many Mennonite families moving to our city. We wish that all pastors would cooperate in sending their names and addresses to us so that we can call on them. Those families need to be befriended and invited right from the first. I called on a couple not so very long ago from one of our Mennonite communities. They told me that their pastor had counseled them that if they could not find a Mennonite church to go to the Apostolic Faith Hall. I have called at that home three times with no response. Is it a wonder? —Arnold J. Regier

SMITH CORNER MENNONITE CHURCH

The past we cannot change, but we have a great work before us in the future. We should be on fire to see souls saved and the Kingdom strengthened. Therefore, we should all "Press towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus". Phil. 3:14.

Our church officers are: Melvin Smith and Samuel Nofsker, deacons; James Stiffler, Henry Dodson, and Wm. Long, trustees; Mrs. J. S. Raugh, secretary, and Mrs. John Stiffler, treasurer.

Two of our young men have been called to the defense of our country. Mr. Raymond Stiffler is in regular army training, and Mr. Jay Farnwalt is in the C. P. S. camp at Grottoes, Virginia. Last fall some of our men donated seven bushels of potatoes to this camp. In the near future we intend to make a donation of canned fruits and vegetables to the Mennonite Home for the Aged at Frederick, Pa.

Preceding Easter we will have two weeks of special services. Two reasons for these services are: to save souls and to revive and strengthen those that have been saved. Please, pray for these services and for the church as a whole.

At the beginning of this year another class was added to our Sunday School, and a children's department was started in the new basement. The Home Mission Board of the General Conference loaned us money to build this room in the basement. A part of that loan has been paid, and now the rest of it has to be made up by the Sunday School, the Y. P. Christian Endeavor, the Ladies Aid, and the Brotherhood, and be sent in the near future. We are glad that this loan can be repaid now. We are trying to meet our quota for the C. P. S. camps this year. We are taking one offering each month for them. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

GOD'S WORK AT ORAIBI

"He is able also to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him." (Heb. 7:25).

When one thinks of the many strongholds of Satan in this land of ours, it is comforting to know that God is able to save to the uttermost them that come unto Him by Jesus. We cannot help but praise Him for what He has done among us here in Hopiland. We have experineced His guiding hand in the work that we have attempted to do. Many prayers have gone up to His throne, and we have received His answers. We have seen Hopis under conviction. Our prayer is that they might be delivered from the bonds of fear, superstition, and sin. One old Hopi woman, Puhumana (New Girl) was baptized here at Oraibi.

We were happy, indeed, to enlarge the lower church building during the last year, for we needed more room to seat the ever-increasing audience. On March 16 we had the ground-breaking service which marked the beginning of the great task before us. Two days later the men who had been notified, appeared with shovels, teams, and scrapers to begin the excavating for the basement. The work proceeded rapidly so that after three weeks we could have the cornerstone laying service.

The New Church

The Lord sent us a carpneter who supervised the work as well as built up the frame building until it was under roof and enclosed with sheathing. After he left us on May 19 we took up the remaining work which included the floor, walls, and finishing. In addition to the Sunday services I had to be my own carpenter. However, after prayer, the Hopi Christians came and at their own suggestion volunteered to donate one day a week to help build the church. Willard Sakiestewa donated more than any other, for he said, "We have not done anything for the Lord for many years and now we have the chance to do so." Others came also and helped. The Baptist men missionaries and even some unbelieving, but friendly, Hopis donated work. By October 5 the building was sufficiently advanced to have the dedication service. Brother Wedel and part of his family was with us on that day. About 250 people (Hopis, govenment employees and missionaries) were present. The Christians were moved to great joy on that day. The Hopis are happy for the enlarged church. When the women come for sewing, they nearly fill the church. Nearly all the seats are filled. We must construct more benches so that at special meetings more people can enjoy the services without having to stand. At Christmas we used planks in the rear of the church. Still, a few young men had to stand. The details are not quite finished.

The Mesa Chapel

When the enlarging of the lower chapel was undertaken in spring, we transferred the pulpit, lamps, and benches to the church on the mesa. Our hearts leaped for joy to see the Hopis walk up the winding road up the mesa on Sunday morning. Everyone seemed to be able to worship again in the old church which for many years had been standing there as a testimony unto the living God, and where the first group of Christians had been baptized. But on the morning of April 25, at 4 o'clock, the building with all its contents was destroyed by fire caused by lightening. Superstition ran high among the heathen, but when the Christians kept up their courage even in this loss, the talk soon stopped, and now we seldom hear of it. Now we have our Sunday School and mesa sewing class in the home of the only Christian in the old village. She offered the use of her home to us for that purpose. Whereas this is the best we can do now, it is far from satisfactory. The room is inadequate in seating capacity and light. The mesa people are not willing to come to the same church to which the lower village people go. We should have our own meeting place up there for the sewing and instruction, but I'm not willing to undertake to build one this year, because I'm physically and mentally too tired. Besides, I wish to complete the work which has been started on the lower church and also at the other mission stations. Then too, we wish to stress the house visitation and the spiritual work more in the next few months. Another important reason why the mesa church should be rebuilt is that our Mennonite people should hold to the agreement made with the old Hopi Chief Lololma that as long as that chapel stands, the Mennonites may do mission work among the Hopi people. This should not be postponed too long, because the government is getting to be more particular that that thing should be orderly. Some of the Indians say that they do not like to see the ruins of the church.

The Sewing Classes

Mrs. Suderman is having most of the women of the village in a sewing class at the new church. In the old church there never were more than forty enrolled. But in the new church in one sewing class alone there were over sixty women present. They also bring their pre-school aged children along, which brings the total number of persons present to about one hundred. The Hopi Christians tell Mrs. Suderman that the women are happy to sew this year. There is ample light coming through the windows. They also remark that the air in the new church is so much purer.

The sewing class on the mesa has not been as large this year. The many ceremonies have kept most of them from coming. Then too, not all people will come to the home of another because of former feuds among themselves.

Young People's Work

The hope of the church is in its youth. Last year we were permitted to go into the high school to sing with the young people. This fall we asked for the same privilege, but the principal, a Mormon, said that they have a new teacher, a musician, and that she will take care of all the music. This teacher is a Unitarian by faith. So that door is closed for the present. However, once a week we were given the privilege to go into the students' dormitory where we can sing with the students and teach them the Word of God.

We are also concentrating more on getting the young people of our village to come to church for choir and cantata work. This work has been looked upon with some disdain by some of the older Christians, but because of certain recent developments we are in hopes that the young people's work will prosper in this year.

The children again took part in the Christmas program at Christmas. To work up a Christmas program is becoming difficult, because the boys are not coming as they used to. For next year we will try a different method.

« « JOTTINGS » »

—Many who try to reconcile war with the Bible have a tendency to neglect the teachings of Christ in pressing their point. Such a one is William L. Pettingill, D.D., who has written an article entitled, "Should a Christian Go to War?". The pertinent part of the article makes no reference to Christ's important teachings against the use of carnal weapons. There is much man made argument but very little reference to the words of the Bible. Of course, Rom. 13:1-6 is referred to. One wonders whether the author would say that when the persecution of Christians was at its worst in Russia it would have been the will of God for a Christian to obey the Government and renounce all belief in the living God.

—Dr. Arno C. Gaebelein writing in the magazine, Our Hope, says, "So-called Christian objectors are either cowards or shallow thinkers or both." One wonders whether Dr. Gaebelein even heard of the Martyrs' Mirror or reasoned with a Mennonite C. O. Might not Dr. Gaebelein have been somewhat shallow in his study of the conscientious objector?

—The year book of the Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska, gives one a very clear and comprehensive picture of its church life. Of the twelve men drafted from this church in World War I seven accepted full army service. Of eleven men drafted by December 8th ten had gone into Civilian Public Service. That is real Mennonite improvement. This church of 754 members, living in a community that has been severely drought-stricken for over nine years, gave $611.14 for the support of C.P.S. camps in 1941.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, "Mr. (Arthur) Wenger and Mr. R. H. Ruth were at Placerville over last week end inspecting a camp (undoubtedly in relation to a possible C.P.S. camp there) at the request of Dr. Fast, Director of our Civilian Public Service Camps."

Buller, pastor; the First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas, Rev. E. J. Enns, pastor; Elbing Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, H. J. Dyck, pastor; Tabor Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas, P. H. Richert, pastor. Heartiest congratulations to these churches for the contribution they are making to their own members and to the work of our conference. Churches considering the plan are: Johannesthal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas; First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, (no permanent pastor, but has been served by Brother Lester Hostetler); Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas; First and Second Mennonite Churches, Beatrice, Nebraska, and First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California.

—"That preacher said they ought to put all Mennonites in a concentration camp!" thus spoke a young boy in a Mennonite family who had listened to a radio preacher at Oklahoma City. The boy volunteered for the army. Some who lean towards militarism protest that such radio preachers who are for war know their Bible. So did Luther. In fact, he made it readable in German. Luther was a greatly renowned man already during the Reformation. But our forefathers were convinced that they and their leaders knew the Bible better than Luther and refused to take the sword or compromise otherwise in a day when persecution was really terrible. Furthermore, it should be remembered that speaking words over the radio does not make them any truer than printing them on paper. Some are charmed by the radio today just like those once were who insisted that something was true because "it was printed in the paper."

SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF CIVILIAN PUBLIC SERVICE

By C. N. Hostetter, Jr.

In response to a request from the Mennonite Central Committee, the writer has conducted spiritual life conferences at the Civilian Public Service camps at Grottoes, Virginia; Bluffton, Indiana; Denison, Iowa; Colorado Springs, Colorado; Wells Tannery, Pennsylvania; and Marietta, Ohio. Three or four days were spent in each camp, speaking two or three times daily to the group, conducting personal interviews, visiting in the dormitories and on the work projects and having private conferences with many of the more than six hundred young men in these camps.

Civilian Public Service, administered under the direction of the historic peace churches, is assigned the task of caring for all persons who are conscientiously opposed to accepting service under military direction. The difficulties and unusual service opportunities of such a responsibility are evident. A very important phase of the program is to meet the religious needs of the men assigned to the camps. What are the results spiritually? What standard of religious life is maintained in the camp? What is the response on the part of the men? We present a brief summary of our findings and are pleased to report that our impressions are most favorable.

General

The religious life of the camps to a considerable measure reflects the religious interest of the director of the camp. The Mennonite Central Committee is to be commended for the type of leaders in charge of these camps.

The religious life of the camps also very definitely reflects the spiritual interests, ideals and standards of the groups, churches and congregations from which the men come. We send the young men to camps as we have made them by our homes, schools and churches.

Spiritual values are kept in mind in planning the camp life schedule. Morning worship, grace at meals, evening devotions, Sunday teaching and worship services, prayer meeting and Bible study are given place. A number of camps have provided private quarters to which assignees can go for meditation and prayer. In some communities many men from the camps take active part in the services of the local churches. The opportunities for such service vary greatly in the different camps and are definitely dependent upon community attitude.

Individual and Personal

In the personal attitude of the individual is determined the spiritual standard of camp life. The interest evidenced in ready attendance at the Spiritual Life Conference, the open-minded attitude toward truth and the response in action was most gratifying. In private conferences there were penitent prayers, confessions, and purposes declared. Young men wanted to follow Jesus in every way and in everyday life. Were these attitudes only the result of the conferences? I think not. These young men are in Civilian Public Service because they allowed their conscience to speak. The result—conscience continued to speak after they came to camp, and what previously had been justified or tolerated in past life was now brought to judgment. More than one boy will go back to his home and witness a deliverance in camp from bad habits he carried with him when he entered camp. Here are a few statements from men in the camps.

"We here mingle with men of high ideals. There is a frantic search for truth among the fellows. Some are satisfied with their course of life, others are not, but in every case richer, fuller lives will result from our camp contacts."

"This camp life has given me a new outlook on life, and has challenged me to live a better life."

"My stay in camp has been one of the most valuable assets in my life, spiritually."

"There is an abundant opportunity to develop here spiritually. I will value my experience here as an important period of my life."

"I have studied my Bible more in camp than ever before in my life."

Influence and Testimony

At most of the camps it was my privilege to make contact with the government technicians who direct the work program. Not one unfavorable reply was made in relation to the groups. Individual members of the camp were criticised in one or two instances, but the highest testimony was given for the groups in the respective camps.

It was my privilege to sit in the dining-room at one camp when they tendered a farewell to one of the government staff men. We quote part of his statement, "When I was assigned to a conscientious objector camp I didn't know what to think. I've lived and worked with you fellows for six months. Before I came here I never knew there were men in the world like you. I don't agree with you, but I respect you. I never met better men and you can count on me to stand up for you wherever I go. The public may turn against you, but I shall always hold a high regard for the conscientious objector."

Our young men in camp are restricted in the number of individual contacts they make. Some think this unduly restricts their Christian testimony. We must remember that the group testimony of Civilian Public Service is witnessing loudly. Hundreds of young men are giving their service without remuneration on conservation projects and in humanitarian service, even buying their own clothing. They are not only discharging a patriotic duty to the country, but by their lives and service are demonstrating the nature of "second mile religion" and showing the positive side of nonresistant Christianity. That testimony is being heard throughout our land. Its witness is attracting attention.

Difficulties

The present program is not without its difficulties and perils to vital Christian living. The unnatural and abnormal situations of larger groups of men together over prolonged periods has its "drag." The daily work program may sometimes become dull, particularly for men who have carried responsibilities in fields of life not closely related to agriculture. To work month after month without pay is hard on the independent spirit of good manhood. The influences of the minority found in every camp who are not interested in following Christ must be reckoned with. In most cases this minority is very small. These and other difficulties must be faced by every individual campee who wants to maintain a vital spiritual life. Do not expect a C. P. S. camp to be a vestibule to heaven.

Our camp administrators are awake to these perils and are faithfully endeavoring to meet them and have the campees master them. After spending nearly a month in intimate contacts with the men I am convinced that Civilian Public Service has a tremendous spiritual significance. This project merits our respect, deserves our sympathetic, moral, and prayerful support, and should have our financial backing to the point, if necessary, of self-sacrifice and self-denial.

What if They Say

What if they say, "What was the attitude of the early Christians toward participation in war?"

Celsus, (100 A. D.) an opponent of Christianity, charged the Christians with refusing to bear arms. Origen, in reply, admitted their refusal, and justified it, "because war itself is unlawful."

Justin Martyr, one of the earliest and most able writers of the second century writes (140 A. D.): "We Christians, who are still involved in war, let us, from every quarter of the world, turn our instruments of war into plough shares, and our spears into pruning hooks; and as husbandmen cultivate the ground; so let us cultivate and practice piety, justice, humanity, faith, and that hope that proceeds from the Father through Him who was crucified."

Tertulian (200 A. D.) writes: "Jesus Christ, by disarming Peter, disarmed every soldier afterwards. . . . . Our religion teaches that it is better to be killed than to kill." In describing the 170 to 200 A. D. period, he asserted that no Christian was found in the Roman army of that time, and that many had left the military service after conversion. He continues: "And since we Christians are expressly commanded by our Master to love our enemies; whom then have we left to hate? And if, when hurt, we must not return the evil, for fear of being like the rest of the world; where shall we find a man to hurt?"

Maximilianus, (295 A. D.) a twenty-one year old Christian of Carthage, North Africa, was brought before Dion, the proconsul of Africa, as one unable to accept military service. He refused to accept the soldier's badge, saying repeatedly that he could not do so, because he was a Christian and served Christ. Dion tried repeatedly to overcome his objections, but without success. "I cannot serve as a soldier, for I cannot do evil because I am a Christian." Dion asked, "What evil do soldiers do?" The answer was: "You know."

Following his execution, the story of his trial and martyrdom was quickly committed to writing, and the stand of this young man was evidently approved by the Christian Church of that period.

Archelaus, the bishop of Mesopotamia, says: "Some Roman soldiers, charmed with the piety of Maximilianus, were induced to embrace the Christian religion, and immediately forsook the profession of arms." (Excerpts from "Should God's People Partake in War?" by Theodore H. Epp). —Walter H. Dyck

WHY ARE MENNONITES RURAL PEOPLES?

We say that Mennonites are a rural folk. By this we mean that they live on farms or in small towns with total populations of something less than 2500. Have we ever asked ourselves if Mennonites have always been rural people? Was there ever a time when they were not? How did they come to be ninety per cent rural in America today?

Some Early Mennonites Not Farmers

Many of the earliest members and leaders of the Mennonite Church were city people, educated and professional men, skilled workmen, small business men as well as farmers. When this was the case they naturally lived in the cities. Even today in some of the European countries, especially in the Netherlands, Mennonites are predominately city people. They engage in occupations that are characteristic of city people such as shop-keepers, wholesale merchants, lawyers, doctors, teachers, bankers and government officials. Some of the most influential men in the national affairs of Holland today are Mennonites. It is, however, correct to say that our city-dwelling Mennonite brothers in Holland have surrendered most of the traditional Mennonite religious principles and customs we still hold dear. Since all of our forefathers originally came from Europe and the big majority of them from Holland how is it that Mennonites in America are overwhelmingly rural?

A Familiar Occupation

In times of persecution in former days Mennonites fled to the country for refuge. They often found shelter on the estate of a large landholding prince or duke. In the course of years they became skilled farmers and handicraftsmen. So famous did they become as expert agriculturists that their services were sought far and wide. But there was another reason why Mennonites in America became chiefly rural.

A Way of Life

Not only did they choose farming when they came to the new world because it was the only way they knew of earning their living. They chose it because it permitted them to express their way of life. In this work they could give most complete expression to their religious convictions. They had fled from the mother country so that they might not have to compromise or give up these convictions. Mennonites have always conceived of the church as a brotherhood, as a spiritual ideal where the membership was composed of adult men and women who had fully consecrated their lives to Christ and where this brotherhood was constantly trying to establish exemplary communities. Menno Simons admonished his followers to live on earth as "citizens of heaven." This they could do in rural communities better than in cities.

In the country they could settle as neighbors one to another and mutually help each other with work; they could build their churches and school houses and rear their children according to their religious traditions and they could fellowship with each other at the meeting house on Sunday and at funerals and weddings during the week. All these things could not have been done had they settled in cities where families would have been scattered, men would have found work in different shops and offices, children would have been subject to non-Christian influences in public schools and Mennonite people in general would have felt the disorganizing and corrupting pressures of city life. How wise God led our forefathers to choose when He directed them to settle in rural areas of America. It is doubtful if American Mennonites would today hold firm their traditional beliefs if they had chosen the urban way of life.

RELIEF

Clothing Distributed in England

Brother Peter Dyck's letter of February 26 tells of meeting requests for clothing in Leeds, Manchester, and Liverpool. He was able to deliver clothing to these points in person, in one instance using the basement of a church as a center of relief activity. Old folks and children were the chief recipients of the clothing.

His letter closes with this sentence: "We continue in hope and faith: Hope—that 'in all these things we shall be more than conquerors'—and Faith—that God's hand is in all events and all events are in God's hand."

More Food for French Children

Brother Joseph N. Byler writes that the Mennonite relief program in France has the good fortune of securing another month's supply of food for the school feeding program. Four tons of chocolate and four and three-fourths tons of apricot jam have been secured for the school children of Lyon.

News from Paraguay

Brother Vernon Schmidt's latest letters from Paraguay give a picture of severe drought in the Chaco area with no chance for a normal harvest this year. This condition will affect especially the Menno Colony and the Fernheim Colony with their combined population of around 4,000 people. Brother Schmidt also mentions continued progress in the plans for erecting the hospital for the Friesland and Primavera Colonies.

Dr. John Schmidt's letters continue to tell of his work in the Chaco where he is giving much-needed medical aid. Operations and treatments seem to keep him busy, for he reports that in the Chaco as elsewhere, "The doctor's time is never his own."

WAR SUFFERERS AND OUR CHRISTIAN MISSION

By Jesse W. Hoover

The extent of war's havoc becomes constantly greater with each passing generation. Much of the scientific and inventive genius of the world has been diverted to purposes of shattering not only our physical progress but also and even more significantly our mental, moral and spiritual foundations. A studied attempt is made to warp the mentality, demoralize the character and destroy the spiritual resources of the victimized peoples. Never before have these efforts been deliberately attempted on such a gigantic scale as the present conflict.

Modern methods of warfare have no respect for age, for sex nor for any other humanitarian consideration. Doubtless this has always been true to a certain degree, but never before has the suffering of innocents probably been so acute. The greatest suffering is not on the front lines of the armed conflict where immense instruments of death hurl men into eternity by the thousands. Nor is the greatest suffering on the blood-soaked fields that are strewn thick with the dead, and with the dying shrieking for someone to mercifully put an end to their agonies. Nor yet is the greatest suffering in the hospitals behind the lines and strewn to the remote corners of every nation at conflict, where mangled remains of men are patched and repatched in a futile effort to restore their manliness.

The greatest suffering of modern war falls on innocents far behind the trenches and far removed from the lines of monster tanks and mortars. It stalks the narrow streets of every city and hamlet, it crouches on the doorsteps of every house and cottage, it clutches at the throat of every wife and mother, and it coils like a giant constrictor with horrid folds of lingering death around every babe and child.

Our relief of suffering in Europe is directed toward this most acute need—the suffering of little children. That relief is administered in a variety of ways designed to best meet the varying conditions in different places. At one place we use the school organization with its complete kitchen equipment. At another we organize our own dining room. At still another we give assistance by means of packet distributions. And finally, in our colonies we provide a complete program for the children, feeding, clothing, housing, and teaching them.

But in all these varied forms of assistance, the actual physical ministrations in food, clothing and other material necessities are by no means most important. While it is primary in a sense, it being necessary to give material relief in order to touch and reawaken crushed and broken sensibilities, yet it is only a means to the greater end. The greatest sufferings occasioned by war are the mental and spiritual anguish, the stalking phantom of mortal terror, the heavy hand of hopelessness, the almost complete demoralization that is demonstrated in despondent looks, in faces of children marked heavily with lines of age and care. People who are so far sunken in despair can scarcely respond at first to anything except the simplest and most primitive stimulus. Their higher faculties have been so bruised that they are temporarily quiescent. Approach must be made through the lower, physical instincts. When the ravenous starvation hunger has been somewhat satisfied, minds and spirits again begin to respond. We must first gain their confidence by supplying their physical wants, and then we have a point of contact for the greater spiritual ministrations.

Gradually little rays of light pierce through the awful shroud of darkness, and despair gives way to new hope. It is one of the most thrilling experiences of life to see the reawakening of souls stupefied by horror and anguish. These are the souls for whom Christ died. To find for Him a few of His priceless gems is one of the greatest joys given to man.

The tiniest light shines like a lode-star in the inky blackness. And our relief efforts, though seemingly small, have already produced amazing results in the reclamation of the spiritual resources of the near victims in Europe. The breadth of the reach of our comparatively limited resources is almost unbelievable. It seems like another miracle of Christ's multiplication. Will you put your small loaves and little fishes into His hands, that He may bless them and make them great? You will find yourself better satisfied, better nourished spiritually if you sacrifice for Him. You will share in His joy if you go with Him after the lost.

The greatest suffering of the children of Europe being the mental, moral, and spiritual anguish, our greatest mission of ministration, our ultimate aim in going to the starving, shivering, horrified mutitudes of war-shattered Europe, is to be instruments of God in restoring their souls. By restoration of their faith in godly men and women, we bit by bit rebuild their faith in the goodness of God. Because someone cares, their hope again revives in the care of the Eternal Father. Suffering and sorrow are assuaged by a glimmering vision of the future. How dare we deny them that vision? How dare we fail God and the lost? How dare we withhold ourselves from being the finger of Christ in His healing touch to the suffering multitudes of Europe and of the world? Their greatest anguish is that they are hopelessly, terrifyingly lost. We can be a finger of God to point the way back to the path of life. We must not fail in directing aright.

As non-resistant Christians, we have caught a vision of our responsibility and privilege in ministering to these most acute sufferings of these worst victims of the heinous forces of destruction. As the havoc increases in its scope, the strength of our forces of spiritual rehabilitation must grow to meet the increasing demands.

"Ye that are men now serve Him
Against unnumbered foes
Let courage rise with danger
And strength to strength oppose."

This is our hour to demonstrate the resources of Divine Power. We can appropriate that Power only by an uncompromising fidelity to the Divine Will motivated by a fullness of His divine Love. Without a spirit of Divine compassion, our efforts would be lifeless, cold and futile. "The gift without the giver is bare." That perhaps is why "God loveth the cheerful giver."

The need of the hour is for sincere consecration to the unfinished task, the unperformed commission of Christ, "Go ye into all the world,"—in America, North and South, in Europe, Asia and Africa, in the isles of the sea and to the utmost extremities of earth. This is our hour, for others to right and to left have thrown down the sceptre of Love and forsaken the spirit of Christ, deserting the army of true Christians for the forces of violence and destruction. We dare not retreat from truth and Christ. We are His last garrison through whom He may express His compassion.

MAROONED FOR A DAY

By Helen A. Penner

Sunday, the last day of November, was a memorable day at the Canet Plage convalescent home. We were marooned for a day! Thursday it was cloudy and cold all day. We missed seeing the mountains in the distance, and of course, missed the sunshine. Friday it rained, and Saturday it rained and rained. That night there was such a strong wind that it blew the rain through our east windows, past closed shutters, windows, and all. By morning the Mediterranean had advanced about half the distance between the shore and our terrace. It had pushed up the sand on the beach into a natural dike.

After breakfast, fearing that our supply of fuel in the basement would get damp, the elder boys carried wood up to our wash room on the second floor and dumped it into the large, shallow, tin "bathtub". Coal was also carried up and stored in a pile in one corner of this room and in one corner of the kitchen. This was certainly a wise precautionary measure taken just in time! During the day the water broke through the low dike and formed two large lakes in our front yard. A little later we found our basement flooded, as well as the grounds surrounding this old villa, in which our big international "family" is housed. The water came to the lowest step leading to the side door and there was about three feet of water in the basement. As a result, the plumbing is also out of order. The only way to get out of the house was to jump off the terrace. We felt like singing, "Mediterranean, get away from our door!"

We have almost sixty children here plus seven in the personnel, not counting myself. Quite a gang to keep in the house all day, but the children were very well-behaved. The younger ones played in the dining room with the few games we have here or sat quietly and watched the others play. The older children moved the beds together in the boys' dormitory that is directly above my room, which is also my office. They practiced drills and Spanish folk games which they plan to use in their Christmas program. In the afternoon, when the French girl who is my assistant, found that I was trying to write a letter, she said she was sorry that it was so noisy in the room above mine, but I assured her that I had taught school ten years so thought I would be able to take it.

The tram couldn't even come out as the tracks were flooded between Canet Village and Canet Plage. We feared that we would soon run out of supplies, especially bread, which is such an important part of the diet here. We had a small supply of powdered milk and a few other things on hand to use in case of emergency. The rations do not permit one to buy ahead much more than one needs.

By Monday morning the sea had receded. A tram came through with difficulty bringing bread and milk, as well as mail, and we were happy to know that we were no longer isolated. Yesterday, the sun shone beautifully and today is also bright and clear so we hope that our surroundings will dry out soon.

The Test for Discipleship

By Tina Engbrecht

Discipleship has a wonderful meaning. The word, "Disciple," comes from the Latin and means a student, a learner or pupil. Discipleship means close fellowship with our Teacher, our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. Jesus invites us in Matt. 11:29, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." To learn of Christ is to know the most lovely person this world has ever known. If we learn of Him we will become more Christ-like in character. To learn of Him is to gain a new outlook on life, a new inlook on self, a new up look to God.

But how shall we become learners or disciples?

First, it cannot be done at a distance. We must come near to Christ if we would hear. The gospel has a drawing power and we must not be afraid to be near Him if we would become true disciples. Hearing produces faith, and faith leads to decision as we read in Rom. 10:17, "So then Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God."

A true disciple must be willing to forego many things. If a man is not willing to give up time and money and perhaps even comforts for the sake of Christ he cannot qualify as a disciple.

Next come results which are more visible and public. Confession of faith in Christ carries a promised blessing. Jesus promised to confess us and recognize and receive us, if we do the same by Him. "Everyone therefore who shall confess before my Father who is in Heaven." Christian baptism follows as an act of yielding, of humble obedience to Christ. In His great commission Christ taught His followers to "Make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28:19. This is a burial of the past, with all the sin, and a resurrection of the new life.

The person is now "enrolled" in the school of Christ. He is still just a beginner. As he learns he will put into practice daily the lessons learned from Christ in His Word. To do so is to be a true disciple.

Friendship is one of the most valuable treasures that anyone can find. It is possible to make friends only when there is something in common. When there is similarity in ideals, mutual acquaintances of all kinds become the basis of enduring friendships. To be a friend of Christ, we must be like Him in our likes and dislikes. We must remake our lives by the power that He supplies and obey His Will. So we read in John 15:14, "Ye are my friends if ye do the things I command of you." The Gospel of John emphasizes obedience, for there is power in obedience. But best of all when we keep His commandments we then enjoy the sense of fellowship with Christ in day by day companionships. We are one with Him. Our life is linked up with His. Are we meeting the test and deserving the title He offers us?

This is a time when all things are tested. The food we eat, the clothes we wear, the cars we drive, the medicines we use, all must be tested. Religion is subject to the same treatment. (To be tested) People no longer take religion for granted. The professing Christian also must show by his consecration and character that his faith means something. At some time or other there comes a time when our faith is tested. Without a doubt temptations came to a Christian at some time or other to think and act in ways that are contrary to the will of God or Christ.

As Eve ate of the forbidden fruit so we are tempted to do the things that are forbidden and that we know are wrong. These temptations must be squarely met with a very definite NO. Temptations usually are very subtle and harmless in appearance as Paul says in II Cor. 11:14, "And no marvel: for even satan fashioneth himself into an Angel of light." We become strong as we resist. God is not far from us when we are in need of Him. Another test will be in the form of doubts. Some will ask themselves, "Does it pay to be a Christian?" These moments of discouragement come to most people once in a while, usually when they are tired or ill. The remedy is earnest prayer, although rest and recreation help.

There is the test of unbelief to be met. The lesson for each young person to learn is that faith must be built by faithful devotion, Bible study, attendance at church so that the unexpected test may be victoriously met. There is no need to wait until some trial comes in order to find out how much spiritual strength one possesses. Each one may conduct his own test. The Apostle Paul bids us to do this often in II Cor. 13:5, "try (test) your own selves, whether you are in Faith, Prove your own selves." Some questions which may be pointed at our selves are as follows: 1. How much time do I spend in reading and thinking with my Bible? 2. Have I obeyed the commands of Christ, and am I doing what is pleasing to Him? 3. Do I love others, especially followers of Christ? 4. Am I loyal to the Church? This is needed especially in our day in a world filled with nervous strain and fast living. The genuine life, one that follows Jesus, is able to meet every test that may be put to it and from any source. If each person learns how to examine his own life frequently and applies himself to practising the Christian life, growth and results are bound to come.

Another test of discipleship is fruitful living. The main purpose of the church is soul-winning. Winning others to Christ does more to strengthen one's life than any other kind of effort. An aggressive campaign to win people to Christ is the need of the hour. (The above paper was read to the Christian Endeavor of the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Marion, South Dakota. The C. E. chairman then saw to it that it was sent in. May other C. E. chairmen do likewise.)

WHAT IS A CONVALESCENT HOME?

By Lois Gunden

Exactly what is a convalescent home? No, it is not a house full of children who must stay in bed all day. On the contrary, our group of sixty children at Canet Plage is quite a lively, active bunch. If you were with me just now you would hear the happy voices of children calling to each other in Spanish or French, for the smallest ones are playing in the sunshine below my window. They are digging holes in the sand, and they are singing a Spanish tune that seems to be one of their favorites. A few minutes ago I was out on the terrace where most of the children have gathered since lunch. Two of the larger girls were knitting, using yarn from an old sweater. Over to one side was a group of seven or eight-year-olds playing house. They were seated along either side of an improvised table, where the hostess was serving small green leaves into clam-shell "plates." Just as I was ready to see what would happen next, along came little Leopold wanting to be fondled a bit. I picked him up and we moved over to the bigger girls. Maria asked him the inevitable question, "Laquelle est ta maman?" (Which is your mother?) At first he reacted shyly, and then with a proud flash of his black eyes he pointed to the one who has taken him as her special charge. Yes, they are like brothers and sisters in a big family, behaving very much like ordinary children.

The children in our convalescent home come to us from a near-by refugee concentration camp, where they have been interned with their parents. We take into our colony those who have recently been released from the camp infirmary. Here we keep them from one to three months providing them with more normal home conditions and better food than they would otherwise have. Above all, we want them to find here an atmosphere of friendliness and a place of happiness. There are tiny tots of three years and others all the way up to sixteen years. Some of them speak Spanish, some French, and others German, but they all have a way of understanding each other. The group shifts continually, for as some are sent back to the camp after a period in our colony, others come to take their places. Twice a month such a change is made in our population.

The villa which houses all these children and a personnel of eight, is situated on the shores of the Mediterranean quite near the Spanish border. Of necessity it is a large house; in fact, it contains more than twenty rooms. None of the rooms are converted into dormitories which are lined with rows of single beds. Other bedrooms are reserved for the personnel. In the large dining room are four tables, one for the biggest boys, another for the oldest girls, one for the smallest children, and a fourth for the children who are neither the largest nor the smallest. Off from the dining room is a room with large bay windows which serves as the office. Of course, there is a kitchen, but it is a rather small room in which to prepare the meals for almost seventy persons. After supper on cold winter evenings, it is the gathering place of the personnel, for it is the only place where there is a fire. The location of the villa on the beach is ideal in summer time, when the children go bathing in the sea twice a day. During the winter season, bathing is more of a problem and occurs only once a week. All Saturday morning a line of children can be seen in the hall outside the bathroom awaiting their turns to be scrubbed. The bathing arrangement makes a story in itself, and a very interesting one, too.

Besides the American directress, there are seven other members in the personnel. The group consists of the assistant directress, the cook, the assistant cook, the teacher, the surveillante (who is responsible for the conduct of the children), the girl in charge of the laundry, and the handy man about the place. Most of them are themselves refugees who appreciate the opportunity of having a place to live.

The convalescents spend their days after the manner of children the world over; that is, their time is divided between sleeping, eating, studying, playing, and making themselves useful about the house. As soon as supper is finished, which is about six-thirty, they go to bed, but not all of them are ready to go to sleep immediately. While the personnel are at the table, pattering footsteps may be heard above for a few minutes. However by seven o'clock all is quiet. The rising bell at seven fifteen in the morning transforms the house into a swarming, busy place. Again a line forms outside the washroom where everyone gets washed and combed before going down to breakfast. Each one of the tiny tots is in charge of the "Big sister" to whom he has been assigned. Besides their breakfast, dinner, and supper, our children have an afternoon gouter (a four o'clock lunch) as do all French children. Although the meals are of necessity quite different in nature from ours in the States, each one gets large servings of a few substantial foods. A typical dinner or supper consists of a big bowl of soup, followed by a large serving of vegetable or vegetable mixture. (In season there is likely to be some lettuce or tomatoes in addition). Twice a week meat is served, and to the supper is added a desert, which might be either some fresh fruit or a bit of preserves to eat with cookies. And a thick slice of brown bread is always a part of each meal. The gouter consists of another such slice of brown bread plus a carrot or a bit of chocolate. For two hours during both the morning and the afternoon the dining room tables become school desks. However, the equipment is very limited and the group is rather diversified; so ours is not a model schoolroom. The rest of the time the children are free to play on the beach or in the back yard. The older ones spend part of these extra hours helping with the household duties or running errands. There are those who make the beds, those who scrub the floors, those who set and clear the tables, those who help in the kitchen, and those who sweep the terrace and the walks. All of this is a part of the normal day's activity.

The two special days during the week are Thursday and Sunday. Thursday is to French children what Sunday is to American children, for on that day there is no school. The morning is devoted to letter writing. The afternoon may be spent in various ways, but if the weather is fine the favorite experience is a long hike. On both these days many of the little ones are made happy by visits from their parents. Usually on Sunday afternoon an informal program is arranged, in which several children contribute their special songs or poems. It is on these days that chocolate becomes a part of the gouter much to the delight of all.

As might be expected, life here has its ups and downs. The pleasant and the unpleasant are plunged together in any day's program. There are the cuts and sores that must be looked after during the morning clinic. There are always some who get into mischief and must be punished. The arrival and departure of groups of children always causes some excitement for both the children and the personnel. The youngsters are eager to see whether the new group contains any from among their friends at the camp, while the personnel are interested in seeking out those whose hair and clothing have become the habitat of certain little pests. The delousing process usually leaves in its wake some closely-cropped heads. Then again there may be special departures, for sometimes families or children are freed from the camp. Only yesterday a father came to get his son, Albanos, who was one of our well-behaved ten-year olds. Although the father had been released earlier, the mother and the children had just been freed. Albanos felt very happy at the thought of again living with his family in a home of their own. The winter brings with it several distinct problems, of which the chief is keeping the children warm, both inside and outside the house. A majority of them have practically nothing in the way of shoes or warm wraps, and yet they must spend part of their time out-of-doors. Fortunately, the winter here is not extremely long. With the Christmas season approaching, we are planning a celebration that will bring to them the real spirit of this holiday.

But on Christmas day as on other days when I stop to consider the happiness that our convalescent home brings to the children and their parents, my mind goes back to you who, even more than we, make possible this work. It is you who are giving them the comforts and joys of life. If for only one day you could exchange places with us who have the opportunity to do the actual giving, you would feel amply repaid for having had a part in this special project. The parents of one of our boys recently wrote: "We want to state that we are so much obliged to you for each day of our son's stay there. We shall never forget all your care and kindness towards him and shall always be sincerely and profoundly grateful for what was done for him." Testimonies such as this from both parents and children are a continual source of inspiration to us. We hope that the Mennonite relief program may continue to bring some of the compassion and love of Christ into the darkened and troubled lives of the peoples of Europe.

BE UNFASHIONABLE

The greatest tyrant is the world. It tempts, awes, and coerces even many of those who have chosen Christ as Master to accept its ways. Christian youth is tempted to serve two masters, the loving Christ and this tyrannical world. He who strives to follow both becomes a mixture, a worldly Christian. Is it true that there is a strong worldly influence upon the Christian? Let us see.

In a young people's discussion meeting it was pointed out that one benefit of dancing was poise. Such poise seems like a worthy ideal. Is it? Should the Christian have that kind of poise which enables him to conceal the strong feelings aroused in dancing? Should he not rather have that purity, strength, and purposefulness of character that will enable him to be at his best as he leads a group in prayer or as he pleads with someone to accept Christ? He who has the latter will not need the former. Worldly fashions of dress are not determined by constructive purposes. Fashion appeals to the vanity of people. Decked out in the latest styles many Christians have a feeling of self-confidence and worthiness that they do not dream of achieving through character and skill. Clothes may make the worldly man, but faith and devotion to Christ make the Chistian. Some young Christians would rather walk down main street with a burning thing in their mouth than with a Bible in their hand. In the reading of many, non-Christian books outnumber the Christian ones. The daily newspaper is read in many homes where the church paper is not. Yet a Christian is to be primarily interested in Christ and the building of His Kingdom. Are there not many who spend more time at football games than they do in direct witnessing for Christ? Is it not true that some high school students from Christian homes are more ashamed to talk of religion in the shower room than to tell dirty stories? In courtship most individuals ask, "Is she good looking?" rather than, "Is she deeply and beautifully spiritual?"

Paul says, "And be not fashioned according to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." The will of God is the all-inclusive standard of behaviour for the Christian.

We are to discover the will of God by having our minds renewed. We are to be very critical towards the suggestions and ways of the world. We are to arrive at our own conclusions. We are to be critical, not from the standpoint of science, but from the standpoint of Christ who should be at the center of our life.

However, our mind must be renewed through the Holy Spirit. As long as we resist the Holy Spirit in any way and do not yield ourselves entirely to Christ, our mental processes will be dull and deceiving. Let us cry "What would Jesus do?" and yearn with our whole being to do His will. Then we will win true religious freedom. Christian youth be free—from the world. Be unfashionable. —Reynold Weinbrenner

EDUCATIONAL VALUES INHERENT IN THE CIVILIAN PUBLIC SERVICE PROGRAM

By Robert Kreider

Civilian Public Service is an outgrowth of a way of life. With the coming of military conscription as a tenet of national policy, the peace churches sought a form of service of such a "Character as to best represent our faith and permit a testimony for peace." They sought a form of service which would be wholly under civilian direction, with the churches granted "freedom to direct the life of the camps outside of working hours." The peace churches have devoted themselves sacrificially to the support of this camp program because certain basic values are at stake: the principle of non-resistance, the law of love, the freedom of the individual conscience. For the preservation of the values in our way of life, Civilian Public Service was undertaken.

When this camp program was first being discussed and contemplated by the three historic peace churches, the planners visualized the educational values inherent in Civilian Public Service. Foreseeing the possibilities for a significant approach to Mennonite adult education through C. P. S. camps, the Mennonite Central Committee arranged for the appointment of educational directors and encouraged the establishment of educational programs in the several Mennonite camps. It was the hope that the period of service required of the young men would be made so enriching to their Christian life and character, so broadening to their experience that they would ever remember it as one of the greatest experiences of their lives.

As the camps embarked on the experiment of C. P. S. education, they were aware that here was a program calling for different educational methods and techniques than utilized in colleges and secondary schools. With no set curriculum established as an educational pattern, the camps launched forth on an experimental program of study. The camps learned much as they worked out their own programs.

With the C. P. S. program of the Mennonites now in operation for more than six months, numerous conclusions as to the educational values of camp life may be drawn. It is apparent that although the formal class and activity program is of real importance, the major educational value of the C. P. S. camps is to be found in the total camp experience, in the intimate daily contacts of camp life.

Our interest in this examination of the educational program of the Mennonite C. P. S. camps is to relate, first, the nature of the organized camp educational program. Our second and basic concern is to discover the educational values inherent in the entire camp experience—a rich experience which is the class and club room, but which extends beyond into all of the manifold relationships of the camp community.

As will be discerned in this discussion, Civilian Public Service is in the early stages of the development of a practical, purposive educational program. We are only on the threshold of a great experiment.

I. THE EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

Planning the Program

A careful and systematic approach to the educational life of the Civilian Public Service camps is made through the program of classes and club activities. This program varies in its details from camp to camp as each seeks to meet the particular needs of its assignees.

Leadership for the educational program rests upon the camp staff. A majority of the M. C. C.-operated camps have been provided with an educational director, who may be either a staff employee or one of the assignees. In certain camps the director assumes the role of director of education. Effort is made in the camps to utilize talented and well-trained assignees as instructors and leaders of certain classes and clubs. The personnel of Mennonite church institutions and colleges is used in the educational program of the camps. Such leadership is particularly helpful to the camp in the course on Mennonite Objectives. The camps have found need for instructions in specialized fields such as typing, Spanish, piano, and vocational subjects. Individuals from the local community, who have these skills and are interested in the camp, are sometimes used as camp instructors.

It is after the day of labor that the organized educational program begins. From Monday through Friday various groups gather in the evenings for study and training. After a work day of eight to ten hours, one must exercise personal discipline so as to take advantage of the opportunities for educational growth. The emphasis in the educational program is to be found during the "School months" from September to June. In the preparation of the weekly schedule of class activities precedence is granted to such major study groups as the Mennonite "core" course, on-the-job training, Bible study. For a balanced program, time is always reserved for recreational activity.

To determine in part what classes and courses are offered, all of the camps have presented the incoming assignees with questionnaires to ascertain their educational background, talents, and interests. The results of these questionnaires are compiled. Not only is the staff guided by the interests of the campers, but also by the suggestions of the Mennonite constituency as expressed through the Mennonite Central Committee. Opportunities are presented to formulate an educational program designed to meet the particular needs of our Mennonite people. The Mennonite Central Committee has given much guidance in working out approaches to these common needs. Specifically the course on Mennonite objectives arises out of the thinking and planning of the M. C. C. Then too, the nature of the respective educational programs is partially determined by the available resources of the camp: equipment, time, and personnel.

Classes and Activities

The educational programs of all the Mennonite-operated camps have provided for varied types of study. A diversified educational program is a necessity with the variety of interests and needs to be found among the assignees.

First, there are the interest groups and classes. These study groups and activities are purely voluntary. They meet once or twice a week. The plan of the Mennonite Central Committee is to offer the students certificates upon satisfactory completion of a period of study. The interest groups of any one camp may cover a wide variety of subjects. Heading the list in importance are the religious study groups. All of the camps have Bible study classes and mid-week prayer groups. Additional religious subjects are taught in several of the camps. Such courses are preaching, church history, the church in the rural community, and peace principles. Popular in the camps are such cultural interest groups as chorus, band, piano, crafts, dramatics, Spanish, public speaking. Keen interest has been expressed by the campers in the many vocational courses of the camps: woodworking, carpentry, shop mechanics, typing, farm bookkeeping, agriculture. With this training, campers should be able to go home after their period of service more skilled to pursue their occupation. Study groups of a scientific nature have been organized: nature study, photography, and radio. Widely attended are the courses in first aid which are offered in all of the camps.

Second, there are the college and high school credit courses. For a large number of young men in the camps the coming of the draft forced them to discontinue their academy or college education. For the sake of such assignees who might feel that their formal education was permanently halted, college and high school credit courses can be offered. Through the courtesy of Mennonite colleges these courses are to be offered free of tuition charges. Serving as instructors are duly approved staff members or assignees, who have had advanced academic training. One of the Mennonite camps has organized three college courses—accounting, algebra, and church history—all taught by assignees who have pursued graduate study. Credit courses meet a particular need in camp; however, they are not the major emphasis of the educational program.

Third, educational institutions of local communities have been utilized. Some communities have invited the C.P.S. campers to attend adult education institutions. Several of the camps have provided transportation for the young men who are interested in attending these classes in town. This has been found to be an excellent opportunity through which to establish cordial relations with the community.

Fourth, meetings concerned with job and project training are held periodically in the camps. The technical staff of the camp arranges the program for these meetings. Through demonstrations, lectures, discussions, illustrated talks, the technical staff trains the assignees to become more intelligent, efficient workers on the project. A systematic program of safety education accompanies the job training meetings. In particular camps the first aid study is an integral part of job training. The attendance of the entire camp is required for these meetings.

Finally, we come to the most important phase of the educational program as it is being administered in the Mennonite C.P.S. camps. This is the orientation or survey course on "Our Mennonite Heritage." Because of its significance to the Mennonites in their way of life, this course on objectives merits separate treatment below.

A WORD FROM WALTER

(The following sketch was written in French by a thirteen year old boy who is one of our family at the Canet Plage Convalescent Home. Walter is a rather exceptional boy—intelligent, appreciative, and helpful. Although he has experienced much in his few years, one senses no bitterness in his attitude. With Walter we regret to think of the time when he, as well as others like him, must be sent back to the camp to make room for other convalescents. —Lois Gunden.)

"I was born in Germany, in a small village near Essen. My father owned an electrical supply factory which employed two or three hundred workmen. When I was five years old the present regime came into power, but our difficulties had not yet come. I had a happy childhood in contrast to the sad years which followed. At the age of six I started to school, where

I was always at the head of my class. The year 1936 came and with it the propaganda against the Jews. In school I was forced to fight with the other boys every day because of my Jewish blood.

One fine May morning in 1936 two big autos stopped in front of our house, and six uniformed men came to tell my father that he must be ready to leave the factory the next morning. Naturally, we were very nervous, but my father arranged everything, and the next day we went to live in Berlin, where I had an uncle who sold motorcycles and bicycles. But we did not stay there long. Early in the year 1937 we went to Karlsruhe, a city in Baden. My father began to stock an electrical and photographic store. We wanted to leave for America, but we had no relatives who could make the necessary arrangements.

My father was very successful in his business and bought a large house. Then came the autumn of 1938. On the tenth of November when my father went to his store, he found all the windows and all the doors broken and much of his merchandise destroyed. At noon they came to get my father and took him to the concentration camp at Dachan. There they took from him all his clothes and gave him only a shirt, a pair of trousers, and shoes. He was forced to be outside all day. But after three weeks he came back from Dachan. Then he sold what remained of the merchandise, and with that money we stayed in Germany until October 22, 1941.

The morning of that day we were given fifteen minutes to pack our bags and leave. Upon our arrival at the station we were sent directly to Camp Gurz. We stayed there until the tenth of March, when we were sent to the Camp at Rivesaltes. My parents are still at the camp. After I had been sick in the hospital, I came to the Mennonite Convalescent Home.

Here at the Mennonite Colony I am getting along fine. The personnel is very kind, and we have good food. Since our house is on the beach, we can go swimming when the weather is nice. The American delegates are "full of smiling goodness and affection" to us all. Their presence and the material good they bring us are a genuine comfort to our hearts. We children who have come from the camp find here a second home, and I am sure that when I leave I shall be as sad as when I left my native land."

THE BIBLE IN A THOUSAND TONGUES

Heb. 4:12; II Tim. 3:15

A WORLD MEETING

In one recent year the American Bible Society distributed nearly seven million copies of the Bible or portions of it. That year's work covered 149 languages. Many interesting stories can be told of translators who spent many hours to do translations of the Bible in native languages, so their new converts could learn parts of the Scripture. We all feel very grateful to our own missionary, Rodolphe Petter, who translated the Scriptures into the Cheyenne language for the Indians.

We are told that today the Bible has been translated into 1,039 tongues. In the last two years it has been translated into eighteen new tongues, six of these are in African tongues, seven are from distant places in Asia, four are in Philippine tongues, and one in an Indian tongue of British Columbia.

The Bible is the world's "best seller." A recent check up shows that 20 per cent more Bibles were sold in America during Christmas time of 1940 than any other period.

The Bible in Argentina

A woman bought a Spanish Bible. Her husband was an enemy of God, and she was afraid of him. Therefore, she read her Bible in secret. One night she forgot to hide her Bible, and her husband found it and read it and remarked to his wife it appeared to be a good book. Every night on returning home, he would read in this book, and soon they were reading it together. The wife suggested they go together to see her parents to whom they had not spoken for two years. They went and asked forgiveness, and now because of the Bible both families are reconciled and following the Lord.

The Bible in Bohemia

A colporteur, who sold scriptures, was surprised to come to a locksmith who knew his Bible well, although he lived where there were supposedly no Bibles. The colporteur learned that seventeen years before a religious leader had gathered all copies of the Bible and made a bonfire of them. A gust of wind carried away two burning pieces, which the locksmith picked up. These words were read, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall never pass away." The words impressed him so much that he and his father saved a whole Bible out of the bonfire and became Bible readers and students.

The Bible in India

An English merchant was packing some gems which he was sending to a trader in India. He wrapped each one separately. Coming to the last and costliest, he wrapped it in some soft paper which he tore out of the Bible in his office. He used for this paper the first three chapters from John. Over in India, a Hindu received the precious stones, and found that the wrappings became more precious than the stones, the diamond itself, for he found these words, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He was astonished. He told others what he had found. Why hadn't he known this before? Surely this was for him too. By faith he accepted it and some time later, when a missionary went to that place, expecting to find only heathen, he found a gathering of Indian Christians.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE TWELVE ?

Peter "On the morning of the Resurrection we have proof that Peter, though humbled was not crushed by his fall. He and John were the first to visit the sepulchre; he was the first to enter it. We are told by Luke and by Paul that Christ appeared to him first among the apostles.

He is the most prominent figure in the greatest event after the Resurrection, the great experience of the church on the Day of Pentecost."

John From the cross there came to John the duty of becoming a son to the mother who is left desolate. Later, on the Sea of Galilee, John is the first to recognize in the dim form, seen in the morning twilight, the presence of his risen Lord.

He was with Peter at the ascension and on the Day of Pentecost. Together they enter the temple as worshippers, Acts 3:1, and protest against the threats of the Sanhedrin. The persecution which was pushed on by Saul of Tarsus did not drive John from his post.

James On the night before the crucifixtion James was present at the agony in the garden. On the day of the ascension he is mentioned as being with the rest of the disciples in prayer.

Matthew. He is mentioned by name, after the resurrection of Christ, only in Acts 1:13, but he must have lived many years as an apostle, since he was the author of the gospel of Matthew, which was writen at least twenty years later.

Thomas He was absent at the first appearance of Jesus after the resurrection. On the eighth day he was with them, perhaps expecting a recurrence of the visit of the week previous, and Jesus stood among them. With the vision came a certainty of belief and Thomas exclaimed, "My Lord and My God." In the New Testament we read of Thomas only twice more, once on the Sea of Galilee with the seven disciples, John 21:2, and again in the assemblage of the apostles after the ascension.

"In some way, even if we do not understand how, Jesus convinced the disciples that He was alive, and that He was still a power in their lives and in the world. In the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles we find the same men who walked with Him in Galilee, and yet they are not the same. Association with the risen Christ has given them a new poise, a more stable character, a more courageous will, a loftier purpose."

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Unique Service Performed by Boys from Henry and Bluffton

Boys from the Henry and Bluffton camps made an interesting footnote to the newspaper stories about the tornadoes that recently devastated towns in the middle west.

In Lacon, Illinois, a tornado destroyed around one hundred homes, with a loss estimated at one-half million dollars. Boys from Camp Henry, Illinois, worked a total of one hundred twenty-four eight hour days to clear the streets of the debris from the ruined homes.

Goshen, Indiana, was also struck by a tornado, with considerable damage resulting. A newspaper story gives the account of Brother R. L. Hartzler, director of the camp, accompanying thirty boys from the Bluffton, Indiana, camp to Goshen, where the boys engaged in clean-up work for some time. During their stay in Goshen the boys were, according to the account, quartered in the basement of the Eighth Street Mennonite Church.

Changes in Staff Members

Dr. Merle Schwartz and wife arrived at Sideling Hill Camp, Wells Tannery, Pa., on March 11. Dr. Schwartz's duties at Sideling Hill Camp will be those of educational and assistant director, as well as camp doctor. Sister Schwartz, who is a trained nurse, will serve as camp matron. Brother and Sister Schwartz are missionaries under appointment to Africa under the Congo Inland Mission Board, but due to the present international status are unable to sail.

Sister Anna Klassen, after several months of faithful and efficient service at Sideling Hill Camp, has returned to her home at Hillsboro, Kansas.

Brother Delvin Kirchofer, who has been serving generously in the Civilian Public Service program at Denison, Iowa, and Sideling Hill (Wells Tannery), Pennsylvania, will soon begin service at Grottoes, Virginia. Brother Kirchofer will temporarily serve as educational and assistant director at Grottoes until a permanent appointment is made to that position.

PEACE SECTION NOTES

Registration of men 45 to 65 is set for April 27. So far as is known, the same rules are applicable for this registration as for those preceding. It is not yet known what regulations will be enacted for their selection for service nor what types of service they may be asked to render. Legislation is under consideration at the present time.

Our appeal for your help is renewed. We would like to have a registry of medical students who are C. O.'s. If you have a student in medical school who is a relative or is in your church or under your spiritual oversight, or if you even know of such students with whom you have no direct responsibility, will you please send us their names and addresses. We urgently need this information. —Jesse W. Hoover

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

GUIDANCE

When we left Bluffton, Ohio, on February first this year, with the objective of leaving for India, we had very little hope of getting a passport. When we arrived in Kansas, we received information from several sources that passports were not granted to any woman and children for travel to the Orient. The question arose in our minds whether it was wise to go on to California when there was so little hope of securing a passport. It seemed like too great and too costly a risk.

But we decided that besides taking the matter repeatedly in prayer, we would go separately to each Mission Board member who lived in Kansas for advice; and that if their separate advice without consulting each other would be the same, then we would accept that as a definite guidance from God for us. We did that. We went to Rev. P. P. Wedel, President of the Board. After we had his opinion, we went to Rev. P. H. Richert, Secretary of the Board, and asked him the same question, namely, whether he advised us to go on to the west coast on such slim hopes of securing a passport. Then we went to Rev. Kreider, and again asked the same questions. Each one of the three gave the same advice. We felt at rest, and a remarkable peaceful assurance came upon us that God guided us just that way, namely that we should go right on.

* * * * *

We came to California on the first of March. On the seventh our ship on which we had made reservations for India was to leave San Fransisco. We had no passport. Without passport, no one can get on the ship. We telegraphed to Washington. The reply came that since that ship, the S. S. "Pres. Cleveland," was to stop in Chinese and Japanese ports, no passports were granted for women and children. This meant that we had to let our reservations go and the ship left without us.

Our hearts sank. We began to inquire whether we could rent a house somewhere, because it did not seem right to be visitors with friends, though many friends were inviting us to stay with them. It seemed better to set up our own household again. Thereupon Rev. M. M. Horsch member of our Mission Board, now residing in California, advised us to visit the churches in California. We gladly accepted the advice.

But before we left Los Angeles, we went to the S. S. Company and inquired whether any ship would go to the Orient without stopping in Chinese and Japanese ports. We were told that the S. S. "Pres. Harrison" was sailing and would not stop in these ports. Again we wired to Washington, asking for permission to go on that ship. The reply came back, "Yes." The passports would be granted.

Naturally, some time is necessary to send the passport. Because the British visa is also necessary, this had to be obtained in Chicago. We had settled matters in the Chicago office when we were on the way from Ohio to Kansas. So we wired to Chicago asking the visa office to forward our passport to us by airmail as soon as it came to them. This they kindly did. Then I wired to San Francisco for reservations on the S. S. "Pres. Harrison." The reply came that there would be a cabin for us. The passport came a few days before the ship left. When we finally came to San Francisco, the officer in the office of the American President Line said to me, "You surely are a lucky bird." I wondered why. Then he told me that just a few hours before my telegram came asking for a cabin on the "Pres. Harrison," a family had cancelled their reservation and we got it instead. We left for India, and here we are, having started already on an eight term for our Lord and Master. Yes, God guides marvellously, even in these days.

Jansen Memorial School

The main building of this memorial is just about completed. It is a brick building, having six rooms and a large veranda (porch) on which classes can meet or on which open air programs can be given. Right in front of this porch is a wide space, large enough for thousands of visitors. Just a few weeks ago we had a blind evangelist-singer with us. He preached and sang on this porch, and the large audience was in the bright oriental moonlight under the open sky. The largest two rooms in the school house are only partly divided, so that people in both can see the speaker who stands in the middle and in the front of these rooms. The wall dividing the rooms comes only half way to the front. For class purposes the children turn in the opposite direction. A curtain can be used to close the remaining space, and both rooms are separate classrooms. The other four rooms are divided by a hall. This hall has an upper story for supplies. This upper story is very useful in the rainy season when everything wants to mold. The classes have already met for four months in this building. Over and over again we are grateful to Sister Herman Jansen and children of Elbing, Kansas, who have provided so well for India's children.

One Hundred a Month for Christ

Philip, one of our evangelists in our Basna mission area and I were driving along on our bicycles through the jungle to visit a few of our churches. On one short stretch of road we could ride side by side (as a whole the road is only a narrow footpath, so that one cyclist must follow the other). Philip turned to me and said, "If we could only have an evangelistic staff for non-Christians, as we have now for our widely scattered Christians, I am sure there would be a hundred new Christians every month in this area." Later I heard other brethren make a similar statement. The field ripe for harvest? Yes indeed! Calls from every direction. Suddenly a call comes from a distant village, ten miles from any Christian group. There is real occasion now to "Pray the Lord of the harvest field. . . ."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska

APRIL 12—Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on the world, received up into glory. I Tim. 3:16. In the Bible godliness towers above everything else. To be a godly man or woman is to be greater than to have written great plays. Pascal says there are three greatnesses—that of bulk, that of mind, and that of heart. Two mysteries are spoken of in the Bible—the mystery of iniquity and the mystery of godliness. Godliness in its origin involves the birth by the Holy Spirit. A man who is godly is a living miracle. People said: "The Man is out of place; he is in discord with his age; if he is right then the world is wrong," and the world crucified Him.

APRIL 13—No man can serve two masters. Matt. 6:24. You and I enter the day with some main purpose to be accomplished. We have ultimate and subordinate aims. When our Lord tells us that no man can serve two masters, he means in reality that it is altogether impossible to have two ultimate aims in life. He reveals very clearly in the Scriptures what our chief aim must be. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Any other aim sets us seeking for the transitory rather than the permanent. Ultimate aim fixes character, gives a clear vision, and above all it brings the best result.

APRIL 14—All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient. I Cor. 6:12. Some one has said that a Christian has no rights; he has only duties. Such a statement has the sound of the heroic. In another way there is a great deal of truth in it. It may serve as a warning to men who always insist on their rights. As Christians we have untold duties, but on the other hand we have untold rights also. A Christian will never misuse or abuse his rights, but recognizes limits in their exercise. All things are lawful to me, says the apostle, but I will not be brought under the power of any. Let us not forget that Christ endured the agony and the anguish of the cross. How infinitely little do we really sacrifice.

APRIL 15—Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him. I Cor. 16:2. Every one who reads his Bible and believes it knows that giving is a part of his religion. And just as soon as he tries to be conscientious and systematic about it the question will arise, how much, or what portion shall I give? It is easy to be benevolent, for benevolence is nothing more than wishing someone well. Benevolence often is very cheap. Beneficence is a different thing. It carries out our wishes into practical effect. It costs more. It is applied Christianity of the most pronounced type. It is the Spirit of Christ in action. It has to do with the definite question, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?"

APRIL 16—He that hath seen me hath seen the Father. John 14:9. The writers of the Bible take God for granted. Whatever there is of beauty or order in the universe is due to God's planning. All life has its origin in God. Our Lord was conscious of God. He never expressed any doubt as to his Father. That God is logically probable is the theory of many. The Christian does not only believe in logic. He has access to the Father by a spiritual route. "I and the Father are one," Jesus said. Are you and I of such sort that we could listen with pride to our child telling someone "I and my father, mother, are one?" When a sinner begins to hope salvation begins. He has a desire to go home and no longer remain in the land of famine.

APRIL 17—Lord teach us to pray. Luke 11:1. You can not push people up to a higher level of living; you must lift them up. To lift them up you must first climb up yourself. Prayer is the means of lifting others, as well as ourselves, to a higher level. When a pump is frequently used, the water pours out at the first stroke, but in the pump that has not been in use for a long time, the water gets low, and it requires many strokes before the water flows. It is so with prayer. If we insist in prayer every day, every little circumstance awakens that disposition to pray and desire and words are always ready; if we neglect prayer, it is difficult for us to pray, for the water in the well gets low. By prayer we increase our interest in the kingdom of God.

APRIL 18—I ascend unto my Father, and to your Father; and to my God and your God. John 20:17. Jesus, the captain of our salvation, has not withdrawn to a safe height, leaving us to fight His battles; as the first martyr saw Him standing in an attitude of eager sympathy and swift help, so He is with all His struggling servants at all times. His name is "Immanuel," "God with us." He has promised to be with us till the end of the ages; yes, we will be with Him in all eternity. Toil and labor still awaits us here on earth at present. Christ ascended to heaven and led captivity captive, that through His victory He might make us also conquerors by His descending power. Christ ascended to heaven that He might carry on His continual work of intercession, that its results might be felt in their descending to the earth.

Growing Tension With False Leaders

Luke 11:37-48, 52-54

Topic: THE GROWING STORM OF OPPOSITION

Introduction

The scene of today's lesson was probably in Perea, a part of the Perean ministry (Luke 9:51 to 18:14). The meal mentioned in vs. 37 was most likely in a home in Perea. There were Pharisees living there. Some of the sayings of our lesson are largely parallel with Christ's denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees found in Matt. 23. The content of the truths which Christ spoke is far more important than the place where they were spoken.

Inconsistent Religious Leaders vss. 37-48

The record of Christ's talk as given by Luke is probably an abbreviated one. Likely there were further antagonistic sayings on the part of the Pharisees which led Christ to speak His woes against them. He sets forth their religious inconsistencies and their unworthy tempers and deeds, in definite and strong terms. A Pharisee invited Jesus "to dine with him" (vs. 37). The motive is not stated, but his Pharisaic prejudices appear at the very beginning (vs. 38). Jesus failed to wash His hands in the ceremonial process as prescribed by the rabbinical traditions so greatly followed by the strict Jews. It was not at all a question of Christ's hands being actually unclean.

The Pharisees gave scrupulous attention to external cleansing and washing (Mark 7:4) according to ceremonial traditions, but neglected cleansing of the heart and the inner life (vs. 39). They were morally unclean within. This revealed itself in outward acts of wickedness. Scrupulous religious observance does not always guarantee a clean heart. True religion flows from a deep inner heart source. God, who made our bodies, made also the soul which dwells within the body. He expects the heart to be kept pure and clean fully as much so as the body (vs. 40). He looks at the heart. Christ bids the Pharisees to be generous in heart, in almsgiving; to give their hearts in godly service; then the ceremonial cleansing will not be needed.

The Pharisees tithed the trivial garden herbs, but they neglected justice and the love of God in their dealings with fellow-men (vs. 42). Jesus does not condemn tithing. He does denounce the neglect of essentials. They sought the seats nearest to the pulpit in the synagogues. Most of the worshipers in our churches today do not do this; they fill the rear seats first. The Pharisees were like unmarked graves which people might walk over unawares and so contact ceremonial defilement. Within the Pharisees there was unsuspected corruption.

The lawyers were the learned interpretors and teachers of the Mosaic law, the theologians of Christ's day. They were hair-splitters and spent much time in multiplying ceremonials until the simple rites of the law, based on love to God and to man, became a very grievous burden (vs. 46). They had ways of evading the burdens which they imposed upon others. They were like their fathers in spirit. Christians frequently are strong in emphasis upon secondary matters, while like the Pharisees, they are largely indifferent to weightier matters.

The Key of Knowledge vss. 52-54

The lawyer was symbolically admitted to his office of "doctor of the law," by the delivery of a key. His work was to open the door to the house of truth, so people could learn and know it. They claimed a monopoly of the power to interpret, and by their false explanations of Scripture and by laying most emphasis on the wrong things, they had obscured the will of God. They had really closed the Scriptures and hindered people who were entering into fuller knowledge of the kingdom. Their teaching was religiously shallow and misleading. They did not understand the fundamentals of true religion. Jesus' words aroused a growing opposition. When religion becomes effective in influencing lives, the world begins to take notice. When the Church speaks freely what it believes to be the mind of God for its own generation, opposition may arise.

When is outspoken criticism warranted?

How are some people of today like the Pharisees?

How can we be a distinctive people without appearing to be self-righteous?

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas: Rev. C. H. Dirks, pastor, recently conducted services at the Hebron Mennonite Church near Buhler, Kansas. A recent special offering for the C. P. S. camps amounted to $64.80. Various groups in the church are contributing for this purpose. This home mission church also takes one dollar out of the regular church offerings for this important work. The church is working hard to meet its quota. May other home mission churches do as well.

—Eastern District Conference: The 144th session of this conference will be held in the First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa., April 30-May 3. At a recent quarterly conference Rev. Olin Krehbiel read a paper on "Mennonite Principles and Their Application Today."

—Rev. W. C. Voth has enrolled at Bethel College for the spring quarter to take special work in the department of education. He has finished the deputation work among our conference churches in the United States and Canada, and the Foreign Mission Board is now giving him this opportunity for further study before taking up other church work until it is again possible to return to China.

—First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa. A resolution adopted at the annual congregational meeting reads, "Be it resolved, that any member of the First Mennonite Church of Allentown, Pa., who contributes nothing to the support of the Church and who does not attend at least one communion service during any calendar year, shall have his name taken from the active list of church members and placed on the inactive list; provided, however, that if a member can give a satisfactory reason to the spiritual council for not having contributed or for not having attended at least one communion service during the year, such member shall remain listed as an active member."

—Church papers: Rev. J. M. Suderman, secretary of the Board of Publication estimates that printing costs are now fifty to sixty per cent higher than formerly. A recent investigation showed that it costs $1.35 a year to publish one copy of the Bundesbote. New subscribers or those whose church has adopted the 100 per cent subscription plan get it for $1.00 a year. Thus, they get it considerably below the cost of publication. Rising paper and printing costs make it clear that our church paper prices are such that everyone should avail himself of them. Furthermore, it is evident that our publication work is not a business but a mission enterprise. It exists for the promotion of our conference work and as such is entitled to the loyal support of all our churches. The present circulation of The Mennonite is approximately 3,100.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: (Rev. Walter H. Dyck, pastor.) "Our 100 per cent subscription list is being mailed this week. It includes 79 Mennonite (48 old and 31 new) and per cent subscription list is being mailed this week. 73 Bundesbote (66 old and 7 new) subscriptions. New readers may pay their $1.00 to one of the correspondents. If you cannot afford it, the church will assume the cost." "The C. P. S. camp at Weeping Water (Nebraska) opens April 22. Erwin Goering, the director, states that the full number will arrive the first day. It is the ninth Mennonite camp to open."

—Rev. J. N. Smucker, pastor of the Bethel College Mennonite Church, North Newton, Kansas, conducted services in the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, during the first half of Passion Week.

—The Bethel College Memorial Hall was dedicated on March 22. Rev. C. E. Krehbiel stated in his remarks that if the next General Conference will be held in this hall, it will be the first time that the conference will convene in a Mennonite "hall," for thus far the Mennonites have not had any hall spacious enough for such a meeting.

—A recent report has it that Brother and Sister F. J. Isaac are at Trinidad and will soon enter the United States.

—THE STORY OF THE MENNONITES by Dr. C. Henry Smith can be had from the Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Indiana, for $2.50.

—Bible Week at Bethel College was again greatly enjoyed by the goodly number who attended. Dr. Trueblood's expositions of the Sermon on the Mount fired the mind and heart of those who heard him. He emphasized that Jesus dealt with the emotions of people, as well as with the mind, and that Christian workers today should do likewise. The Beatitudes are wonderful for quieting turbulent emotions. Dr. C. Henry Smith's lectures on "The Story of the Mennonites" gave us a graphic and comprehensive view of Mennonite history. Such lectures enable one to understand better what conditions are favorable to the preservation of Mennonite doctrine and culture and which are not. Indeed, they made us feel that we as a people have a "story to tell," a story of heroic living and dying for the faith delivered to the saints. Other lectures on vital subjects and the ministers conference rounded out the week's program. Do we not need conferences in all our larger Mennonite communities for the purpose of reviewing our Mennonite heritage?

—Harold Gross, a student at Hartford Theological Seminary, recently spoke at a young people's rally in the Upper Milford Mennonite Church.

—Foreign Mission work was supported with $87,999.77 during 1941.

—Bluffton College Booster Banquet: Approximately 250 people were in attendance at the fourth annual Bluffton College Booster Banquet, Friday evening, March 20. This was the largest group ever present at one of these occasions. The number attending has been steadily increasing. About three hundred tickets were sold for this year's banquet.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas: "Contributions for the Civilian Public Service Camps up to March 1, 1942 have reached our quota. They amount to $915.11." This church is also providing one of our church papers for every home represented in the church. Furthermore, it is planning to spend $482.00 for the purchase of copies of the new Mennonite Hymnary. Such action is indeed exemplary. It is inspiring.

—Rev. J. B. Epp reports that he is now at Lincoln and that Mrs. Epp recently underwent an appendectomy. When she is strong enough they intend to go to Beatrice for a while.

Christians and Teachableness

A minister can not do much with a church member who lacks teachableness. His task is like that of a teamster with a balky, unbroken horse which has never decided to pull with all its will. His task is like that of a school teacher who seeks to impart knowledge to a pupil who is not at all interested in learning or is only partly interested. His task is one that wastes his time and energy. His attempts are like unto cleansing the outside of the cup and leaving the inside untouched. Teachableness is a primary qualification for usefulness in the Church of Jesus Christ.

Greatly handicapped is that minister who faces the task of teaching individuals who have never "left all" to follow Christ. Pity the minister who is seeking to improve his mid-week and Sunday night attendance has to contend with the allurement of the movies. Unhappy is the minister who has members that send up money in smoke and then protest against the two dollars which every member is to pay for the C.P.S. camps. Happy is that pastor whose members have "settled" all such matters when they turned from the world to follow Christ and who follow only Him in all things.

Teachable are those church members: Who seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and whose delight in house, furniture, cattle, and car is not above their interest in church work, but rather subordinate to it. Who hunger and thirst after righteousness so much that they neglect no opportunity to be filled with knowledge of Christlike living. Who work out their salvation with fear and trembling, being afraid of worldiness and full of holy reverence towards the Word of God whenever and wherever it is expressed. Whose meat it is to do their Father's will, and who willingly surrender property, home, and life itself to do it. Whose delight it is to meditate in the Word of the Lord day and night, in order that they may become perfect as their Father in heaven is perfect. Who sing "mold me and make me" and then give the Great Potter a chance to shape them. He whose chief delight is in the Lord will be anxious to know Him better and just what relationship His will has to every part of ordinary, daily life.

No minister can have great success in teaching those who lack teachableness. Men and women must be born again before they can and will grow wholeheartedly in Christ-like living. The new birth is a primary requirement for all those who would manifest open-hearted and open-minded teachableness in the Church of Jesus Christ. —rw

Studying the Sunday School Lesson

By Helen Hiebert Mueller

If is is true, as someone has said, that we become good or evil by habit, then those people who have formed the habit of going to Sunday School are taking at least one step in the direction of becoming good, for Sunday School attendance is a good habit. But how many of these, we wonder, have further formed the equally good habit of studying the Sunday School lesson? We may, perhaps, assume that most of those who attend Sunday School read the lesson before going to their classes. However, "reading" the lesson should not be confused with "studying" the lesson. An eight-year-old child will be pretty well able to "read" the scripture text. "Study" implies that we give concentrated attention to the subject at hand. It means that we put forth conscious effort to acquire knowledge. It suggests that we ponder and meditate on the matter. A person preparing to enter any of the professions knows that genuine effort will be required if he expects to master his subject. Should we not be as zealous in acquiring knowledge which will help us to greater fullness of life? How, then, can we get the most out of these weekly sessions where we may learn to live abundantly? And the answer is, pure and simple, "By putting the most into your preparation."

On Sunday afternoon or evening let us begin our study for the following Sunday. A week of pondering and thinking on the lesson will help us to see things in their proper perspective. Prayerfully, humbly, with open mind and heart we should read the lesson. Check parts that are puzzling. Mark precious verses. Read related scripture passages. Then do a little "research." Get information regarding the historical background of the lesson. What customs, what habits, what physical and natural environment influenced the characters in the lesson? If, for instance, the text is an excerpt from the prophetic books of the Old Testament, learn something of the social, economic, and political conditions which impelled the prophet to speak as he did; study the effects of his message on the people of that day. Consider how his message may be helpful to us today in solving the particular problems and difficulties we experience.

This kind of preparation will enable us to share with others worthwhile thoughts which come to us. And we may be assured that thoughtful and sincere study of God's Word will set our feet in the path which leads to richer, fuller life. —Enid, Oklahoma

What if They Say

What if they say, "Didn't Jesus say that 'ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars'?" (Mathew 24:6)

It seems strange that Christians will quote this prophetic utterance of our Lord with the implied purpose of sanctioning participation in carnal warfare.

In the Olivet discourse (Matthew, Chaps. 24-25) Jesus tells His disciples something of what they shall expect during the Church age. The growth of the true body of Christ is attended by the appearances of false Christs, wars, famines, pestilences, and persecutions. Unless this is clearly understood many would become either overconfident or discouraged. The church at its best never has "easy sailing." The blood of the martyrs still is the seed of the Church.

Twenty times the words "shall" and "must" are used in this context. History presents ample evidence of Christ's accuracy in foreseeing and foretelling the course of this age.

A casual reading of the Matt. 24:4-14 passage leaves no doubt as to what Christ intended to say. He was not urging us to follow false Christs when He said, "Many shall come in my name." (vs. 5) He was not happy about famines when He said, "there shall be famines." (vs. 7) He was not indifferent about disease when He said that pestilence would come. (vs. 7) He was not welcoming persecution when He said," "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you." (vs. 9) He did not advocate evil by saying, "iniquity shall abound" (vs. 12); neither did He encourage laxity in Christians by saying, "the love of many shall wax cold" (vs. 12)

The purpose was warning, comfort, and encouragement for Christians. "Take heed that no man deceive you" (vs. 4) "See that ye be not troubled" (vs.6) "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved" (vs. 13) How dare we plead ignorance in the light of such a clear description of this age. How dare we teach from this passage what Christ plainly did not mean to imply? —Walter H. Dyck

TEACHER'S COVENANT

To be the King's teacher means love, prayer, service, self-sacrifice. Believing that the guiding of immortal souls in the way of the Kingdom of Heaven is an end that is worthy of the best I have, I hereby solemnly covenant, as a teacher in the Sunday School of my church:

First—to attend Sunday School regularly, rain or shine, hot or cold, allowing nothing but sickness or absence from home to keep me away.

Second—to notify my superintendent the day before in case of unavoidable absence.

Third—to be punctual.

Fourth—to give as much time as necessary, through the week for careful preparation of the lesson.

Fifth—to bring an offering each Sunday.

Sixth—to cooperate in all the excercises of the Sunday School and with all the plans of the superintendent.

Seventh—to be, if possible, a regular attendant at the workers' meeting.

Eighth—to give all the time that I can to visiting my pupils during the week, and to getting in touch with absentees each week.

Ninth—to pray for the Sunday School in all its departments, for all officers and teachers, for the children and the homes from which they come. I will also pray for the indwelling and guidance of the Holy Spirit that He may speak through my lips.

With the help of God, I will faithfully keep these promises.

"Lord preserve me calm in spirit
Gentle in commands,
And watchful that I speak not
Unadvisedly with my lips,
Moderate in my purposes,
Yielding in my temper,
And at the same time steadfast
In my principles. Amen."

COMFORTING INFORMATION

Through the Foreign Missions Conference we learn that the "Special Division" of the Department of State in Washington has completed arrangements for financial assistance to American nationals, so that they may receive from the Swiss representatives monthly payments corresponding to their established needs and the prevailing cost of living in the country concerned.

The missionaries who received such payments give receipts for them, which are considered promissory notes to be paid either by themselves or by the Boards.

While the Japanese are responsible to feed and care for all that are interned, the Swiss are permitted to give them additional aid as needed. For this purpose we are depositing now $1500 with this Special Division of the Department of State, as suggested by them, for the next six months. These payments will be repeated as needed, because the Board feels for their welfare and does not expect the missionaries later to pay back what they receive in this way.

From what we hear about our neighboring missionaries, the Nazarenes at Tamingfu, that they are interned, we conclude that ours are also interned.

Bro. and Sister Isaac arrived at home safely April 2nd. There is special reason to praise the Lord for this. They were pursued by the enemy, and the ship ahead of them, as well as the one following them, was attacked. Bro. Isaac has promised to send in a report of the trip soon.

MENNONITE MEETING HOUSES

By J. Winfield Fretz

Traditionally, Mennonites have referred to their chief religious organization as a meeting house rather than a church. This is still the practice in some sections of the country and in some branches of our denomination. As a little boy I used to think there was something vastly different between a church and a meeting house. In our family we talked on Sunday morning of going to die Versammlung, while our Lutheran neighbors spoke of going to their Kirche. One of the ways one could always distinguish a Mennonite meeting house from a Lutheran or most any other church was the fact that the meeting house had no church steeple, tower, or bell. The absence of these things on Mennonite houses is significant. It is not an accident that it is so. The practice goes back to the early days of Mennonite history when Mennonites were forbidden by law to have steeples and bells. In fact, for many years Mennonites in Europe were forbidden to have any church buildings whatsoever. They had to meet in private homes or in open fields or in woods and that often in secret. When they were finally permitted by law to erect buildings they had to place them on back streets and out of the way places so that they would not attract attention. This is why bells and steeples were prohibited.

Our forefathers accepted these restrictions without protest because they did not interfere with a genuine worship service. They believed the spirit of God would be present no matter how meagre and plain the surroundings of the meeting place. True Christians, they thought, did not need to be summoned to the house of worship with a bell. It is likely that Mennonites would not have installed church bells even if they had not been prohibited, because bells reminded them too much of their persecutors, the Catholic and state churches. Thus partly because of necessity and partly because of a belief in the simple life Mennonites cultivated the practice of erecting plain meeting houses without artistic flourish.

Other Churches Imitated

In recent years many Mennonite communities that remodeled old buildings or erected new ones have forsaken the traditional architectural pattern of the Mennonites and have imitated the architectural style of the larger Protestant and Catholic churches in general. One finds Mennonite churches today with church towers, steeples and bells, stained glass windows, wood carvings and many other adornments that do not bespeak the philosophy of religious simplicity. The tendency to follow the architectural pattern as well as the more elaborate order of service of the larger Protestant churches explains, in part, our tendency to think of our religious organizations and houses of worship in terms of a formal church service instead of a religious meeting. The word Versammlung literally means an assembly, a coming together of people with common ideals and a common purpose. A Sunday morning service should be just that, an assembly of Christians who meet for the purpose of fellowshipping with God and with each other in a common spirit.

It seems to me that Mennonite ideals are worth preserving and worth perpetuating. The surest way to lose these ideals is to follow non-Mennonite patterns. The surest way to keep them is to erect houses of worship and follow orders of service that are expressive and symbolic of Christian ideals of simplicity and personal piety. There can be beauty even in simplicity. We need some external symbols to remind us of our distinctive ideals. The more frequent use of the term "meeting house" in referring to our houses of worship would help to remind us of these ideals.

It is significant to call attention to the fact that Mennonite simplicity both in type of buildings and in orders of service have been preserved to a greater degree in our rural communities than by our people who live in the larger towns and cities. The pressure of city influences tend to dilute Mennonite ideals to the point where they become almost identical with the general Protestant pattern.

WAYSIDE CONVERSATIONS

Luke 13:22-35

TOPIC: Requirements for Christian Discipleship
Entrance into the Kingdom

These "wayside conversations" are upon different subjects which are not definitely in unity. Jesus was going in the general direction of Jerusalem and teaching from village to village. This was not His last journey to that city. The days of His public ministry were drawing nearer to a close. He had declared that but few, comparatively, would be saved. One now asks Him if that be really so (vs. 23). Many persons are more inquisitive as to who shall be saved, than they are concerned about how they personally shall be saved. Jesus does not answer the question directly, but instead gives a practical exhortation implying that few will to be saved. He turned the people's attention from speculative curiosity to their personal responsibility to "strive to enter in at the strait gate." There can be no salvation without this entrance which means undergoing a change in the inner man—being born again. It is true that we enter the kingdom through believing in Christ. However, before one can truly trust Him for salvation, there must be repentance, which includes a forsaking of sin. Jesus' main point is that one needs to be thoroughly in earnest in seeking entrance into the kingdom. Many have some desire to be Christians, but never really strive. Their convictions are weak, their desires are too cold. They are not willing to follow Christ. The gate of repentance and self-denial is too narrow for them. Half-hearted people can not enter.

There is a day coming when Christ, the Master of the house, will rise up and shut the door, the gate of entrance to those who have refused to enter (vs. 25). The door of mercy and grace is open now. There is a judgment day coming (Matt. 7:22, 23). They who exclude themselves, who abuse the privileges of entrance, will not be recognized when they knock and call at the closed door (vss. 25-28). When it is too late, they will see the fate they brought upon themselves. The true and the faithful will have a place in the kingdom.

The kingdom of God is for all who will permit Him to rule over their hearts. People of every tribe, nation, and race have come and are coming and entering into the privileges of the kingdom of grace. Christianity is the only religion on earth which is adapted to all peoples and makes a truly universal religion. People from all over the earth will sit down to the heavenly banquet which God has provided (vs. 29). All earthly distinctions will disappear in the heavenly realm. Many Gentiles, last in privilege, shall be first in reward, while many Jews shall be left out (vs. 30).

Rejection of Kingdom

The Pharisees suddenly became concerned about Jesus' welfare (vs. 31). Likely Herod was eager to have Jesus leave Perea. The Pharisees were eager to have Him come to or near Jerusalem where they could prosecute Him. He saw through their shallow device and sent a message to the crafty Herod. Jesus had a definite work to do for a short time longer; then He would leave (vs. 32). Calmly, deliberately, He went on, unmoved by Herod's threat, and then toward Jerusalem to end His course there (vs. 33). Jerusalem, the city of greatest privilege, had been the slayer of the prophets. Jesus had yearned to win Jerusalem—the Jewish people—to Himself, but they stubbornly refused to yield (vs. 34). He longed to teach them the way of life. The religious leaders of the Jews would not accept Jesus' message nor believe in Him. This rejection led to the loss of nationality and desolation of the city by the Roman armies forty years later. Discipleship requires acceptance of Jesus, a surrender of heart and will to Him. It requires bearing a cross for His sake and faithful living and witnessing for Him.

How must one "strive" in order to be a true disciple of Jesus?

Why do men reject Jesus?

Why will some who "seek to enter in" not be able to do so?

CORRESPONDENCE

NEWPORT MENNONITE CHURCH

Newport, Washington

"O praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people. For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever. Praise ye the Lord." Ps. 117

Our church attendance has been fair this winter. Christian Endeavor is held in the afternoon during the winter months so that the members can attend better. On February 27 we enjoyed a visit by Willis Rich (field representative of Bethel College). Especially did we enjoy the information about the C.P.S. camp which he brought to us.

We have not been able to meet for Bible study and prayer meeting because of the bad roads. On March 5, Rev. Calford and Mr. Kind from Calgary, Alberta, were with us. They conduct a radio broadcast in sermon and song every morning. We had planned to have evangelistic services this spring. We asked four or five ministers of the Pacific District to come. However, we found no one who was able to come, so we will wait till early summer.

A group of men are busy finishing the interior of the church building. Some of the siding was put on several weeks ago. They will finish with this as soon as the weather permits. —Mrs. Henry Hiebert, Corr.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Winton, California

We were very happy to have Rev. W. A. Regier of Los Angeles conduct a series of meetings here in February. We know that God's blessings are resting upon those meetings and that the whole community will feel the results of them.

Mr. Willis E. Rich, representative of Bethel College, was in our midst on February 15 and gave us a lot of interesting information about our college. We hope to see several young people, whose interest has been aroused, go there this fall. On Sunday, February 22, Dr Langenwalter of Reedley visited our congregation and gave two inspiring sermons.

Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Glanzer and son and daughter motored to Dinuba last Monday to visit their oldest son and family. It was a farewell meeting as the youngest son has been called into the service of the government. Mrs. Leah Heppner, Corr.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Fortuna, Missouri

On March 1 our pastor, Rev. Leonard Metzker, was ordained into the Christian ministry. The service was in charge of Rev. William Penner, Wayland, Iowa, president of the Middle District Conference. After a fervent prayer of consecration by Brother Penner, Rev. Harvey Nunemaker installed Brother Metzker as pastor of our church.

At the noon hour dinner was served in the basement of the church. In the afternoon Rev. Nunemaker spoke, and Rev. Penner spoke in the evening. This blessed day will be long remembered by our church. Will the readers, please, remember our pastor and our church in prayer. —P. P. Hilty, Corr.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

Report by Charles B. Dirks

Since the roads have opened this spring I have been very busy serving various places. They are Teddingston, about twenty-five miles from here; Lost River, about thirty miles from here, and Petaigan, about forty-six miles from here.

I have been to Pas Trail, about twenty miles from Petaigan. Here are some isolated German families. We were at Hague Hall (Chortitz) for a week. We were also a week at Langham, and the remainder of the time we spent in the north. During the two months we had thirty-two meetings, and we visited many homes, as many as four a day. We traveled a little more than 1,500 miles in the two months. Many souls have come closer to Him, who alone, is love; a few have taken a definite stand for Him. We have had a blessed time and we praise Jesus for it.

In our service here now, we are serving, of course, Teddington mostly. On each Sunday morning the German service is preceded by Sunday School and prayer meeting. An English service is held on a Sunday night, once every three weeks. Our meeting house is not sufficiently large to accomodate all who come for this service. Once in three weeks we have young people's meetings.

This coming Sunday, God willing, I will conduct German services in the morning, visit the Christian's Prayer Group in the afternoon, and conduct an English service in the evening. We leave at 8:30 in the morning and do not get back until 10 o'clock at night. We thank the conference (General Conference through the Home Mission Board) for the support which it so kindly gives us.—Ridgedale, Saskatchewan, Sept. 11, 1941

CALVARY MENNONITE CHURCH

Mechanics Grove, Pa.

We are indeed happy for the goodness of the Lord which has been manifested in many ways. Materially, He has supplied our every need; health He has given us above the ordinary, and spiritually we may apply the Scripture, "According to your faith be it unto you."

During the year seventy-seven sermons were preached, about forty prayer meetings were held, and the Sunday School class was taught forty-nine times. Visitation was a little less than last year. Eight souls were received into the church fellowship, five by baptism and three by letter. In so far as numbers are concerned those taken into church fellowship are regular in attendance. They have been in the past, and we hope that they will be in the future too.

At the annual meeting all church officers were re-elected and decisions were made to purchase a new carpet for the vestibule, investigate the matter of new lamp shades, and to consider the improvement of the drive-way. We also decided to invite Rev. Rowan Pearce for special meetings in the fall. The Ladies' Missionary Society, although not yet directly involved in church activity, is doing good work. They contribute to various causes and do necessary sewing. They also render an annual program.

The C.E. and the Missionary Society are in good condition. Perhaps, if I were a better booster, financial contributions might be larger.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska

APRIL 19—Thou wilt be missed because thy seat will be empty. I Sam. 20:18.

The empty pew has an eloquent tongue. Though its message is unpleasant it is one that all may hear. To the preacher the empty pew says, "Your sermon is not worth while." To the visitor it whispers, "You see, we are not quite holding our own." To the treasurer it shouts, "Look out for a deficit." To the stranger who is looking for a church home it suggests, "You better wait a while." To the members who are present it asks, "Why don't you go visiting next Sunday too!" The empty pew speaks against the service. It kills inspiration and smothers hope. It dulls the fine edge of zeal. The empty pew is a weight. The occupied pew is a wing.

APRIL 20—Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall. Prov. 16:18. When self-consciousness becomes exaggerated it gives rise to pride of self. Man begins to think about his own importance and wonders how it will effect him. Like a great human octopus the proud man sucks everything into his own system to swell his own person. Have we ever thought that even the mildest form of sensitiveness is a form of pride? The constant consciousness of being wronged wears one out as friction wears a machine. Sensitiveness is the arch-enemy of a man's peace. Pride is self-destruction.

APRIL 21.—The Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost. Luke 19:10. The man who had charge of the jail at Philippi came suddenly to see his sin, and to believe on Christ as his saviour. No matter how long the course may have been working together to bring a man or woman to the point, every conversion, or turning is at the last sudden. It comes when we choose Christ as our saviour, and the decision is always but the work of a moment. A person living without Christ, as did the jailer, and who comes out of darkness into light, will always marvel at the grace of God. Moody used to say that Zacchaeus' was a sudden conversion. He was converted between the limb and the ground.

APRIL 22—And above all things have fervent charity among yourself: for charity shall cover the multitude of sin. I Pet. 4:8.

There are two great commandments. One is to love the Lord our God with all our hearts. The other to love our neighbor as ourselves. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Hate aggravates and denounces and acts in a most unfeeling and bitter way toward the sins of men. It grows more hateful in so doing. Love covereth. Adam and Eve hid, because they feared. Love will never hide. It does not delight in conversing on the sins of others. Philip Brooks tells a story of some savages to whom was given a sundial. So desirous were they to honor and keep it sacred that they built a house for it. This shut out the sun, and consequently made it useless. Our souls if housed in selfishness will be as useless as a sundial in the shade.

APRIL 23—When his eyes were opened, he saw nothing. Acts 9:8. (RV)

In the Old Testament times there was a young man sorely frightened by an Assyrian army. The prophet prayed to God to open the eyes of this young man that he might see. He saw a sight that would make any faint heart brave. The mountain was full of the chariots of the Lord. Paul on his way to Damascus meets with just the opposite. When his eyes were opened he saw nothing. The question is, in our life's experience, is there anything resembling this situation? Many read only a verse here and a portion there in their Bible. Instead of seeing more they see less and eventually nothing. Why not give God a chance to open your eyes?

APRIL 24—We will not boast of things without our measure. II Cor. 10:13. Often we compare ourselves with others and say, "I am as good as any ordinary Christian." What is wanted is not just ordinary Christians. Wesley prayed, "Lord make me an extraordinary Christian." There is a call today for Christians above the ordinary. They will not be found in large numbers until people adopt a higher standard than the character of those whom they see about them. We must quit measuring ourselves by ourselves, and take the character of Christ as our standard. Christ said, "Learn of me." "Let the same mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Paul never told us to follow him except in so far as he followed Christ.

APRIL 25—The spirit of truth will guide you into all truth. John 16:13. How much we need the guidance of the Holy Spirit in our times! We need the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, not an ecclesiastical doctrine, but a vivid sense of the loving God guiding the upheavels and overturning of our agitated time. God is not the great "I Was" but the great "I AM" moving in the course of today, working out His eternal purpose, no less than in days of old. We have many kinds of powers in the world. Machine power, money power, the power of prayer, but without the power that cometh from on high we falter and fail. Nothing can save the Church of today and make it equal to its task but the Spirit which created it in the beginning and which has guided it through the ages.

FIFTY YEARS OF CONFERENCE WORK

(Paper read at the 1941 Session of the Western District Conference by P. H. Richert)

The Western District Conference is now fifty years old, or to be exact, will be so in three weeks from today, namely November 12, which is the date of its organization. This organization took place in the Christian Church near Moundridge, Kansas, when the first officers were elected, but not yet the different committees.

The full organization took place during the fifteenth session of the Kansas Conference, which, however, carried over its work till the following year, when it held its last session, the sixteenth, on October 26 and 27, 1892 in Newton. This was the last session of the Kansas Conference, which turned over its work to the partly organized Western District Conference, which met immediately after the close of the former on October 27 and 28, and held its first session on these dates in 1892 at Newton, Kansas.

The very first business it took up by formal resolution was this:

"Resolved, that the Westren District Conference is ready to take over the work of the Kansas Conference," with this added explanation, that one of the most important, if not the most important, work of the same was to provide for higher education in line with our Mennonite principles as represented in the "Fortbildungs schule," which was expressly mentioned. The teachers of this school had resigned and accepted a position in the newly-built Bethel College. Consequently, it was natural that after some discussion, it was resolved that the conference for the present drop the Fortbildungs schule with the expectation that the Bethel College Corporation would take over and carry on its school work in harmony with the conference.

It is a noteworthy coincidence that both the new Western District Conference and its predecessor, the Kansas Conference, began their work with the problem of religious education. It shows what a big and uppermost place this matter had in our churches. The Kansas Conference, in fact, was, so to say, born in the first Teachers and Preachers Conference on December 14, 1877, just three years after the pioneers had come into this country from over the sea, and had hardly provided for shelters for themselves and their stock. A conference that is born in such a spirit of interest and sacrifice for the spiritual welfare of its children cannot but have important lessons to teach us for today, when secularism in so many ways gets the upper hand even in the church.

While the conference in this way did not assume direct responsibility and control in the support of Bethel College, it was expressly understood that this was a temporary arrangement.

To keep up the close relation between school and conference, only Mennonites were permitted to become members by paying in one hundred dollars, which gave them one vote, and more votes for each additional one hundred dollars. Another means of contact was to be the annual reports by the college to the conference. Besides this, twenty-five years later, a special plan for bringing closer together the school and the conference was made and carried out, namely, by having the conference collect one hundred thousand dollars for the Endowment fund of Bethel, and thereby gaining one thousand votes as a conference. So, judging by the money invested in the different branches of the conference undertakings, the branch of religious education must be considered the most important of the conference. In 1900 a fund was started for a teacher in Bible and Missions in Bethel.

Next in importance all these years has been the Home Mission work, which for many years went under the name of "Reisepredigt-Arbeit"—itinerary preaching work. Very much has been done by this work, much more than the expenses for it would indicate. Perhaps no other work in the conference has brought so much blessing for each dollar expended as this work among the scattered sheep of the conference. It is hardly overstating it when we say that dozens of churches have been built up and organized by this branch of the conference work. Nor should we leave unmentioned the part which this conference had in establishing foreign mission work in India in 1898, bringing this wish to the General Conference at the time of the relief work on a grand scale during the famine in India.

Another branch of work was taken up at the first session of this conference, namely that of helping to settle difficulties in the churches by a committee on church matters. This work, however, was later turned over to the Home Mission Committee, as was the assistance in the building of new churches when financial help was needed.

From the very beginning provision was also made for such of our poor members who for some reason or other could not well be helped by the regular relief work of the individual churches. A special committee for the poor has functioned more or less all these fifty years.

In 1905 a Deaconess Committee was also created to work up and keep up the interest of our churches in this important work. While the influence of this committee is chiefly through the bringing of reports from the hospitals and homes for the aged, and not through actual deaconess work, it helps it indirectly.

The interest of the conference has not been limited to those undertakings for which special committees were created, but also to such organizations as the Sunday School Convention, Christian Endeavor Conventions, German Teachers Institute, etc., which were invited to bring reports to the conference. Later the Committee for Schools and Education brought these reports.

During the last war in 1917-18 a new committee was created, the Exemption Committee, which did much to help solve the most difficult problems for our men in the camps, especially by distributing information. Experience has proven that, on the whole, the best informed had the least difficulty in the camps. Through the work of this committee not only the sharpest edge of the law was modified, but also its interpretation—just in the nick of time—before it all went into print. There the ground was laid for the present acceptable service in the conscientious objctor camps.

In 1918 the following list of services were taken to Washington by the Exemption Committee and placed in the hands of the authorities, who still have them on file, no doubt:

Agricultural service on government lands
Reconstruction work
Red Cross work not under military control
Forestry
Government irrigation projects
Government draining projects
Bridge building and harbor work
Family relief by qualified leaders in social service
Executives and employees in warehouses for handling civilian relief

In short, any service outside of the military organization which saves and maintains life, and by which national benefits are promoted. We can readily see that the present service is in line with these offered services of twenty-five years ago.

Regarding the growth of the conference in 50 years, the following figures are taken from the reports:

In 1891 there were 17 churches in the conference, now there are 60; around 260 members in the conference in 1891, now there are over 11,000; 86 delegates in the conference in 1891, now 397; in 1891 the conference gave $50.00 for Home Missions now $5,000.00.

One of the purposes of this brief survey of our conference work is, no doubt, to remind us of this and that decision which may have been forgotten more or less, as well as showing our appreciation and gratitude for what the Lord has done for us and through us as a conference.

One of the important decisions was in connection with the problem of training ministers for our churches, namely the resolution of October 25, 1901, which, in translation, is as follows:

"Based on the assumption that it is a firmly established principle of our denomination that each congregation choose its workers through election, the conference considers it right and regular that a congregation give its recommendation for the Evangelistic Course in Bethel College only to such students who have been elected to serve their home church; but the conference also considers it regular that a congregation give this recommendation to such of its members who wish to prepare themselves for evangelistic work outside of their own congregation. The applicant assumes all risks concerning employment later. The church gives with such a recommendation only the permission that he may fill the pulpit, both at home and in other churches, wherever he is called upon. . . .

"The church wishes in this way to hold fast to the principle that no worker can come from a church without first having obtained the permission from the church as the highest authority which we have in our denomination."

If I am not mistaken, this resolution is not always observed, but I may be wrong about it.

Some years ago the conference program had become so exclusively a business program that it, to some extent, became dry and cold. Therefore it was decided to have interspersed among its topics some edifying and inspirational addresses. This has proven very refreshing and beneficial.

That the Lord has prospered the work can also be seen from the statistical reports. The last one, from 1940, contains the following figures:

Members	11,763
Number of churches	60
Children under fourteen	3,675
Members of Senior C. E.	3,044
Members of Junior C. E.	702
Members of Women's Missionary Society	1,499
No. of pastors, (active and retired)	91

Financial contributions:

Local church support	$64,393.00
Foreign Missions	27,171.00
Home Missions	8,295.00
Relief	5,585.00
All other purposes	27,154.00
Total	$132,598.00

In conclusion we give here a list of names of those who held leading positions as founders and committee members, and have passed to their reward: William Ewert, Christian Krehbiel, David Goerz, Dietrich Gaeddert, Jacob Stucky, Jacob Buller, Heinrich Richert, William Galle, J. S. Hirschler, Jacob Gerbrand, Abram Ratzlaff, Johann Ratzlaff, Jacob W. Penner, Heinrich Banman, Jacob Toevs, Peter Balzer, H. D. Penner, Peter Flaming, Napoleon Kaufman, Johann Plenert, J. W. COMMENCEMENT AT MENNONITE DEACONESS HOSPITAL

Having completed a two-year course of training and practice, these four ladies graduated from the Mennonite Deaconess Hospital, Beatrice, Nebraska. An effective commencement program was held on March 20, 1942, at the Y.W.C.A. About fifty guests were present for the banquet which was followed by the graduating exercises.

Mrs. Ursula Frantz, the superintendent of the hospital presided. The guests sang "Star-Spangled Banner." Rev. Cornelius Penner gave the invocation. A student nurses quartette sang several appropriate selections. The commencement day message "Four Reasons for Hopefulness" was given by Rev. Walter H. Dyck.

The diplomas were presented by Mr. Henry Reimer, president of the Hospital Board of Directors. Sister Elizabeth Wiebe, the sponsor of the group, presented each member with a class pin. The closing prayer was spoken by Sister Sarah Rempel.

It is encouraging to know that there are young women who are willing to give their life and service for such a worthy cause. They not only minister to the physical needs of the sick, but also feel their responsibility toward the spiritual welfare of the patient. In a smaller hospital an individual is not treated as merely another patient but as one who needs spiritual help and encouragement. Surely, that is the desire of these who graduated from our institution.

May God bless them as they minister unto the needs of the sick. —Frieda Claassen

The Mennonite Deaconess Hospital of Beatrice offers to interested young women a course in Community Nursing beginning Sept. 3, 1942. This course includes practice in the care of convalescent and bed patients, care of children, household management, etc.

Full maintenance plus a monthly allowance is granted.

The (C. P. S.) Educational Program

By Robert Kreider

Course on Mennonite Objectives

The all-camp course, "Our Mennonite Heritage," is the major contribution of the organized educational programs of the camps under Mennonite auspices. Campers are made acquainted with the richness of the religious heritage which is theirs. They are led to an appreciation of the four hundred year struggle of their forefathers to maintain a way of life. Mennonite assignees study and discuss the current expression of this Mennonite way of life.

The survey or orientation course arose in response to the wishes of campers, constituency, and the Mennonite Central Committee. A keen need was felt for a form of study for the entire camp which would be at the heart or core of the entire educational program. It would unify the camp experience around the central objectives of Mennonite faith and practice.

As originally outlined, the course on Mennonite objectives provides for six units of study. Each unit of study is to be six weeks in length. Class sessions are held twice a week. To indicate the character of the survey course on "Our Mennonite Heritage," the following subjects are the six units of study as outlined by representatives of the Mennonite Central Committee: 1. Mennonite origins in Europe; 2. Mennonites in America; 3 Mennonite principles of faith; 4. Our mission as a Church of Christ; 5. The Christian's relation to the state and the community; and 6. Christian life and Christian service. Alterations in the above outline may be made in those camps with large non-Mennonite representation. Because of the basic significance of the course to the life of the church, all assignees are called upon to attend the class sessions.

As a basis for study, a forty-eight page booklet is being prepared for each unit of the outline by the Mennonite Central Committee. These six booklets will be ready for general distribution to the assignees of the camps. Authors of the six booklets are authorities in their respective fields of Mennonite study. These study booklets provide the outline and constitute the basic materials of study for the course in objectives.

The camp director and the educational director assume the responsibilities of giving well-prepared direction to the "Core" course. To afford capable instruction for the various sections of study, the Mennonite church schools and other church institutions are solicited for their assistance in the leadership of the course.

A prime aim in the presentation of this material on the Mennonite heritage is to guide the study so that it will capture the imagination of the assignees. This calls for graphic presentation of materials and variety in subject treatment. Campers, who become students and disciples of the Mennonite heritage and way of life, may carry this active interest back into their home church and community following their period of service.

Above are the mechanics of the course on Mennonite objectives, but the course, "Our Mennonite Heritage," is more than that. It aims to open new vistas of experience to the campers. The panorama of a great heritage unfolds before them. Courageous Anabaptist leaders move across the stage: Conrad Grebel, leader of the Swiss Brethren; Felix Mantz, early martyr for the faith; Menno Simons, great apostle of Anabaptism. To be seen are groups of Mennonites seeking new homes in America, pioneering in the wilderness of a strange land. Other Mennonites are to be seen trekking eastward to Russia and thence years later to America. All this sacrificial struggle for the sake of the Christian conscience! The assignee-student of the Mennonite heritage begins to glimpse more clearly the nobility of this fellowship of the simple and non-resistant way of life. This is the ideal of the orientation course in the Mennonite camps—to encourage the young man of the church to give more articulate, more devoted testimony to their historically rooted convictions.

Wholesome Recreation

Civilian Public Service camps provide young men with opportunities to enjoy recreational and leisure time activity of a wholesome and constructive sort. A problem in many of our communities is that of discovering recreation of a character consistent with Mennonite standards and ideals. The C.P.S. camps are seeking ways in which a group may enjoy such wholesome recreation for the purposes of fellowship, physical development, and constructive use of leisure time.

Virtually all of the camps have recreation halls, provided with games and sporting equipment. This is for the use of the assignees during their non-working hours. Many of these recreation halls have been planned and arranged by the campers. Camps have playing fields and ball diamonds for the more vigorous sports. Some towns near C.P.S. camps have invited campers to the use of community recreational facilities. Notable has been the cordial spirit of the Young Men's Christian Associations who have welcomed C.O. assignees to their program.

In their leisure time, campers' interests turn not only toward the active sports but also toward the crafts and arts. The assignees have taken up the craft of rug weaving, wood etching, leatherworking, stone polishing, model airplane construction, and many others. The Mennonite Central Committee has equipped all of the camps with such woodworking equipment as circular saws, lathes, and hand tools. Hours of leisure time are spent in the shops making gifts, building furniture, experimenting with woodworking. In certain camps zealous amateur photographers have organized camera clubs and have built such photographic equipment as rooms for developing and printing pictures. Such skills as these, acquired while in camp, may lead in later years to many delightful hours of leisure-time activity.

MENNONITE YOUTH MEETING AT ALEXANDERWOHL

The Western District Young People's Peace Committee together with the Young People's Mission chairman are planning a meeting to be held in the Alexanderwohl church, one mile north of Goessel on highway 15, on Sunday, April 19, at 7:30 p. m.

Representing the peace committee will be Dr. R. C. Kauffman, professor of sociology at Bethel College. His topic will be "Mennonite Traditions in the World Today." Also speaking on this part of the program will be Edwin Stucky, a returned draftee from the C. P. S. camp at Colorado Springs.

The Missions committee has obtained Missionary F. J. Isaac, who, with his family, has just arrived in Newton from Champa, India. He will speak on the topic "Are the Doors Still Open?" Opportunity will be given to ask questions of the speakers.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all. An offering will be received.

GLIMPSES OF OUR MENNONITE CIVILIAN PUBLIC SERVICE CAMPS

THE DENISON, IOWA, CAMP

By Cleo Swope

Young people of our Mennonite Churches might well look with interest upon the Civilian Public Service program of our present day, for many have already entered its work and more will soon leave home and friends to take up its challenge.

As one of the campees at C. P. S. Camp No. 18, Denison, Iowa, I can say that camp life has become a truly new and worthwhile experience for me. Here is a most unusual opportunity to meet many fine young men from many states. Here we are closely associated—living as one large family, learning new things daily, exchanging ideas, and making new friends. In this environment, however, we do not wish to forget Civilian Public Service as a privilege of performing a service for our government during conscription time and in the way our conscience would have us serve. We are happy to close each day with the thought and feeling of having completed a hard day's work of construction.

In traveling over the rolling countryside of western Iowa on U. S. Highway No. 30, you will find Camp Denison situated right along the highway just a mile west of Denison, a town of four thousand inhabitants. Approaching camp on the highway after night has gently settled and lights are seen shining from windows of dormitories, offices, and the recreation center, you might at first think that you are coming upon a small village. However, the rows of lighted buildings and lighted sidewalks leading from building to building tell you that this is not a village but a camp site.

The twenty-six buildings at Camp Denison, erected in 1935, compose a complete camp unit with ample facilities for accommodating a maximum assignment of 150 men. The buildings, all one-story construction, range in size from long dormitories housing twenty-one men each to small storage buildings for various equipment.

Upon arrival in camp each man is assigned to one of the dormitories where he makes his own small individual home (a cot and wardrobe with space for hanging clothes and shelves for storing small items.) Here each individual lives and sleeps with the twenty or twenty-one other men in the dormitory, often having his bed as close as one or two feet from his next neighbor. After the day's work is finished this small retreat offers a place for each to read a book or write letters before getting under woolen covers for eight hours of sleep.

Civilian Public Service, in order to provide "Work of National Importance" for C. O.'s, has turned over, by government agreement and authorization, a number of camps previously under the direction of the Civilian Conservation Corps (C. C. C.) of our government. The work projects of these camps (C. C. C.) as well as of C. P. S. camps, are under the direction of technical engineers from the Soil Conservation Service, a part of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The work projects mentioned above include mainly work in soil conservation, reforestation, work in National Park areas, and game reservations.

In many unwooded areas of the United States, which are rolling and sometimes quite hilly, countless acres of fertile farm lands have been made bare and unproductive by erosion of rich topsoil from fields on hillsides and by the creation of deep gullies in cultivated fields. It is the work of the men now at the Denison Camp to continue the program of Soil Conservation on the rolling farm land of western Iowa. Work projects are situated on farms in the community whose fields have in recent years yielded much fertile top soil to the destructive work of erosion. This work includes such things as building small dams to provide for a more steady drainage of water from hillsides and beyond the dam, planting trees on eroded areas, making fill-ins with power machinery, and surveying farms to inaugurate a system of terrace or contour farming. We look upon this entire program as an important task and as an opportunity to help preserve and maintain the productivity of farm land and thus of rural communities.

Homes represented by the 140 men now at camp are located in Mennonite communities of fourteen states in or close to the North Central section of the United States. The state having the most men in camp is Kansas with thirty-one represented. Ohio is second with twenty-four. Other states represented in order of their representation are: Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Michigan, Missouri, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

Of the 140 campees at Denison, all except 7 are members of some branch of the Mennonite Church. Other churches having members in camp are: Old Order River Brethren, First Missionary, Brethren in Christ, Methodist, Lutheran, and Full Gospel.

The day at camp, except for those working in the kitchen who arise earlier, begins with the sound of the rising bell at 5:30 a. m. By 6:10 those working in the kitchen as cooks and waiters are ready to serve a steaming breakfast as the men sit around the long camp tables. The "ready-for-work" signal at 7:10 after breakfast and morning devotions finds each cot made and the dormitories swept and dusted for the day. At 7:15 a signal "for work" sounds and men going to the project are ready to board trucks and drive to the place of work for the day. Some drive as far as fifteen or twenty miles from camp. The men are divided permanently into crews numbering twenty to twenty-five men. These crews work at different places independently of each other. Each crew is directed by a selected campee called a junior foreman, who is trained for that work by the Technical Service Superintendent of the camp.

Most of the men in camp will tell you that there is always something to keep one busy from the time of the morning rising bell until the "lights out" signal at 9:30 in the evening. This fact is more particularly true since the organization of a number of evening classes and course studies. A splendid opportunity for utilizing spare moments in camp by study and self-application is offered in the various classes planned especially to suit the needs and background of each campee. Those anxious to learn the use of the typewriter meet one evening a week for instruction in typing. Others wishing to learn and practice the principles of public speaking meet together in a class period each week. Many enjoy working with shop tools, and they do wood and metal work under manual training and shop instructors. In a similar manner other classes in First Aid, Homiletics, Art, and Sunday School Pedagogy meet in discussion periods during the week. One evening each week the entire camp meets in discussion of a topic important to every person in camp. At the present time a quarterly study in "Peace Principles" is outlined for discussion in this weekly class meeting.

An important component part of the camp educational and recreational program is the two organized choruses, which have a combined personnel of thirty-five members. The two choruses meet in regular practice periods and offer ample opportunity for both experienced and inexperienced singers to participate in singing good, standard chorus numbers. The choruses are directed by two campees who have had previous experience in this line of work. Several quartets also practice regularly. They have sung in a number of local churches and have also traveled into Mennonite communities to give entire musical programs.

One of the more popular forms of recreation in camp and one which the men find very interesting is the game of ping-pong or table tennis played indoors. Almost every evening after supper when men who work on the project are free, or during the afternoon when those working in the kitchen have their "time off," two ping-pong tables are kept "going" in a close and spirited game of singles or doubles. Although ping-pong is the most popular active recreation in camp during winter, other interesting diversions are shuffle board, hiking (Saturday or Sunday afternoons), checkers, and reading. A small library supplying a number of choice books on varied topics offers many hours of interesting and informative reading to the one enjoying this pastime. Recreation in summer and during the warmer months of spring and autumn naturally turns to the out-of-doors. During this season of the year softball is undoubtedly the most popular form of recreation. Horseshoe pitching also commands an active interest.

To maintain a happy, well-balanced life in the routine of camp living with its many and varied aspects, proper emphasis needs to be given to the religious and spiritual interests of the men in camp. Each morning after breakfast a short period of time is given to devotion and meditation. In this period of devotion, conducted by some member of the camp staff, a passage is read from the Bible and a short practical discussion presented, which thus gives each one a worthwhile thought to carry through the day.

Each Wednesday evening one hour is set aside from all camp activities for a midweek fellowship and prayer service in the chapel hall. Many of the men feel this service holds a very definite place for them in camp living and would be missed very much if not held regularly.

Regular Sunday School and church services in camp are possibly conducted in a somewhat unusual but not entirely different manner from the way in which most of us are accustomed to meet in our home churches. Sunday School classes, under the direction of the superintendent, meet in class discussion with regularly assigned teachers. A new superintendent and new teachers are chosen quarterly, thus giving opportunity throughout the year for many to gain experience in Sunday School work. The church service following the Sunday School hour is conducted by Brother Gideon Yoder, Camp Director, or in his absence by Brother Foote, Associate Director.

We at Camp Denison feel indeed fortunate to have a staff composed of individuals with a background of wide experience and a genuine interest in Civilian Public Service. Serving as Camp Director is Brother Yoder, formerly the pastor of a growing Mennonite congregation at Crystal Springs, Kansas. Brother Yoder also brings with him to camp his experience of a number of years in public school teaching.

The camp educational director is Albert Foote, whose home is in Hillsboro, Kansas. Brother Foote has in the past been associated with educational work, having served as Dean of Men and head of the Department of German at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas. His interest in the finer and spiritual values of life helps make camp life more rich and helpful to each one here.

The position of business manager, as in almost all C.P.S. camps, is now filled by one of the regular campees for a period of service just as other men are assigned. Willard A. Baer, an assignee from Wynwood, Pennsylvania, serves in the position of business manager here at Camp No. 18. Before being assigned to camp Mr. Baer had gained valuable experience in the position of traveling salesman for a large manufacturing firm.

Our Camp Matron is Miss Alida Schrag, Moundridge, Kansas. Miss Schrag is registered nurse, attends to all cases of sickness in camp and sees that proper medical attention is given each individual patient. Her faithful work in supervising the camp laundry and her daily inspections of the dormitories keep us always alert in doing our best housekeeping.

Planning economical, well-balanced meals for 140 working men is the task of our camp dietitian, Miss Katie Yoder, Parnell, Iowa. Miss Yoder will tell you that her job of planning meals for many different tastes is by no means a small responsibility. However, her excellent work in the past has always kept everyone healthy and happy.

After reading about life in a C.P.S. Camp you might ask the question, "Do you enjoy camp life? Is it worthwhile?" Should this question be asked of each individual campee I am certain the reply would be: "Yes, I am glad for this new experience in my life. I am willing to give my time in this work without material recompense as a testimony to the Christian Principles of Peace."

May we then, as young people and as members of a historic peace church, be willing to support and make sacrifices for so great a privilege of living high, Christian ideals in a Civilian Public Service camp.

No. 2 Series of Six Studies
CHURCH HISTORY
BIRTH OF THE CHURCH
Matt. 16:13-19; 21-26
Program for April 26, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Hark, Hark, My Soul!" No. 261; "The Church's One Foundation," No. 273.
2. Reading of main topic, prayer and leader's opening remarks.
3. Question box on Book of Acts.
4. Offering for foreign missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"The followers of the Way met weekly in the homes of believers. With evangelical zeal they daily added new converts to their number. They commissioned representatives to carry the good news of Christ to other parts of the Roman world. They caused the sacred literature to be written which became, in the course of time, the New Testament. In their gatherings they developed forms of worship which became a part of the rich heritage of Christendom. They evolved forms of government and administrative policies which continue to be used by the various denominations and communions today. Their methods of receiving converts and preparing them for membership in the churches should serve today as an example for us."

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Birth of the Church,	Acts 2:1-4
2. Christ, the Corner-stone,	Mark 12:10
3. A new name,	Acts 11:26
4. The body of Christ,	I Cor. 12:27, 28
5. The church in action,	Acts 5:14-16

IV. For Discussion:

1. In what cities did the early Christians live?
2. What work did the apostles do?
3. Discuss Paul's missionary journeys. (Have a good leader for the discussion).

V. Facts for Study:

"The Antioch church, the first one to be called "Christians," was the first church to be composed of people who had been Jews, and also of those who had been converted directly from Gentile beliefs. The Great Commission is about to reach its third stage. The first had been "in Jerusalem;" the second, "in all Judaea and Samaria," and now the third, "and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1:8). Formally ordained by fasting, prayer and the laying on of hands, Paul and Barnabas were sent forth to take the story of Jesus to new fields. There were three missionary journeys, each time Paul and his companions returning to make a report. He preached in Europe as well as Asia, establishing Churches as he went. The last journey was the trip to Rome as a prisoner. Acts of Apostles closes with him in Rome, having the privilege of receiving his friends, and making converts to Christ."

The last words of Acts, "none forbidding him" indicate the continuous progress of the church from that day on till today.

VI. Illustration:

The progress of the church of apostolic days was partly due to faithful and fearless leaders.

A girl of twelve was tending sheep on the bare, peaked hills of Auvergne with a dog she had known only a day or two, a surly and suspicious dog. As evening came on and the little shepherdess thought of returning to the farm, the dog sprang at her and savagely gashed her cheek. The plucky little maid herded the sheep together and led them home, where she explained what had happened, and added, "What luck that it happened at turning-in time!" As the doctor stitched up the wounded cheek, he said, "So if the dog had bitten you earlier in the afternoon you would not have come back at once?" The child looked up. "Who would have tended my sheep?" she asked.

VII. Food for Thought:

Loyalty to Christ means consecrated service.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

Program for April 26, 1942

SHOWING REVERENCE IN OUR WORSHIP

Song: "O Worship the King."

Leader's Talk:

When we worship, we do so because we want to express our love and appreciation for God's love and care. His flowers, mountains, rivers, the "silent sea"—all inspire us with the majesty of His glory and we want to thank Him for the beauties of the earth.

What is the best way in which to worship Him and show reverence to His name?

All of us have seen men and boys remove their caps when the flag was carried by and on other occasions. This was to show reverence and respect. For this same reason we bow our heads whenever prayer is offered. It is well to close the eyes, for this keeps us from seeing worldly things that are taking place and aids us in drawing closer to the Father.

The Chinese people show reverence by removing their shoes. When about to enter one of their temples they do this and then enter in their bare feet. This custom was practiced in Old Testament times as well.

One way the people of India show their reverence is by bowing low. As they tread toward their temples they will begin bowing even when they are still a great distance away. They quite often bow low enough to touch their foreheads to the ground; in fact, sometimes they go many miles bowing low like this every few steps.

It has been said that there is one way in which the young people of Europe are ahead of the American young people. It is their reverence for God's house. Always when European young people are in their historic old churches, they speak only in hushed whispers. They are always quiet and respectful in God's house. Our American young people often laugh and joke and are very noisy in the house that has been dedicated to the worship of God.

Short Talks:

The Prelude

The prelude is a part of the worship service, and as such ought to be treated with more respect and reverence than is generally accorded it. The average person seems to be under the impression that as soon as instrumental music of any kind is begun, it is a signal to start talking. It is just as rude to talk during a prelude as during prayer or communion. Music of a devotional type should be played for the prelude so as to make folks feel reverent and to create a spiritual atmosphere in preparation for the call to worship.

Call to Worship

The call to worship should bring people to a realization of the presence of God and should call them to praise and worship. It ought to be read in a reverent manner. Sometimes the leader may read one verse and the group read one or the call to worship may be read in unison. A poem may be used, or the words of a hymn such as "Holy, Holy, Holy." The best calls to worship are found in the Book of Psalms.

Prayer

Prayer is the very heart of worship, for it is talking to God. The best prayers are those which folks pray from their hearts. It is sometimes hard for young people to pray aloud. Write out a prayer, and when you have made it as beautiful as possible memorize it, for all of us should learn to pray. Sometimes sing a hymn as a prayer or have a period of silent prayer. Of course, we want to use sentence prayers often, so that many may learn to pray. Most important of all, when we pray let us have an attitude of reverence. Let us bow our heads and close our eyes so that we may shut out the world and draw closer to the throne of grace. This material secured from Intermediate Expressional Services and will be concluded on May 3.

THE LANGUAGE OF SYMBOLS

I Cor. 1:17, 18

A SIGN MEETING

A symbol is a visible sign of an idea. It is an emblem; for example, the lion is an example of courage. A complete study of Christian symbols is too vast for one meeting, but a few examples should make you Juniors anxious for more. Perhaps the Cross is the best known and most used. It is the symbol for Jesus Christ, because he died and suffered for us on the Cross. In early Christian days the sign of the fish was a symbol of Christian faith. The following are other symbols: The Lamb—symbol of sacrifice and salvation; Golden Candlestick—symbol of church giving its light to the world; The Vine, The Rose of Sharon, The Rock, The Lion of the Tribe of Judah are symbols of the Lord Jesus.

Encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries will give complete lists and meanings of different symbols used in the Scripture. Many of these symbols are used to show us the character and nature of Christ. When He tells us that He is the Vine, and we are the branches, he wants us to have in our lives, the beautiful fruits of "Love, Joy, Peace, Longsuffering, Gentleness, Goodness, Faith, Meekness, and Temperance." But we cannot bear this fruit unless we live in and abide in the Lord, who is the Vine. Without Him we can do nothing.

The Question Bee

1. Where in the Bible do we find the Lord referred to as "The Bright and Morning Star"?
2. What was the symbol used by the children of Israel in sparing the "life of the first born"?
3. Finish this verse, "I am the true Vine."

The Prayer List

(a) Pray for Christ's return to earth.
(b) Strength to build on good foundation.
(c) Wisdom in doing His will here on earth.

—The Herald, First Mennonite Church, Upland California, "An Air Raid Warden? Yes he (referring to Rev. Earl Salzman) is, 'believe it or not' an air raid warden. What are his duties? To check up in his district that the lights are out during a "blackout." What else? In case of actual bombing, to give first aid, such as helping the suffering, help to extinguish fires, etc. What is the difference in doing this and being an actual soldier? In some ways not very much difference. Technically there are two very real differences; an air warden is not under the military arm of the government. We serve as civilians; second, air wardens are not armed as yet. Some think they should be. It is right here where your pastor dies in his heels. He will absolutely not bear arms to render this service." Those interested in the matter of civilian defense and its relation to pacifism see the pertinent articles in the January and February issues of the FELLOWSHIP magazine and Harold S. Bender's excellent article in The Mennonite of January 27, 1942. In the same issue of The Herold there is the statement. "Our church is far short of its quota for the CPS camps. Let us not forget that $2.00 per member should be paid if our church is to meet her proportionate share." Might more ministers of some of our conference churches point out this responsibility of theirs in a like manner. We very much need such a check-up, for we as a General Conference are still behind in our quota. Paul once wrote, "Owe no man anything."—Dr. Fast spoke at the Upland Church on April 2.

—Dr. Lloyd L. Ramseyer in an introduction to certain "prayer pointers" for the use of the constituency of Bluffton College says, "To be most effective in the service of the Mennonite Church, the college must have a Bible Department which is true to the religion of Jesus Christ as understood by our church. It is necessary that our young people attend the college; that not only their classroom work, but their extra-curricular activities as well, might influence them for good; that the alumni represent in their lives the ideals which are taught; that the college remain true to the faith of the church in every phase of life as well as the relationship of the Christian to war, and that the college be able to maintain a staff of administrators and instructors of ability to carry out these ideals. It is impossible to serve adequately a church divided in ideals and purposes. Only as the church itself is able to agree on the basis principles which are to be taught to our youth, can the college adequately serve the church."

—Bulletin, Swamp Mennonite Charge, "The Bluffton College Spring Ensemble is making a tour through the Eastern District churches. They will be in Bethany Mennonite Church . . . April 23 . . . Members in this group are: Lawrence Burkhalter, first violin; William Boorse, second violin; Harold Thiessen, viola; Arthur Thiessen, 'cellist; Robert Neuenschwander, accompanist."

—Sichar Mennonite Church, Cordell, Oklahoma: The series of meetings held last week (March 15-21) were very well attended. Rev. John Esau is a gifted and consecrated man. We hope that he will come back soon. Mrs. Walter Harms and family are leaving for California this week. Measles are still rampant in this community.

—Mrs. T. H. Kliewer, Corr.

—Rev. Paul E. Whitmer held a series of pre-Easter services in the First Mennonite Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio.

—Brudertal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On Palm Sunday the choir gave the cantata, "The Easter Angels." Rev. Lester Hostetler was the speaker at a series of Easter week services. Luetta Bartel will represent this district at the county "Tellament" contest in April.—Corr.

—Art Landes (Bethel '35) writes that he and Margaret and David (nine and one-half months) are planning to leave Rochdale, Mississippi. According to plans they will very likely become active in some cooperative project in one of the Carolinas.

—John Thiessen wrote on November 28, 1941, "Just a word of 'real' news. . . Day before yesterday a little daughter, by the name of Dorothy Anne, came into our home. She is a very husky, healthy baby. News about the conference in Souderton is very refreshing and encouraging to us. We certainly live in a time of open doors in God's Kingdom in spite of world conditions. Today we expect our daughter, Eleanor, to come home from school on the Himalaya Mountains. She went there directly from Bombay when we arrived in India last May. So she has not yet seen the mission station."

—John Moser, active Y. P. worker of the Eastern District writes, "I would like to suggest as a slogan for the Mennonite Peace Certificates, 'They are twice blest. They bless him that gives and him that receives.' "

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: "The Mennonite Ladies' Christian Service Organization planned a surprise of staples and canned goods to fill the cupboards of the parsonage kitchen for Rev. and Mrs. Donovan E. Smucker before they moved into the parsonage. Members of the Loyal Workers S. S. Class cleaned the parsonage and arranged the articles in the cupboard. After seeing the filled cupboards Rev. Smucker said that he felt he could almost join with Brothers Brenneman and Brown, the grocers in our congregation as a fellow competitor. Our pastor and wife moved to Wadsworth on February 16. However, he has been with us every Sunday since January 18. On March 1 the congregation held a reception in honor of the Smuckers.
—Corr.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, Fifty-six Peace Certificates were recently received by this church. Speaking of giving for the C. P. S. camps the bulletin states, "A good start has been made in giving for the six months beginning March 1, 1942. In this matter our church has done well during the last six months. In general our conference has not done its part, according to an official letter received a few days ago. We are sorry for that."

—Harold D. Burkholder is conducting evangelistic services at the Napier (Pa.) Mennonite Church where George Gregor is pastor.

—Five members of the General Conference were in the C. P. S. camp at Cascade Locks, Oregon, on March 17.

—On March 15 Rev. and Mrs. John Plenert completed six years of service to the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

—The Daily Devotional Messages in this paper are for your use. Try using them. You may prefer them to a devotional booklet. The editor has received a number of favorable comments in regard to them.

—"Other Sheep I Have." Rev. J. J. Plenert writes, "We are out of them (copies of this booklet) and are in doubt as to the wisdom of having more printed. We feel that it might be better if we have something else printed, hoping that it will have as great a demand as this booklet has enjoyed. What would you suggest? Should the committee print more or should we print another kind? What kind should it be? We appreciate suggestions."

—Rev. D. J. Unruh says in the bulletin of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Pratum, Oregon, "You should read one or the other of the conference papers (Bundesbote or The Mennonite) in order to keep informed on the conference churches and the missionary activities."

—Every church member should have paid $1.00 for the C. P. S. camps from September 1, 1941 to March 1, 1942. By June 1 another fifty cents per member will be due, and by September 1 another fifty cents per member, making a total of $2.00 per member for the year. Earnest J. Bohn says, "Each church ought to have some special offerings for this purpose."

—Hendrix College discontinued participation in intercollegiate football last year. The president reports that this greatly aided the development of an enlarged health and recreational program for the whole college.

—Grace Mennonite Church Messenger, Lansdale, Pa. This interesting paper says that the Mennonites (all branches) gave over $2,500,000 for relief purposes from 1914 to 1926, that the Mennonite Central Committee fed between 25,000 and 30,000 persons daily during the famine in Russia in 1922, that Clayon Kratz of Perkasie, Pa., lost his life in Russia in the service of suffering humanity, and that Professor Klassen, now of Bluffton College, but formerly of Russia, designed and made a medal from lead bullets fired into the walls of homes and that this was presented to P. C. Hiebert, the chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, as a token of appreciation for their work of mercy.

—Army meets first industrial C. O. The American Friend reports an Associated Press story to the effect that a Philadelphia Quaker business house doesn't want war orders. "It stated that the five active partners of the 239-year-old firm of J. E. Rhoads and Sons, manufacturers of leather goods, had made a statement to the effect that as Friends they have conscientious objections to war and therefore do not wish to sell their merchandise for direct military use.' This statement was made in reply to a request from the Government that the firm quote a price on an order for defense material."

—"According to Allied Youth, fifty-three per cent of American high school students drink to a greater or less extent," so reports The American Friend. It goes on to say that we have a consumption of fourteen gallons of all kinds of alcoholic beverages per capita per year." Let's not ask God to bless this part of America.

—"A parcel wrapped as for a present makes one expect to find a present in it. An addressed envelope makes one expect a letter. A human life makes God expect a worthwhile life."
—J. H. Langenwalter

—Printer to editor: "I intend to start my John (both have small sons named John) out as either a printer or as an editor to teach him tolerance and humility—there isn't a better method!"

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ."

VOLUME LVII NORTH NEWTON, KANSAS, APRIL 21, 1942 NUMBER 16

Entered at the post office at North Newton, Kansas, as second-class matter. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103. Act of October 3, 1917. Authorized Jan. 22, 1919

Church Members and the Bible

The Bible is the most powerful means existent for bringing persons into a close communion with God and for bringing about righteous living. It is infinitely more powerful than all the bombers, tanks, and battleships in this world. It is infinitely more gripping than the most eloquent orator. It is infinitely more searching than the probing of the most renowned psychiatrist. It is the only means through the power of which sinners can be won to Christ.

As the "world's best seller" it is in practically every church member's home. Often there are several in a home, every member possessing one or more. Children have the opportunity to be acquainted with it from the time that they can understand what others read or tell from it. Passages from it are treated over and over again in Sunday School, sermon, and Christian Endeavor. It is practically impossible for us to have a better access to the Bible.

It often seems as though the Bible has comparatively little effect upon great numbers of those who belong to the church. There is so little reference to it by some. There is so much living that is contradictory to the teachings of Christ. There is often more yielding to pressure groups in the world than to the will of God as revealed in the Bible. Too many Christians seem to get just enough of the Bible to inoculate them and to keep them from breaking out all over with Christ-likeness.

The effect which the Bible has upon anyone depends upon the use of it. Buried beneath the dust on its covers, its riches are like the natural resources of an undeveloped country; they are there, but unused they are of little worth to the living. The Bible is full of inexhaustible food for the whole of one's life, not for the earlier years only. Each member of a young people's Christian Endeavor society was asked to quote a favorite Bible verse. A rather general impression derived from this exercise was that a considerable number repeated verses learned in early childhood, but which were of no outstanding help to them in solving problems that confronted them now. Bible "bottle-feeding" has its place, but there is food in the Bible that is to be utilized for the various stages of life and for varying situations. Just as one cannot eat enough at one meal to last for a month, so neither can one partake sufficiently of the Bible during childhood to last for the periods of youth and adulthood. Living from the Bible must be a continuing process.

The early Mennonites considered it very important to know the Bible, but there was one thing that they considered more important. That was living the Bible. It is easier to know than to do. The Greeks trusted in knowledge. It didn't make them good men and women. To divide knowledge and the utilization of it is dangerous. Jesus said, "Every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand." Therefore, it is of utmost importance that every time anyone opens the Bible he does so with a mighty purpose to carry out definitely in his living what he finds in it. Then the seed of the Bible can fall upon well-prepared ground and bear fruit one-hundred fold. Let daily living and the use of the Bible be bound together, and both will be more important to the individual.

The Bible can and should be used for settling specific problems or questions. In I Tim. 2:9 women are exhorted to adorn themselves in modest apparel. When some high school students were asked for their definition of modest apparel, many of them made modesty synonymous with simplicity and comfort. They skipped the main point of that verse of Scripture, for after all attire may be simple and comfortable, but not modest. Consider Adam and Eve. The sharp, two-edged sword of the Word of God exists for the purpose of cutting specifically and not generally as with a dull, blunt edge. Does the Bible have anything to say about investments, movies, dress, and labor unions? I believe it does. Even though these matters are not referred to by literal terms, the implications are there. Paul's letters to the early churches consist largely of his exposition of the implications of Christ's teachings.

Good and necessary as all reasoning is, the Bible must remain the ultimate standard for all conduct. He who neglects this emphasis is bound to find himself in the humanist camp with a slippery tongue and a rationalizing mind. With Jeremiah we must hold and say, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The Christian's faith must be in Christ and His revelation of the Father and His will as given to us in the Bible.

Because of all these facts and others it is of utmost importance that church leaders and lay members reemphasize the historic Mennonite approach to the Bible, that it is not primarily a set of beliefs to entertain, but God's seed for a new birth and His food for a regenerate life in Christ. History seems to indicate that when people take the Bible seriously, not in a hypocritical manner, but in a cross-bearing way, a spiritual awakening follows. Let us love and live the Bible. —rw.

What if They Say

What if they say, "If you were walking down the street with your wife and children, and a gang of thugs were suddenly to rush out of the alley and begin beating your wife and children, would you do anything to stop it?"

In a recent and much-publicized article, "Should a Christian Go to War?" the writer appeals, in the above words, to self-preservation as his crowning argument. This is possibly the most used approach against those who try to take Christ literally in His, "Love your enemies," as a practical procedure in dealing with the wrongdoer. Let us examine the argument a little more closely.

Firstly, it will be understood that there are certain responsibilities a husband and father has to his family. Sacred is this trust in so far as it is humanly possible to fulfill it. But in these days human beings swoop down, not out of alleys, but also from the air, raining death on innocent women and children. We have reason to wonder how much of one's actual personal safety would depend, assuming it to be proper for a Christian, upon the "wielding of a club." There must be, with every proper precaution, and above all, a childlike trust in God's protection. Can we say, "The Lord is my helper, and I shall not fear what man shall do unto me." (Heb. 12:14)

Secondly, it must be remembered that the above described instance would not be likely to happen unless there had been cause for such retributive action by the lawless. When there is no evil intent on my part I have done the utmost in disarming the aggressor. "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good." (I Pet. 3:13) Or what about the promise, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." (Ps. 34:7) Or if in a given instance Christians should have to suffer wrongfully. The Apostle Peter, who was quick to defend himself with the sword, later recognized the value of Christian suffering. See I Peter 2:19-20.

Thirdly, it should be proved of "what manner of spirit" we are. Self-defense assumes—"either my life or yours." Successful self-preservation proves that "my life is more valuable than yours." Self-preservation may be the first law of nature. But the question remains whether a Christian can "love" another to death, especially since the Christian is "saved for eternity" and is concerned about the salvation of the attacker. May we pray the Lord for a calm judgment, and above all, a passion for the salvation of the sinner, lest by defending our "rights," as well as those of our loved ones, we should happen to send a soul to eternity—"lost forever." "For the Son of man is not come to destroy lives, but to save them." (Luke 9:55-56)

HOW READEST THOU?

It is one thing to read the Bible through,
Another thing to read to learn and do.
Some read it as their duty once a week,
But no instruction from the Bible seek;
Some read to bring themselves into repute
By showing others how they can dispute;
While others read because their neighbors do,
To see how long 'twill take to read it through.
Some read it for the wonders that are there—
How David killed a lion and a bear;
While others read it with uncommon care,
Hoping to find some contradictions there.
One reads with father's specs upon his head,
And sees the thing just as his father said.
Some read to prove a preadopted creed;
Hence understand but little that they read,
For every passage in the book they bend
To make it suit that all-important end.
Some people read, as I have often thought,
To teach the book instead of being taught;
And some there are who read it out of spite
I fear there are but few who read it right.
So many people in these latter days
Have read the Bible in so many ways
That few can tell which system is the best.
For every party contradicts the rest.
But read it prayerfully and you will see
Although men contradict, God's words agree;
For what the early Bible prophets wrote,
We find that Christ and His apostles quote;
So trust no creed that trembles to recall
What has been penned by one and verified by all.

WORDS OF MENNO SIMON

"Oft have I told you, and tell you again, that all who are born of God, rightly baptized with the Spirit, fire and water, as the Scriptures teach, are of a heavenly and divine mind; their sins they bury, lead a penitent, pious, virtuous life according to the word of the Lord. They show the nature and power of Christ, which dwells in them by word and work; they bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, and subdue the works of the flesh; they are useful members of the body of Christ, and labor according to the gift received."

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

KEEPING OUR BOYS ON THE FARM

There used to be a popular song among farmers a decade ago in which one line asked the question, "How're you going to keep 'em down on the farm?" That question may still be asked in all seriousness. For the last twenty years there have been anywhere from a quarter of a million to a million more people leaving the rural communities for the cities than have left the cities for the farms and rural communities. Only in 1932 was this trend reversed and in that year it did not apply to youth. This city-ward trend applies to Mennonites as well as to people in general. We know that the majority of Mennonites going to cities do not establish Mennonite churches in cities or even become active in those that are established. This is, therefore, definitely a church problem.

Why Do They Leave?

Some leave because of adventure; some are tired of the old home community and the restraining customs; some leave in search of higher education; others because they feel there is no opportunity for advancement and success in life by staying in the small community. The majority of people, I believe, do not leave for any of these reasons, but they leave for the simple reason that there is no place for them to earn a living for themselves and their families on the old home place or in the local community. Thus, many of our people are driven from our rural communities in search of work which can also be said to be in search of a living. To say this is not to reveal anything new to the reader. It is merely restating a fact to ask what is to be done about it. Some may even wonder whether this is a religious problem at all and what the church has to do with it. Traditionally the Mennonite Church has conceived itself a Christian brotherhood in which members should be concerned with the welfare of each other. This was interpreted to mean economic and social welfare as well as spiritual welfare because a man's spiritual welfare depends to a large extent on his economic and social welfare.

A Way To Hold Them

Our General Conference has recently begun to recognize this fact and thus to fall in line with an old tradition. In Saskatoon in 1938 the conference appointed a Colonization Committee to investigate the problems of Mennonites leaving the rural areas for the cities. At the recent conference in Souderton, Pennsylvania, this committee reported on its work, and the report was accepted and the committee urged to suggest further lines of action. This is a recognition on the part of our Mennonite fellowship that it has a responsibility for the economic problems confronting a large number of its members.

Our Mennonite forefathers in Russia had developed a unique method of handling this same problem. A number of small communities united to raise a fund for the specific purpose of buying land for those no longer able to secure farms in the old communities. As the old communities were filled up new communities were established with the funds raised. Young married couples could borrow money from this fund to buy, equip, or rent farms in the newly-purchased areas. When these people became established they paid back this money. The fund was in this way built up again for purchase of another plot of land later on. In this way some of the Russian brethren effectively held their young people, as well as their old ones, within the bounds of their brotherhood. It is no wonder that the Russian Mennonites had a natural increase in population from eight thousand to forty-five thousand in less than a century. American Mennonites can keep their boys "down on the farm" if they act unitedly to help them become established.

THE LIVING BOOK

By Jean Leathers Phillips

I have had quite a large garden of perennial plants, bulbs, annuals, shrubs, succulents, old-time medicinal herbs, alpines, and some authentic antiques that are forebears of much improved garden varieties now common. Among them was a certain aromatic plant closely related to the Oriental hyssop of the days of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness and the First Temple. This plant was beautiful to look upon, in both leaf and blossom, and particularly lavish with both blossoms and fragrance. I remember cutting the plant until it seemed there was not a leaf or bud left, only to find a day or two later that it was growing again and ready to offer me more sweet smelling blossoms and leaves.

Somehow I always think of that plant as typifying the Holy Book. I read and think upon a certain portion until it seems threadbare. Surely I must have found and gathered every leaf and spray of bud and blossoms. But a few days later I look at it again, and there have budded new meanings and applications that never had entered my field of perception before. The Bible is a living thing, permeated, saturated, inspired by its Holy Author.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

HOMEWARD BOUND

February, 1942, was the date we wanted to leave India and travel via the Pacific to America. Until then the Pacific was the safer way. About the end of November the American Express Co. urged us to take passage on an American President Liner which would leave Bombay in the latter part of December, going via South Africa and the Atlantic. They pointed out that shipping accommodation was becoming less and less. We took their advice, but within ten days all these plans were shattered by Japan's declaration of war. All sailings were cancelled by the shipping companies.

However, in the mean time we had wound up all our affairs on the mission field and had largely packed our goods. So we asked ourselves, "Is this the way God leads? Does He let us step out in this way only to have us retrace our steps and begin all over again?" We felt that we should first wait quietly, helping on the mission station without unpacking our goods or making new plans. As the days went by this became more and more difficult and one day we began to unpack more. That evening a wire came saying, "Probable sailing American President Lines Jan. 16. Will you go?" The Japanese war apparently had not made the Atlantic route more dangerous, and having committed ourselves to God, we felt to take this offer. Our fellow missionaries speaking through the executive committee also were willing to have us go.

In three days we were ready to leave Mauhadih (Birra) station. This last effort was exceedingly hard for Mrs. Isaac who was recuperating from a serious operation. During the farewells before the motor car bore us away she could hardly remain standing. In Champa she had to stay in bed for over a day. We left Mauhadih on Saturday January 10, expecting to take the train at Champa for Bombay Tuesday morning. On Monday we received a wire to proceed to Calcutta instead of Bombay—that the ship would dock there. We left that same evening and arrived at Calcutta the next morning only to find that a new order had come to the effect that after all the ship would go up to Bombay, and so we had to make a second trip back through Champa, all the way across the peninsula west to Bombay. (Later we learned that the ship had come almost to Calcutta and was ordered back from there.) In the mean time we were wondering in Bombay why our ship delayed its arrival. News of ships' movements are kept very secret during war time. Even now we are not publishing the name of our ship. Twice, before our ship reached the Indian waters, the Japanese broadcast had announced that it had been sunk. The Americans took no pains to disillusion the Japanese on this point.

Well, our stay at Bombay lengthened to three weeks. During this time Mrs. Isaac could rest, and our son, Donald, riding all the buses and street car lines learned to know the city. We attended various church services and learned to know some new friends, but, most of all, we daily scanned the harbor for new ships. One day our search was rewarded, and several days later we steamed out of Bombay at noon under perfect weather conditions. The first thing on the program that afternoon was life boat drill, and that evening we learned what "black-out" means, although we had seen some partial efforts along this line in Bombay.

We found on board 175 fellow passengers and a crew of 138. Normally this boat carried only about one hundred passengers so there had to be two sittings at meals, and the stewards were kept very busy. Among the passengers were people from China, Philippines, Borneo, Java, Sumatra, Singapore, Thialand, Burma, India, Iran, Palestine, Rumania, and Arabia. They were diplomats, journalists, financiers, business men, missionaries, oil and rubber experts, and some officers and men of the navy. As we became acquainted with more and more passengers we began to hear of most interesting and providential experiences in getting this particular ship. For us the boat had suddenly appeared when none seemed available. Some people got travelling funds by cable just in time to be able to take passage. Some found the ship just in time. Some had only a few hours to get ready. Some had escaped from dangerous areas and came to Bombay to find this boat waiting for them. This evidence accummulated to such an extent as the voyage proceeded that it gave many a strong conviction of God's special protection. Some of the crew said: "We will make it—this is a lucky boat—all along we have been just two jumps ahead of the 'tin fish';" but we knew that it was the good hand of our God upon us which was keeping us. Nevertheless, all felt the necessity of explicit obedience to all safety orders of the captain and careful preparedness for abandoning ship at a moment's notice. Usually fire and life boat drills were called in the afternoons, but one morning the alarm came at 5:30. "This must be the real thing," we all thought, and we were at our boat stations in less than three minutes. Then we learned that it was only a drill, but it was a good test of the morale on the ship. There was no panic, and the captain must have been satisfied because he called no further drills at unusual hours. When we were in the most dangerous waters off the U. S. Atlantic coast he informed us that the alarm would not be sounded again unless there would be an actual emergency.

Christian fellowship on the boat was abundant. There were services every Sunday at 10 A.M. and at 5 P.M. there was a Singsong. Missionaries there were from India, Sumatra, Thialand, Burma and Iran. Exchange of experiences among us proved very profitable.

The children added much to the life of the ship. There were in all about thirty-five. Sometimes they so monopolized the social rooms and the chairs (for building purposes) that some passengers were annoyed. On the other hand, all realized that the children could not be kept quietly confined at all hours.

Sailors guide their ships to a great extent by the stars. In the northern hemisphere an important guide is the North Star with the Great Dipper moving around it. In the southern hemisphere, within which more than half of our journey lay, the outstanding constellation is the Southern Cross. When it is in its upright position two magnificent stars point to it from the east. If sailors sailing the southern seas seek out this splendid cross for a guide, how much more will the Christian seek it out, even if he must rise in the middle of the night, to gaze upon it hanging in the southern heavens a shining witness in the dark night, of God's great sacrifice to redeem fallen man.

Our ship stopped at Durban, South Africa, for three days and at Capetown about a day, but no one was permitted to get off the boat at the latter port. Both cities are clean and beautiful. Especially at night do the myriads of lights on the hillsides present an enchanting spectacle. After that we stopped for two days at Trinidad, an island on the north coast of South America. From the day we embarked at Bombay until we landed at New York was a period of seven weeks and one day—a long journey, but we had no storms at any time and no mishap, nor did we see any submarines or enemy aircraft. However, we learned that toward the last some submarines were near us, and one night a ship was sunk forty miles ahead of us and another fifty-four miles behind us.

In closing we want to give this testimony: We believe that we were following God's will in undertaking this journey and therefore felt safe. If we should suffer shipwreck or even lose our life it would be within His loving purpose for us and therefore would be good. However, it was His will that we should all get through safely and see our loved ones again. We give Him the glory.

INTERESTING REPORT BY REV. SCHULTZ

Rev. Albert Schultz, pastor of the Butterfield Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota, gave a course on Mennonite doctrine and church polity at Northwestern Bible School, Minneapolis, Minnesota, during the first part of March. In reporting of this experience he writes the following:

"In the examination of twenty questions I asked one in which I might discover the reaction to our teaching and doctrines. The question was, 'What is your impression of Mennonite teaching and doctrine?' Of the 115 students who took the course I discovered a great interest by all the students. Many had been helped. The Church Polity Class members are seniors of the Bible Department. That is, they are graduating from the Bible course, but not from the seminary. There were fifteen Mennonites in this class, and the other one hundred were Baptists, Presbyterians, Dunkards, and a few from other denominations.

"Of the fifteen Mennonite students thirteen were wholeheartedly for our teaching. Two did not express themselves. Of the other one hundred the result was as follows: Your teaching is scriptural—twenty-four. Can't agree on your war teaching—twenty-four. Such teaching should produce spiritual living if followed —eleven. I admire their convictions—thirteen. Your teaching is very good—eighteen. Too much emphasis on minor and secondary things which is evidenced by the many branches in your Church—ten. I had to take all the Mennonite branches into consideration in this course, and I even included the Hutterites (those in the colonies). This may account for some of the opinions.

"I discovered that this course did much for our own Mennonite students. They were surprised at what we believe and teach. My course was outlined and given under four heads: Origin of Mennonites, Peculiarities of Mennonites, Teaching and Doctrine of Mennonites, and Church Government of Mennonites. For my preparation I used all books on the Mennonites by Dr. Smith, the book prepared by H. S. Bender, and the complete writings of Menno Simon."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska

APRIL 26—For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. Rom. 8:15.

There is a marked contrast between the spirit of bondage and the spirit of adoption. If we were to write the parable of the prodigal son, we would write it differently from what it is now. We would have the son come home some dark night and rap on the father's door, timidly asking to be admitted. But the Bible tells us that the father went out to meet the son, and before he has time to make a confession, he gives him the kiss of peace. There is no consciousness more blessed than to know that God is our Father and loves us.

APRIL 27—I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26:19.

It was not enough for Saul to scatter the disciples from Jerusalem; his zeal made him devise means to capture them in other cities. His enmity was practical. He put his plans before the high priests from whom he received great encouragement. The Lord saw in Saul great powers of usefulness. Saul was arrested, convicted, and converted. The change in name indicates the change in the man. Saul was bitter; Paul was gentle. God has many ways of converting men. Each one's experience may differ from the other. In every life the question must be answered, "What wilt thou have me do?", "What shall I do with Jesus?"

APRIL 28—He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city. Prov. 16:32.

The only useful machinery is controlled machinery. The successful life is the controlled life. Too many of us are content to know as little of ourselves as possible. We are apt to think that the only way to happiness is in doing as we please and getting everything we want. There are many whose living and dying testimony is that in the life of humble self-restraint and cross-bearing they find that peace passeth all understanding, and joy unspeakable and full of glory.

APRIL 29—Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace. Rom. 15:13.

There is in all men a natural desire for joy. It is the quiet of life. Men are willing to sacrifice almost everything in order to obtain this much desired blessing. They travel from coast to coast and in foreign lands in the pursuit of coveted possessions. The joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Genuine Christian joy is an abiding possession that grows sweeter as the days go by. Nehemiah said, "The joy of the Lord is my strength." The world can give no peace even to its most distinguished subjects. There is a line of demarcation between what belongs to the Lord and what belongs to the world.

APRIL 30—Therefore whosoever heareth sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock. Matt. 7:24.

God shall try every man's work, of what kind it is. The true and false undergo the same test. The one comes forth out of the trial purefied and strengthened, the other is destroyed. It is too late to start building a life-boat when the ship is starting to sink. Cyclones, floods, and earthquakes do not give long notices in advance. No flood ever yet drowned the true believer, or washed the foundation from under him. It is not so important to know the ages of the rocks, but it is all important to know the "Rock of Ages."

IN THE MAIL

"Surely no one will say that your editorial on Peter's backsliding is lacking in anything necessary to strengthen us for our 'day of visitation.' Here are some of the thoughts which it brought to the mind of this reader:

"I think that I know just what Peter's weakness was, and I also learned that he finally overcame his weakness and was found 'faithful unto death.' Peter was both unlearned and slow to learn (like myself), but he was at least teachable. For that reason Jesus gave him special attention, 'never ceasing to pray for him.' It seems that his wickedness and backsliding were to correct him.

"And then, so that he would be rightly prepared to 'feed' Christ's lambs and sheep, he was given a special vision in which he learned just what was necessary for man to be acceptable to God.

"One just cannot doubt Peter's love for Jesus, not even when he was following so far off. So it is with this type of Christian. One can't tell them that they do not love Jesus or His way, but it is the work of the Holy Spirit to reprove them. Let's help them more than ever before.

"Another trait of Peter which we must overcome if we would be witnesses of the fact that Christ is risen, is that when we are indignant enough to cut off an ear we will remember how Jesus rebuked Peter, 'Be ye angry and sin not.'

"For if I am to claim my heritage of Life and Peace I must follow peace with all. Certainly, I must not fear the reproach of men, nor be afraid of their revilings. Such fear brings all that are controlled by it into the company of evil-doers. I have had so much admiration for the youths who go to the C.O. camps that I have been overlooking the plight of the one who has not objected. Christians are taught to pray for their country, and I know that they did pray in the last war. In fact, I have always believed that it was the effectual prayers of a few righteous ones that caused God to stop that war. Men make wars, but God causes them to cease. I have heard it reported that a man cannot stay a Christian while he is in the armed forces. I still say, 'Perhaps not.' But still all things are possible with God.

"As a parent and a wife, I have the same problems which you Mennonites are up against by trying to keep yourselves 'unspotted from the world.' And that is why I read and appreciate what I read in The Mennonite."

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Boys in Mennonite Camps

The records at the Akron, Pennsylvania, office list the following number of boys in the Civilian Public Service Camps which are administered by the Mennonite Central Committee:

C. P. S. Camp No. 4, Grottoes, Virginia	136
C. P. S. Camp No. 5, Colorado Springs, Colo.	149
C. P. S. Camp No. 8, Marietta, Ohio	68
C. P. S. Camp No. 13, Bluffton, Indiana	131
C. P. S. Camp No. 18, Denison, Iowa	142
C. P. S. Camp No. 20, Wells Tannery, Pa. (Sideling Hill)	122
C. P. S. Camp No. 22, Henry, Illinois	152
C. P. S. Camp No. 24, Hagerstown, Maryland	22

The total number of boys in Mennonite-administered camps is 922.

C. P. S. Camp No. 21 at Cascade Locks, Oregon, has 28 Mennonite boys and C. P. S. Camp No. 2 at Glendora, California, has 11 Mennonite boys.

Denison Campee Transferred to Akron Office

Otto Sommer, a campee from the Denison, Iowa, camp, has been transferred to the Akron, Pennsylvania, office where he assists in the secretarial work connected with the Mennonite C. P. S. Camps. His services as a member of the Akron office staff are being rendered on the same basis as those of any other assignee in the C. P. S. Camps. Mr. Sommer is originally from Iowa and is a former student of Bethel College.

Camp Henry Paper

Deep River Echo is the name of the camp paper of the Henry, Illinois, camp. Interested persons will be rewarded by paying the annual subscription price of 75c. The first number gives an account of the staff members: Brother Leland Bachman, Director; Sister Bachman, Matron; Brother Ralph Hernley, Educational Director; Sister Hernley, Dietitian; Cornelius Lohrenz, Business Manager. A complete list of the campees, together with their church affiliation and vocation, makes up a large part of the number. A reading of the paper suggests that Camp Henry is made up of a sincere and energetic group of young men.

Bluffton Camp Moves

Plans call for the moving of the Bluffton C. P. S. camp from its present location near Bluffton, Indiana, in Wells County, to Medaryville, Pulaski County, also in northern Indiana. If plans were carried out this removal to the new site, about 130 miles from Bluffton, took place on April 8. The work project at Medaryville will be in connection with nursery and forestry work. The address of the new location is Civilian Public Service Camp No. 13, Medaryville, Indiana.

Organization of Council on Civilian Service

The Council on Civilian Service convened for its first meeting on March 26, in Washington. It serves in an advisory capacity to the National Service Board for Religious Objectors on matters which concern others than the men drafted under the Conscription Act.

April 27th Registration of Men 45 to 65

For those who feel conscientiously unable to agree to unspecified blanket service, the Council on Civilian Service agreed on a uniform statement for its various constituent groups. It is suggested that the following be inserted on the back of the registration card: "As a conscientious objector because of religious training and belief, I am unable to contribute to the national war effort, but I am willing to serve in a civilian capacity along the line of constructive service which will relieve human need and suffering."

An Anonymous Letter

An anonymous letter addressed to this office is quoted below. It is self-explanatory:

> I am just a little worried about the harm being done to the cause of the C.O. by some of our own people and even our own ministers in trying to get boys now in C.O. camps to be released for farm work.
> In our situation, boys who were not even farm boys when they were sent to camp are being recommended as necessary labor on farms. Bitter and unkind remarks have been directed against C.O.'s and already some have threatened to complain to our local board.
> Our government has been good to us and certainly we Mennonites should not attempt to evade this duty of service, as some of these people are trying. They are hurting the Cause by their selfish interests.
> You are in a position where you can protect our cause from such accusations and we who in the last war learned what a C.O. had to go through are hoping that you will do so.
> Can't our ministers be warned of this practice?

This is an expression of the same concern that we have felt for the past while. Unless we accept our responsibilities in the spirit of willing sacrifice, we may forfeit all the considerations we have heretofore enjoyed. We appeal to all conscientious objectors to avoid as much as possible making appeals for deferment. To preserve the cause, we must sacrifice personal advantage.

Questionnaire Changes

In order to avoid any possible confusion in the minds of those who will be receiving and completing the questionnaire (Form 40) in the near future, we call to your attention the following changes in the new questionnaire: First, it specifically states that a registrant will receive notice from his local board of classification. Second, it eliminates under Series 10 the confusing statements regarding combatant and non-combatant service. Many registrants agreed to non-combatant service because in the absence of any reference to alternate service in the old qustionnaire they supposed non-combatant service meant C. P. S. assignment. The new form simply calls for the signature of the conscientious objector under the following statement: "By reason of religious training and belief I am conscientiously opposed to war in any form and for this reason request that the local board furnish me a special form for conscientious objectors (Form 47) which I am to complete and return to the local board." This statement also obviates any argument with local boards concerning the giving of Form 47. J. W. H.

DONT'S FOR CHURCH GOERS

Don't visit. Worship.

Don't hurry away. Speak and be spoken to.

Don't stop in the end of the pew. Move over.

Don't monopolize your hymnbook. Be neighborly.

Don't wait for introduction. Introduce yourself.

Don't choose the back seat. Leave it for late comers.

Don't dodge the collection plate. Give what you are able.

Don't criticise. Remember, and think on your own frailties.

Don't stare blankly while others sing, read, pray. Join in.

Don't leave without praying God's blessing on all present.

Don't sit while others stand or kneel. Share in the service.

Don't sit with your hand to your head as if worshiping hurt you.

Don't dodge the preacher. Show yourself to be friendly.

The Challenge of Life

By Alvin Beachy

In the 17th chapter of the Gospel of John there is recorded for us a prayer of Jesus offered in behalf of His disciples as He was about to leave them in a troubled world.

Read this prayer carefully and thoughtfully and you will see that Jesus does not ask that His disciples be taken from the world, but rather that they might rise above the world. Jesus does not ask to have life made easy by removal of its obstacles, or by a retreat into seclusion which evades them. He is not so much interested in "quantity," as in "quality" of life—a quality of life which is bigger than any thing which can possibly happen to it in the universe.

This quality of life is not achieved apart from participation in all that life may bring our way. Participation is the doorway through which we enter into "creative living," and creative living comes only when men and women are willing to participate in life and share its joys as well as its sorrows. True Christianity regards every difficult place in life as a great opportunity. Behold, it says, I set before you the open door of a difficult place in life. Difficult situations always provide great opportunities for service to those who are willing to accept the challenge offered by them.

So, when some of us are discouraged almost to despair by what we see in the world, Christianity says never-the-less that this is our world, and that we do not solve any problems by trying to escape from it. We must by God's grace rise above it, yet at the same time identify ourselves with it, even as did the Christ.

In order that we may be able to look at life in this manner we must view it through the Cross of Christ. The great paradox of the Christian religion is that it knows not defeat. It turns defeat into victory by conquering the would-be conqueror. It turns the valley of trouble into a door of hope, and out of a Cross and a Crown of Thorns makes an open door through which all men may enter into life.

News Bits

Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, Calif.: The young people's Sunday School Class and the Young People's Christian Endeavor are organized into one department and thus work together in various activities. On Monday nights they call on those who have visited the department and others of the community whom they wish to invite. Wednesday evening the young people have their own Fellowship Meeting. The second Tuesday of the month the church has charge of the evening service at the Union Rescue Mission, 2nd and Main Street, in which the young people take part. The fourth Friday the young people have charge of the John 3:16 mission. This is a great work among the down and out men; it also is an inspiration to those who attend. The third Friday is kept open for their social gathering. After the Sunday night church service a "singspiration" is held. Some of the neighboring churches take part in this. It is an hour of inspiration and enjoyment to all. Young People's Beacon is the name of the young people's bulletin, which is published weekly by their publicity committee. The first one is mimeographed. Since then a printing press has been donated, and they now enjoy a printed bulletin.

—Sec. Y. P. D. (Thank you very much for this interesting and inspiring report. May other societies also send in reports of their outstandng activities.—Ed.)

Eastern District Spring Rally:. The young people gathered in the Upper Milford Church Zionsville, Pa., and heard Harold Gross, a student at Hartford Theological Seminary, speak on the theme, "Athletes of the Spirit." He centered his message on Heb. 12:1-2. The service was well attended.

BE READY

I would be bravely prepared for the worst of sufferings to which the circumstances in this life may expose me. I would be ready to meet contempt and scandal, poverty, sickness, and death itself. Jesus can support me in the heaviest distress, though all the sorrows I fear should come upon me. He can bear me on the wings of faith and hope, high above all the turmoils and disquietudes of life; He can carry me through the shadow of the dark valley, and scatter all the terrors of it. —Isaac Watts

Educational Values Inherent in the Civilian Public Service Program

By Robert Kreider

II. The Educational Values of Camp Life

We have presented a brief description above of the nature of the organized educational program as it is to be found among the several Mennonite-operated camps. However, the organized class and activity program is less the major educational value of C.P.S. camps than the total camp experience.

The intimate daily contacts of camp life—these produce the real educational experiences of Civilian Public Service. Stimulating for the men is the work together in the fields, in the kitchen, in the laundry, in the offices, in the shops. The young men find fellowship at the table and in the dormitories. Together they engage in their recreation and leisure-time activities. Such fellowship contributes to a broadening and deepening of educational and spiritual experience.

We now turn to a discussion of the educational values inherent in all phases of this whole camp experience.

The Value of Common Labor

In Civilian Public Service camps the focus of attention is on the work project. The major purpose of the C.P.S. program is to be of genuine service through projects of "national importance." Eight to ten hours of constructive labor in the field each day can be one of the most eloquent testimonies to the world as to the depth of conviction of the conscientious objector. The projects vary in nature among the several Mennonite-operated camps. Under the Soil Conservation Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, men in certain camps dig diversion ditches, construct check dams, build irrigation and stock reservoirs, build fence, pursue agricultural research. Their's is the responsibility of saving the nation's most vital resource, the soil. Other camps engage in projects under the supervision of the Forestry Service and Wild Life Commission. Trees ar planted, fire trails are constructed, fish and game reserves are supervised and protected.

Of unique educational significance is this opportunity to work with fellow conscientious objectors at projects of community significance. There can be an enriching fellowship and brotherhood which comes from a group of men in common engaging in long and arduous toil. Labor on socially-significant projects builds morale. Common aches, common sweat may serve to make men brothers. Recognizing the value of work, one camp requires all visiting speakers to spend at least eight hours on the work project. There is the beneficial physical development coming to campers engaged in hard physical labor. On the work project men may learn new skills. They may learn the operation of new power machinery, and the use of new tools. The work project may provide basic training in construction work, in agricultural methods. An understanding may be obtained through the work project of the purpose, value, and program of the agricultural agencies of our government. As foremen, campers may learn the art of supervising the work of others. Many are opportunities for the campers to master new skills while engaged in the duties of camp maintenance and administration—the kitchen, the shop, the laundry, the office. Skills and talents acquired previous to camp may be utilized and developed in the operation of the camp.

A wholesome spirit is to be found in a camp where equipment and furniture has been made by the campers, where the buildings have been planned and decorated by the campers. It is morale-building when assignees can take pride in their respective duties and responsibilities in the camp. Letters home to friends frequently reveal that the camper's consuming passion in camp is the significant responsibility which he shares in the work program of the camp.

Building Christian Fellowship

The draft has forced all conscientious objectors to make a great social adjustment. Young men have been rooted out of their homes and community. They have been torn away from their jobs, their associates, their girl friends. Arriving at a C.P.S. camp, the assignees are confronted with the necessity of adjusting themselves to a new mode of life—camp life, life in a masculine world. Judged from an educational standpoint, these circumstances requiring personal adjustment can be character-building experiences. The individual who has learned to live in the new camp environment, living intimately with many new neighbors, has matured ethically and spiritually. The individual, who can happily resign himself to an extended period of C.P.S. service, has met a high requirement of character.

One of the principal challenges and problems of life in the Civilian Public Service camps is that of forming Christian fellowship and community out of the diversity of personnel represented there. To the Mennonite-operated C.P.S. camps come devout young men from various religious backgrounds: Mennonites,

Robert Kreider, author of this series, graduated from Bluffton High School, Bluffton, Ohio, in 1935 and from Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, in 1939. He received his Master of Arts degree from the University of Chicago in 1941. On August 15, 1941, he was inducted into the Colorado Springs C.P.S. camp. Later he was appointed educational director of the camp. His future plans are indefinite, but his major interests are in the field of education. Conscription halted his plans for study at the University of Wisconsin. He says, "I count this period of service in a C.P.S. camp one of the richest experiences of my life."

Brethren, Quakers, Methodists, Presbyterians, and others. From all of the branches of the Mennonite Church there come believers in the nonresistant way of life. Through the channels of the Mennonite Central Committee the numerous branches of the church unite at a common task. Not only is there diversity of religious affiliation in the camps, but also to be found is a variety of educational backgrounds among the campers. There are young men with a grade school education, others with a high school education, others with college training, and a few with professional and graduate school training. Although farming is the predominant occupational preference among the campers of the Mennonite C.P.S. camps, nevertheless a wide range of occupations are represented by the campers. To each camp come young men from many states, from many communities. Out of this religious, educational, occupational, geographical diversity, our Civilian Public Service camps seek to build a wholesome Christian community.

Coming to the camps, the assignees meet on common ground. Together they hold the conviction of nonresistance. The young men of Mennonite backgrounds represent a basically similar faith and way of life. This unity at a common task of service produces Christian fellowship out of camp diversity.

Camp life is a rich experience from the standpoint of learning the art of living together with others. One learns to hold fast to one's own convictions without dogmatism; for dogmatism and bigotry destroy fellowship. One learns to respect the other camper's convictions, his talents, his background, his peculiarities and differences. One learns to avoid unkind criticism, for such criticism undermines a Christian community. One learns the danger to the fellowship of being self-righteous in one's conduct and attitudes. Camp experiences may contribute to the qualities of understanding one another, forgiving one another, overlooking one another's shortcomings, being cheerful and brotherly in one's relations to his fellows. Undoubtedly, one of the finest values arising from the camp community will be the numerous lasting friendships which will be formed.

It is essentially democracy in action, this experience of building a true Christian community. A democratic way of life—respect for the individual personality, tolerance of the minority, willingness to share for the common good. Camp life can be a training ground for the democratic way of life. In all camps the assignees are given a measure of responsibility as regards camp government, camp discipline, camp planning. Periodically, the directors call camp assembly meetings for the purpose of discussing common camp problems. Many have established camp councils composed of representatives selected from the entire camp. Through the council, committees are established to handle specific responsibilities.

Such are the opportunities whereby the campers may acquire a sense of the obligations attendant to democratic living, the responsibilities basic to Christian fellowship.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

No. 3 Series of Six Studies Church History

Growth in Power: Christianity in the Early Centuries and the Persecutions:

Acts 2:47; Eph. 2:13-22; Rev. 2:10

Program for May 3, 1942

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "'Are Ye Able?' Said the Master," No. 392; "Now to Heav'n Our Prayer Ascending," No. 371.
2. Reading of main topic, prayer, and opening remarks.
3. Biographical sketches on life of Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin, Tertullian, Cyperian, Origen. Any good church history may be used. Rev. C. H. Wedel's Sketches from Church History brings a few facts of each of these men.
4. Offering for peace work.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"The story of the expansion of Christianity is a revelation of the "power of the resurrection."

"The early Christians were not content to keep the gospel to themselves. They sent trusted representatives into every part of the Roman world to proclaim the good news of Christ and to establish Christian churches. These churches persisted in spite of periodic persecutions."

"In confessing their Master the Christians showed great courage. They suffered horrible tortures. A few denied their Lord, but the most of them remained steadfast. This made a deep impression upon many of the heathen, especially when some Christians, even in their dying moments prayed for their enemies. The blood of the martyrs became the seed of the Church, and many unbelievers were turned to Christ."

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Growth of the Kingdom,	Matt. 13:31, 32
2. Christ's Commission,	Matt. 28:19, 20
3. The progress of the church,	I Thess. 1:7, 8
4. Triumph through trial,	Heb. 11:32-40

IV. Facts for Study:

As to the causes of the persecutions in the early centuries, Rev. C. H. Wedel's book says: "The Jews from the very beginning were hostile toward the Christians. When the Christians began to increase everywhere, the heathen also began to hate them. Their clean and blameless lives condemned the wicked ways of the heathen. These then invented all kinds of stories about them and said that the Christians practiced shameful vices at their meetings. Because they would not worship idols their enemies asserted that they had no religion at all. Above all, the priests accused them that they aroused the anger of the gods. When an earthquake or a famine took place, or when the Nile in Egypt did not flood the field sufficiently, the people said: 'The Christians are the cause of it. To the lions with the Christians.' But the educated classes saw in Christianity a dangerous superstition which should be punished with death. The emperors, on the other hand, feared that the Christian religion would destroy the unity of the empire, especially since some of the Christians refused to perform military service. When they also refused to regard the emperors as gods and to burn incense before them, they were persecuted."

V. Ilustration:

A soap manufacturer, not a Christian, was walking with a minister. Said the soapmaker, "The gospel you preach hasn't done much good, for there's still a lot of wickedness and wicked people." The preacher made no immediate reply, but they soon passed a child making mud pies. He was exceedingly dirty. It was then the preacher's turn, and so he said: "Soap hasn't done much good in the world, I see; for there's still much dirt and many dirty people."

"Oh, well," answered the manufacturer, "soap is useful only when it's applied."

"Exactly," was the minister's reply; "so it is with the gospel we proclaim."

SHOWING REVERENCE IN OUR WORSHIP

(Concluded)

Scripture:

The Scripture passage chosen for the worship service should be truly worshipful and should contribute to the theme of the service. The person selected to read the passage should be informed in advance so that he will be able to read it easily without stumbling or mumbling the words.

A passage may be read in unison if there is a good leader and certain Psalms can be read responsively. In the Old Testament days the people always stood during the reading of the scriptures. The least we can do is to refrain from talking.

Hymns:

The hymns that are used in a worship service should be studied with care and chosen before the meeting begins.

After the theme is chosen the words of the hymn should be read carefully to see if they are suitable. There are so many hymns expressing such a wide variety of thought that songs can be found to fit in with any theme.

The type of music should be considered. Some songs have such good words, but their style of music is not always suitable. For instance, the hymn "Stand Up, Stand Up For Jesus," is rather peppy and the new tune is martial in style. This would be unsuitable to use just before a prayer. On the other hand, the hymn "Take Time To Be Holy" creates a spiritual atmosphere and prepares the heart for prayer.

Offering:

The offering is another feature of the worship wherein all may share. It should be taken in a dignified manner, with a brief prayer consecrating it to God's service. The instrumental music that is played while it is being taken should create the atmosphere of worship, so it will help us to think of our responsibility as stewards and our power to build up God's kingdom throughout the world.

Special numbers:

Special numbers entertain and help bring a variety into the program, but they should never be used as an opportunity for some one to show off.

A story, well told and in a reverent manner, or a beautiful poem read by memory, is suitable.

There are many beautiful gospel hymns which may be sung simply and with expression. These add to the meeting and are an addition to any service.

Instrumental solos of the right type may be consecrated to the Master's service.

When you ask people to appear on your program, make certain that they understand the type of a special number which would be in keeping with your program.

Questions for Discussion:

1. How did Moses show reverence? Exodus 3:1-6
2. Name some places in which we should be reverent.
3. Name some times when we should be reverent.
4. How should we show reverence in the Lord's house? Hab. 2:20
5. Why should we show reverence toward the Bible?
6. What part of the Bible is the most reverent?
7. Is it more worshipful for a person to read a prayer or give it himself? Why?
8. What attitude should we have during any prayer?
9. Which is the most worshipful position for prayer—standing, kneeling or looking upwards?
10. Is it wrong to use the tune of some good old hymn with different words to make a popular or modern song?

Benediction: Psalm 19:14

GOD'S LAWS GIVEN TO MOSES Ex. 20:1-22

"A Working Program"

We are beginning a new series with the study of the next five lessons. They are all topics that deal with the laws that were given the people, the children of Israel, through Moses.

While the children of Israel were journeying from the land of Egypt to the land of Canaan, they came one day to the wilderness of Sinai. They pitched their camp there before Mount Sinai; then Moses went up into the mountain, unto God, and counselled with Him. The people had prepared themselves, and made themselves pure and clean. There were thunderings and lightenings, and a thick cloud came upon the mountain, and the sound of a trumpet was heard. The Lord appeared to them and gave them the Decalogue or "Ten Commandments."

God is a loving ruler, who looks on his people as a father looks on his children, who makes rules only for their good, and expects their help in carrying them out.

Today we must still live our lives in accordance with these ten rules, if we would walk closely with the Lord and do his bidding here on earth, and walk the "Jesus way of Life." The keeping of the law does not save us, it is our "schoolmaster" to bring us to Christ. When we look at God's law we see how sinful we are, and then we come to the Lord Jesus for forgiveness and salvation. It is Christ alone who saves us.

The Question Bee

1. What great truth was taught about the law in verse John 1:17? 2. How do we often break the fourth law, regarding the Sabbath? 3. On what were the ten commandments written, and to whom were they given? 4. Which commandment forbids us to covet? What things are forbidden in this law?

An Ideal Christian Is

In Faith	a believer in Christ
In Knowledge	a disciple
In Character	a saint
In Influence	a light
In Conflict	a soldier
In Communion	a friend
In Progress	a pilgrim
In Relationship	a child
In Expectation	an heir

THE DAY OF ACCLAIM

Mark 11:1-11; Luke 19:41-44

Topic: THE PRINCE OF PEACE

Introduction

Jesus arrived in Bethany six days before the Passover (John 12:1), probably Friday evening. On Saturday evening, after the Sabbath had ended, a supper was given in his honor, in the home of Simon the leper. Here Mary anointed Jesus. On the next day, Sunday, Jesus entered Jerusalem amid the acclaim of the multitude. Great crowds had gathered for the Passover, and when it became known that He was coming into the City there was much excitement.

Jesus' Royal Welcome vss. 1-11

On Sunday morning Jesus and the Twelve left Bethany, about one and-a-half miles east of Jerusalem and joined those who were going into the Holy City. He sent two of the Twelve, perhaps Peter and John, on an important errand. Jesus wanted to enter the City in an entirely different manner at this time. He desired to offer Himself as Christ, their King. He wished to use a colt which had never been ridden. Such an animal was held sacred, and only such could be used for sacred purposes. He was borrowing the colt. The owner probably was a disciple of Jesus and was ready to lend the colt when he was told that the Lord needed it. We should be as ready to lend unto the Lord that which He needs. Jesus clearly knew supernaturally that this colt was available at a certain place. The colt was brought to Jesus—John says it was an ass's colt—and He sat upon it. Jesus purposed to show Himself as the Messiah and Heir of David; so He resolved to enter Jerusalem in royal dignity. He rode in triumph and in a way suitable to the nature of his kingdom. The horse was an animal of pride and of war, the ass of humility and peace. His kingdom is spiritual and heavenly. Jesus publicly claimed and received the honors as the Messiah, the Prince of Peace. He came in gentleness, not that He might be feared, but that He might be loved for his goodness. The large crowd going with Jesus was unbounded in its demonstration of homage to Him. This revealed the power of Jesus over the multitude. He has gained for Himself the right to rule over our heart and conscience.

Hosanna is a Hebrew word meaning "save now." It had become a term of joy and well-wishing. Jesus is greeted as coming to restore the kingdom of David, as promised by the prophets. In doing this they recognized Him as the Messiah. During his last week on earth Jerusalem's opportunity reached its climax. Was the city as a whole willing to accept Him? The rulers were not ready to receive Him.

Jesus' Lament over Jerusalem vss. 41-44

Jesus was coming from Bethany to Jerusalem. At a certain point at the southern shoulder of the Mount of Olives the city suddenly comes into view. The city with "its imperial mantle of proud towers" was an imposing sight. The Holy City was dear to Jesus' heart. He loved her people dearly. As He saw the city, his eyes overflowed with tears, and a lament escaped his lips. Jesus had shown them the way to peace. He had called them to repentance, but they refused to heed the call. Sin has a blinding power. If Jerusalem had accepted Him and his message in their day of opportunity, there would have been peace instead of destruction. The prophecy of verses 43 and 44 was fulfilled when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans under Titus in 70 A.D. Josephus says that eleven hundred thousand perished in the siege of the City. Throught the centuries since they have been scattered among the nations, and in some lands they are despised and persecuted unto this day. The visitation of grace they refused to recognize, and there remained for them only the visitation of judgment. Jesus presents Himself to us as our King and Saviour. It is our privilege to improve the opportunity to receive Him before it is too late. It is a sad day when any people fail to see the visitation of God. We shall have peace, and many other blessings, when enough people do what Jesus asks of them. Only when the world knows and embraces the things that belong to peace, shall we have lasting peace.

What price is the world paying today for rejecting Christ?

Why did Jesus ride into Jerusalem rather than walk?

Who is really Lord and King in my heart? Is it Christ Jesus or is it another?

"The greatest resolves that have enriched and beautified human life in Christian times have been arrived at in prayer." —Canon Liddon

EICHER EMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Noble, Iowa

On the first Sunday in the new year our pastor spoke on "With God Into The Future." "He will never leave thee nor forsake thee." The future may be unknown to us or appear dim to us. But God knows the future and stands ready to go with us. Paul's interest was in the future. He forgot the things of the past and was concerned in the needs of today and tomorrow. He was continually revising his program. So if the old methods do not work, we should do away with them and apply new ones. Paul had a forward look. He never looked back to the good old days.

When our newly-elected deacon was installed on January 11 the thought brought out was that we should all work together, and that the church should look upon the deacon as a leader. On the following Sunday our pastor preached on repentance. We need to repent often. We should have a man like Jeremiah. Our congregation is indeed fortunate in having a minister who brings such challenging messages. They are very helpful in such a time as this.

During the week of prayer, which we observed, the pastors of the community brought messages on, "Vision," "Intercession and Forgiveness," "Unity," "Affirmation and Thanksgiving," "Dedication and Renewal," and "Praise and Adoration."

The women of the different neighboring churches joined with us in observing the World Day of Prayer. The funeral of Joseph Schantz was held on February 28. Our mission society sent a box of home-made candy and nuts to our boys in camp for Valentine Day. Our Sunday School is sending used clothing to the Mennonite Central Committee. —B. G., Corr.

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Enid, Oklahoma

The first quarter of 1942 has been eventful for the Grace Mennonite Church in Enid. Many of our members have passed through hard places, but God is faithful and gives strength and comfort for each day's need.

Early in January, Glenn, the youngest son of Rev. and Mrs. Harder, became seriously ill. Physicians were unable to help him, and on January 21 he passed away; funeral services took place on January 23. On February 2 the home of the T. B. Unruh family was destroyed by fire. The church members have had opportunity to grow spiritually by helping and giving to those in need. Later during the month Rev. Harder took Mrs. Harder to the Western Oklahoma Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Clinton, where she will receive treatment for several months. In February we were happy to have Dr. P. A. Penner in our church one evening to show us the pictures of Indian Missions and to tell us about the work that is being done there. On February 12 Viola Unruh, a member of our church, and John Friesen of Medford were married by Rev. Harder. The Oklahoma Bible Academy students and faculty gave a program here one Sunday evening. On Palm Sunday the choir of our church gave a program at the North Enid M. B. Church; and the following Sunday evening the Grace Mennonite C. E. and the Mennonite Brethren C. E. from the city church had a joint program in our church. This joint program with the Enid M. B. Church is an annual event and gives the young people of both churches opportunity to become acquainted and to learn to work together. Rev. Harder conducted services every evening during Holy Week. On Good Friday, between one and three o'clock, the churches of the city had union services, held in various places in the city. Our church was one of the meeting places. The talks given by different ministers on the Seven Last Words of Christ were inspirational indeed. Easter Sunday was Rev. Harder's birthday anniversary. The church members planned an informal celebration in his honor, and the Friday before, after the evening services in the church, everyone met in the church basement for a brief social hour. Our church has had several special offerings for C.P.S. Camps. We are happy that we have now received practically enough contributions to meet our quota until August 1.

We look into the future with trust and confidence, knowing that our Heavenly Father will supply all our needs and will care for us as He cares for all His children everywhere. —Helen Hiebert Mueller

EDEN MENNONITE CHURCH

Moundridge, Kansas

Our church joined with other churches in and near Moundridge to observe Passion Week in evening services. The Palm Sunday service was held in our church with Rev. Gilbert of the Evangelical church bringing the message.

An inspirational sunrise service was conducted by our Christian Endeavor on Easter Morning. In the evening a mass chorus of over one hundred voices, accompanied by a string ensemble, presented Handel's famous oratorio, "The Messiah." The chorus was directed by Benjamin Zerger with Mrs. Erwin Goering at the piano. German services were held on the second Easter Day. Rev. John C. Kaufman of Whitewater, Kansas, preached.

We mourn the departure of two of the pioneers of this community, namely, Mrs. Peter C. Goering and Peter J. Stucky. —Harold H. Goering, Corr.

CHURCH MEMBER AND SUNDAY SCHOOL

"O, I don't need to go to Sunday School. I've heard those old Bible stories again and again. We just sit and argue anyhow. It's all right for children, but I don't have much use for it." Is that true? Dr. Wilbert W. White, who founded the Biblical Seminary of New York, "found out that out of a thousand ministers canvassed, 888 confessed that their chief lack was a knowledge of the Bible." If most ministers need more Bible knowledge, might not the great majority of lay people utilize the Sunday School for a greater and deeper knowledge of God's Word? The Sunday School is important.

The Lesson

It is usually assumed that he who had "learned a lesson" has gained something. Definite gain should be derived from each Sunday School lesson. If by Saturday night one cannot point to something gained from the previous Sunday's lesson, then that "lesson" wasn't one in the real sense of the word. Such lessons are comparatively useless, for the individual has learned very little or nothing at all. Why hasn't he?

The key to the answer is the word "use." Use a fact repeatedly and it becomes ingrained within you. That is why we know the telephone numbers and addresses of our closest friends. The Sunday School lesson can become a part of us in the same way. In the first place, if we study and discuss our lesson with the purpose of using it, we will discover that it "sticks" better. Our mind is so made that it tends to discard that for which we "have little use" and to retain that which we judge may be "of use" to us. Therefore, it is very important that we expectantly hunger for the food in a new lesson. But more is necessary.

Whenever we store a dearly-won lesson truth in the attic of our mind, it becomes covered with dust and we soon forget about it. Precious lesson truths need to be put in the "living-room" of daily activity. Discuss the lesson at the table, talk about it to your friends (surely, it is as important as the weather), and think about it while you work. Seek to embody the precious lesson truths in your work. Let them become the leaven which permeates all your activities and lifts them up to God. Do more. Tell of it to urchins on the street who don't go to Sunday School. Share it with the tramp who asks for a hand-out. Perhaps, you can bring the message to shut-ins or to the inmates of a jail. Use the lesson in such a way and you will be an "A" scholar, for the lesson will have become incarnate in you.

"Yes, but that's easier said than done. You see I don't have time for something like that. Monday night I have my club over. Tuesday night we're invited out for dinner. Wednesday night there is something in school. Thursday night is show night. Friday night we are invited to a pinochle party. And Saturday night I am too tired to do anything else. Besides I must keep up on all my other reading material. There's a good serial running in the Woman's Associate. Your suggestions are too ideal. Better bring them down to earth." So ends scene one.

Next scene: Member comes in and settles down. Sunday School has been in session about twenty minutes. A question. The member answers. Surely, she does, for is she not a member who must take part in the discussion? Besides she knows all these old lessons and she has had a good deal of experience in life. And so she gives one of the many opinions which she has accumulated in the many weeks similar to the last one. The teacher has a hard time finding the spiritual kernel in it. But it was an answer. That's what he wanted, wasn't it? Now multiply this instance many times and you get a "lively discussion."

Scene three: Superintendent announces song and asks all to sing heartily. Member sings heartily, "Earthly pleasures vainly call me; I would be like Jesus; Nothing worldly shall enthrall me; I would be like Jesus." Member puts book back into rack with actions that say, "Well, I did my part to make this a hearty song."

Final scene: Jesus sternly but sadly says, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God. No man can serve two masters." —rw.

THE DIARY OF A BIBLE

Was It Yours?

January 5—Been resting quietly for a week. The first few nights after the first of this year my owner read me regularly, but he has forgotten me, I guess.

February 2—Clean-up. I was dusted with other things and put back in my place.

February 8—Owner used me for a short time after dinner, looking up a few references. Went to Sunday School.

March 7—Clean-up. Dusted and in my old place again. Have been down in the lower hall since my trip to Sunday School.

April 2—Busy day. Owner led League meeting and had to look up references. He had an awful time finding them, though they were right there in their places all the time.

May 5—In grandma's lap all afternoon. She is here on a visit. She let a teardrop fall on Colossians 2:5-7.

May 6—In grandma's lap again this afternoon. She spent most of her time on I Corinthians 13 and the last four verses of the fifteenth chapter.

May 7, 8, 9—In grandma's lap every afternoon now. It's a comfortable spot. Sometimes she reads me and sometimes she talks to me.

May 10—Grandma gone. Back in the old place. She kissed me good-by.

June 3—Had a couple of four-leaf clovers stuck in me today.

July 1—Packed in a trunk with clothes and other things. Off on a vacation, I guess.

July 7—Still in the trunk.

July 10—Still in trunk, though nearly everything else has been taken out.

July 15—Home again and in my old place. Quite a journey, though I do not see why I went.

August 1—Rather stuffy and hot. Have two magazines, novel, and an old hat on top of me. Wish they would take them off.

September 5—Clean-up. Dusted and set right again.

September 10—Used by Mary a few moments today. She was writing a letter to a friend whose brother had died, and wanted an appropriate verse.

September 30—Clean-up again.

WORDS OF MENNO SIMON

"Again, that we are opposed to the magistracy (government) in the things to which they are ordained of God, is not true; undersand me, in lawful things, such as giving toll, tribute, paying taxes, etc. But that they are to rule and lord over our consciences, contrary to the Spirit of Christ, as they please, to this we do not consent, but we will sacrifice possessions and life, rather than knowingly sin against Jesus Christ and His holy word, for any man's sake, whether he be emperor or king."

How Much a Minute?

By Charles R. Rosenberg, Jr.

In one of the government's great departments at Washington a man sat waiting. He was the chief of a bureau that was about to close a large contract. On his desk lay a number of documents containing the bids of a number of contractors who were competing for this very profitable contract.

The chief glanced at his watch. It was 11:59 a. m. Sixty seconds more ticked off, and he swept the bids into his desk drawer.

"I have waited the full time limit, gentlemen," he said. "No more bids can be filed. The successful bidder will be notified within a few days." And he bowed the assembled bidders out of his office.

At five minutes after twelve, a tall, impressive looking man, carrying a brief case, entered the office smiling.

"I represent Jones Brothers," he announced. "I wish to file their bid."

"Five minutes too late, I am afraid," answered the chief. "The bidding closed at twelve o'clock noon, and I am forbidden by law to receive bids after that time."

As it afterward developed, Jones Brothers would have been the successful bidders had their bid been filed in time, for their price was several thousand dollars less than that of the company which actually got the contract. Jones Brothers' profit on this big government project would have been $20,000.

The representative's tardiness of five minutes cost them exactly $4,000 a minute!

That is a mighty high price for a minute, it is true. A minute is a very small bit of time to be sure, but its value may be tremendous in terms of profit or loss, failure or achievement.

Do you keep people waiting for you long after the time you are supposed to arrive? By being five minutes late you have wasted five minutes of your time and shown that you are not to be relied upon. If by your lateness you have kept three people waiting you have wasted fifteen minutes of other people's time as well as five minutes of your own.

Being on time and doing things you are supposed to do at the time you are expected to do them, are sure signs of reliability. Tardiness is not altogether your personal affair. If, for example, you are depended upon to do something at home or elsewhere, and you arrive late, you upset all the arrangements which everybody else depended upon and inconvenienced everybody concerned, perhaps seriously.

Time is the stuff that life is made of. Do not waste it—your own or anybody else's.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

RURAL FAMILY LIFE

The most important of all human institutions is the family. It is difficult to imagine how society could exist without it. Not only is it essential to procreate the human race, but it is also the last great stronghold of human decency, democracy, and religion. In every society and in every age the breakdown of the family witnessed a corresponding breakdown in morality, in law, and in religion. It was so in ancient Greece and Rome, and it was this condition that caused the great Hebrew prophets of the Old Testament to speak out and predict the consequences of such a breakdown. This is true today as surely as it ever was. In our modern cities vice is greatest, and crime rates are highest in those areas where family life is weakest. Our delinquent boys and girls, our truants, our gangsters, and our criminals come almost entirely from homes that are broken and disorganized and from communities where family life is weak and fragmentary.

It is not a matter of personal opinion but an actual statistical fact that family life in rural communities is stronger than it is in the cities. So too is the crime rate lower in the rural communities than in the cities. This is not difficult to explain. Family life has a chance to develop more normally and more naturally in the rural communities. There is no better place for it to develop than on the farm. Here the whole family, whether it consists of three or thirteen members, can wholeheartedly unite in a common task. Few other occupations offer a similar opportunity. On the farm father, mother, sister, and brother can, and do, work together for a common end. Each member contributes something to the total job of keeping the farm running. Children reared on the farm early learn the meaning of responsibility. There are jobs for them to do at every age. It may be carrying in wood, feeding the chickens, pulling weeds, driving the horses, or doing the dishes; the particular task does not matter. What is important is that each member of the family contributes his share to the total good.

In most rural communities it is possible for families to arrange their work so that things can be done as a unit. They can work and plan and play and pray as a group. The more of these things they do together the stronger will be the family ties, and, conversely, the fewer of these things they do together the weaker will be the family ties. Nothing is more important in preserving and in strengthening family life than the practice of daily family devotions. Not only grace before meals, but also the gathering of the family for the express purpose of a season of worship is important for the cultivation of Christian faith and the strengthening of family life. It is in the family that children should discover the joy that comes daily fellowshiping with the Father. Edgar Guest expressed this in the line:

And the finest of conventions ever held beneath the sun
Are the little family gatherings when the busy day is done.

Father Ligutti, the well known Catholic priest from Granger, Iowa, once said to me: "You Mennonites have a wonderful family life. Hold on to it. It is a priceless heritage." What a truth this man had spoken. It helped me see ourselves as others see us. Are we Mennonites conscious of this "priceless heritage"? Are we doing all we can to cultivate and strengthen it? In many Christian families there are no daily devotions and no grace before meals. We have followed the world in many other things; let it never be said that we have followed in this thing. Perhaps this is one of the missions Mennonites have to perform to the Christian world today. God may want to use us for just such a task. Let us continue to cultivate our Christian ideals and encourage the growth of family life remembering that the rural environment is more conducive to it than the city environment.

A MOMENT IN THE MORNING

And they gathered manna every morning (Ex. 16:21).

A moment in the morning
Take your Bible in your hand,
And catch a glimpse of Glory
From that peaceful Promised Land.
A moment in the morning:
A moment, if no more,
Is better than an hour
When the trying day is o'er.
'Tis the gentle dew from Heaven;
The Manna for the day,
If we fail to gather early,
Alas! It melts away.
Each day is a new beginning,
Each morn is the day made anew,
Each day the Manna descendeth,
Each day there is an omer for you.

The Church Member's Obligation to His Church and Pastor

By Willard K. Claassen *

We have a mistaken notion that the success or failure of a church depends entirely upon the minister. Much, very much, depends on him to be sure, but there are also other factors. In the unfolding of the revelation of God, as it is recorded in the pages of the Bible, laymen have a conspicuous place. There is no Biblical foundation for that indifferent shrug of the shoulders and the customary excuse, "I'm only a layman." Some of the greatest heroes of the Bible were laymen. Abraham was a layman; God called him out of a busy life in Ur of Chaldee not merely to become the father of the Jewish nation, but to become a pioneer in doctrine. Who was God's chosen vessel to establish in clear outline the great doctrines of the Bible? It wasn't a priest; it was a layman, Abraham. We might think that it was a priest whom God used to transmit the law to his people. But the great Decalogue was not delivered to the people from the hands of a priest. He was a layman; his name was Moses. Some of the greatest devotional literature in the Old Testament came from the pen of a layman; he has been called a pioneer in ritual. He wore no priestly garb. His name was David. Let him who thinks a layman is inconsequential remember that among the men whom Jesus called to be nearest Him and to be His apostles there was no priest. They were all twelve laymen. The first red blood to flow for the sake of the truth and for the sake of Christ was not from a priest, but from a layman, Stephen. So the record goes. In more recent times Gypsy Smith, Henry Drummond, D. L. Moody were mightily used of God; not one of them was ordained.

I. What is a church member's obligation to his church? It is self evident that a church member cannot meet any obligation unless he is saved. The fulfilling of these obligations takes the supernatural grace of God.

1. Be worthy of the name. When we join a church we have taken upon ourselves the name "church member." We ought to receive that name with a sense of Christian pride. We are fellow-members of a distinguished company. We have the obligation of making a great past meaningful in our present age. Think of that; then think what church members do. Being a church member is a seven-day-affair. It stands to reason that how we account for ourselves on the six days is even more important than the seventh, the day of rest. There is a fashion of departmentalizing life. Into the Sunday department we invite Christ—into the Monday—business department—well, we say business and religion do not mix. But they must either mix or the world will be in a bad fix. Jesus said, by the mouth of John, "By this shall men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another."

2. Be loyal to your church. One who is loyal to his church will attend it whenever it is physically possible. To some few this may be denied because of illness. But loyalty and interest are always possible. Loyalty is not a one-sided affair. Up-to-date psychologists tell us the happiest, most balanced personalities are those who have given themselves to great loyalties. Find something worth living for and then live for it.

3. Support your church. A recent issue of the Religious Digest quoted this figure for the giving of all churches (Protestant, Catholic and Jewish):—slightly less than 1 per cent of the total income of its members. The church needs financial support. According to all appearances there are many church-hitch-hikers. The cause of foreign missions needs our constant support. The expenses of operating our churches have to be reckoned with. Our denomination is facing a new problem in stewardship with the growing number of our churches which have salaried ministers. When you begrudge a fair and reasonable salary to a minister, are you willing to stand up and say truthfully, "I'm willing to take his place"? The burdens of the church fall heavily upon the pastor's shoulders. Work in the Master's vineyard is of mutual concern to us all. It is every Christian's business to promote that work. We can divide the burdens so that excessive financial burdens, in addition to the cares of the church, do not distract the minister.

4. Serve your church. Not infrequently the deacons or trustees ask for some of our time. We have time for the things we want to do. God has a claim on our time. Among the membership of the church there are persons with a great variety of abilities. We are not all business executives, not all artists, not all orators, but the church needs the sum total of the abilities represented in her membership. When one individual withholds his talent the whole congregation suffers. What is worse, the cause of Christ suffers.

It is the church member's obligation to be a soul-winner. Serve by soul winning. Do the preachers have a monopoly on that? No! Never. The task is too great for them! There are relatively few of them. They are limited. There are some classes of people the minister can never reach; they flee at the sight of a preacher. The Chinese have a unique way of hunting ducks without a gun. The would-be hunter wades into the water until it reaches his neck. He then places a hollow gourd over his head. The gourd resembles the other gourds floating in the water near by. Through small slits in the gourd he is able to see. Slowly he makes his way to the unsuspecting duck, grabs it from underneath the water and fastens it to his belt. A layman might be compared to a gourd among the gourds. Laymen can contact people that run at the sight of a preacher. Yes, it is the church member's obligation to be a soul-winner.

* Pastor, Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota.

II. What are the church member's obligations to his pastor?

1. Expect him to have some human limitations. Do not expect to see in him the angel Gabriel standing behind the pulpit. Christ is our absolute example; not the preacher, he can only follow Him imperfectly. This by no means excuses the minister from his exacting responsibilities; it is merely an admission that when all is said and done, he is still a man in the flesh, and that in spite of all, the works of the flesh sometimes manifest themselves. It would save a lot of heartache if we could keep that in mind.

Remember that in a congregation of any size there are many opinions on as many subjects. Many minds many thoughts. It is a physical impossibility that the thought of one man can accept at one time all the varying interpretations of a question. This would indicate that we may some day discover that the minister has not yet "got the light" on one of our pet ideas. Moody told the unvarnished truth in the following homely story. He met a man who was plowing with a very unusual group of animals hitched to the plow. On one end was a horse, beside it a goat, a cow, and a calf. He was stupified for a moment and then added, "Whatever are you doing out here with a team like that?" "I have accepted a call to a church," said the stranger, "and I'm trying to get this team to pull together!" The man, at least, understood that although there may be differences we ought to pull together. The minister of the gospel who is at all worthy of that name is not even trying to please the public; he is trying desperately to be popular with one Man and that is Christ; he is striving at the cost of sweat and blood to deliver his soul before God. Knowing this we ought to pull together.

2. Pray for your minister. If he isn't what he should be, pray for him! If his sermons have lost their strength, pray for him; the exercise of prayer works two ways: it will either change him or perhaps enable you to see something you never saw before. If there is that dreaded sameness, if nothing seems to happen, pray for him. If no souls are being won, pray for him. If God is giving him great success get down on your knees and beg God to keep him, pray for him. It will kindle fire in heart and mind if he only knows someone is aware of the struggle and is praying for him.

3. Support him. Cooperate with him. The work in the world, yes even in the church, is so much easier if there is at least a spirit of cooperation.

4. Take him into your confidence. Talk to him as you would talk to other human beings. If there are serious problems go to him; if he has no clear light from heaven, at least you will have found a friend.

5. Share your ideas with him. The minister will welcome advice from a layman. Many very helpful suggestions relative to church administration, methods, spiritual work have come from laymen. Business executives, salesmen, lawyers, and doctors surely have something to share with the pastor. Our job in the churches is a big one, big enough to require the pooling of all our resources!

6. Encourage him. That it will take a lot more than encouragement to keep a preacher going is certain. If there is some word of encouragement that can truthfully be spoken its like the oil that reduces friction. Criticisms come uninvited. Folks sometimes assume that just because he handles the Sacred Oracles from week to week he is immune from the feelings of human weakness and failure. Though he preaches the Word with a Holy passion he may be a lonely Jeremiah among men. If you can "strengthen his hand in God," do it. (This paper was first given from notes at a ministers' conference.)

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

THE LATEST NEWS FROM CHINA

The Acting Secretary of State, Sumner Wells, sent a telegram last Sunday, April 19, to Rev. C. E. Krehbiel, Newton, as follows:

> "Washington D. C. Department of State has received telegram April 14th from Embassy Chungking, China, requesting you to be informed that Catholic missionaries who have escaped from Sinsiang, Honan, report two women Mennonite missionaries whose names are not given, but who are from Kai Chow, Hopei, are interned at the Sinsiang Catholic Hospital."

Since we have only the two sisters, Elizabeth Goertz and Marie J. Regier at Kai Chow, the two interned women from there must be these sisters.

While we are sorry for their internment, we are glad to hear of their being alive and safe, and we conclude, as already reported last week, that the three missionaries in Tamingfu are also interned and safe, namely Brother and Sister H. J. Brown and Sister Wilhelmina Kuyf.

Let us continue to pray for their safety, and for an open door for them to preach the gospel even as prisoners.

From the Philippines no further word has come. The father of Marvin Dirks received his last letter from his son the latter part of November, informing him of their having gone into the hills. We know that other students went to the hills from Baguio about the same time, to prevent their being captured by the Japanese, and that they are being cared for in the hills by the natives. That is very likely the case also with our missionaries.

May the Lord continue to protect them all

P. H. Richert, Secretary

WEEP WITH THE WEEPING

We came to Sukri village late Saturday evening. After having cycled twelve miles over very rough country roads, I was tired. After greeting our Christian church and resting a bit, I asked the local church leader, Brother Ramodas, to kindly arrange to have services early next morning (Sunday), because I felt that I had to go to Baiya where our home mission worker Brother Joseph and family are at work. But Ramodas objected to my going. He said, "You are very tired now, and Baiya is eight miles, then returning eight miles to Sukri, and then another twelve miles back to Jagdishpore mission station. You can't do that." I persisted that I felt called to go, and I fully intended to go. My traveling companions Philip, the evangelist, and Samuel, the teacher, heartily agreed to go with me.

We went. We reached Brother Joseph's house near noon. With a sort of confused and sad appearance Joseph and his wife, Neela, greeted us. I thought that they were shocked because they suddenly had three visitors near noon and they had no food ready. So I quickly said, "Do not worry; our meal is being prepared in Sukri. We go back there to eat."

They said nothing for a moment. Then they asked me and Brother Samuel to sit down on the bedstead, and Philip they called in. After just a moment Philip came out and said, "Here is a dying baby in the house; please, come in." Samuel and I went in. Now the father and mother of the baby wept. I squatted down near the little bed (the people have no chairs or stools). I put one hand on the baby's head and with the other I held his little hand. The child was burning with fever. Since Friday, that is, for three days the eleven-months-old, darling baby boy had shown no signs of consciousness. I said, "I have no medicine with me, and, frankly speaking, I do not believe any medicine will help. Your baby will soon be taken up into our Saviour's arms." Philip read II Corinthians 5:1-8. I prayed for comfort for the parents. We said goodbye and left.

The next day, Monday, I came from school on my cycle. A woman came towards me with a big, wide smile, and a baby in her arms. I did not recognize her at first. Who was it? It was Neela with her baby boy. I said, "What does this mean; I can't understand it"? She said, "Look here." She opened the little blanket and there with big, open, blue eyes the little baby boy, whom I had pronounced hopeless just yesterday noon, looked at me. The mother said, "When you prayed over the baby and for us yesterday, I saw at once a change to the better in the baby." Now they had walked twenty miles to show me the baby and to get some medical help.

Exemplary Living

By J. J. Regier *

In a Japanese government school there was a man who signed a contract, in which he promised the government that he would no longer teach Christianity, neither would he be influential in causing others to "proselyte." As for his words, he remained faithful to his agreement. However, the government in making the "contract" failed to consider that a noble, blameless life could not be hid.

Forty of these students at this particular time met secretly, pledging themselves to forsake idolatry for the religion that had been so evident in the life of their teacher. In addition to this, a number of these same students began preaching the gospel in their native land.

Yes, "a consistent Christian example is a constant proof of Godliness."

We need but push aside the veil of hidden, unconfessed sin in individual life—there but to see in that life a deep imbedded hunger, in that he or she are searching for a "door of release." A sin torn and worn sinner in hunger-like desperation will resort to person, matter, or thing, searching for something that will appease the cry of his own soul.

He makes appeal to the present day scientist, eagerly awaiting to learn what he perchance may have to offer by way of an ultimate cure for the anguish of heart and the yearning of a dying soul. To his great astonishment, he hears the words of Louis Agassiz, who began his scientific research in absolute unbelief and atheism, but later became convinced that "atheism" is but a miserable lying invention and that, furthermore, the studying of nature leads to nature's God. He goes to the present day philosopher, there too but to find that even those once so fascinating and inflated ideas are rapidly being buried in the ever-growing "Grave-yard" of forgotten scientific theories. Even going so far as to say, "That if you do not accept the hypothesis of spontaneous generation; we must have recourse to the miracle of a "supernatural creation."

So far so good! But a mere knowledge of God as creator and as the "Source of Life" is not sufficient to a sin-sick, burdened soul that is in search for release from the bondage of sin and death. He comes hopefully and expectantly to the so-called professing Christian, there to find the 'Open-Door, Jesus Christ, the

By P. J. Boehr, Pandora, Ohio

MAY 1—"And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you forever; Even the Spirit of Truth; whom the world cannot receive. . . ." John 14, 16, 17. This is taken from Christ's farewell message to His disciples. While the Lord Jesus was in His earthly ministry His disciples were very dependent upon His bodily presence. How helpless they were without their Master! He was their comforter and guide. But soon He was to "go away" through death on the cross, the resurrection, and ascension. Our Lord does not leave His children to themselves, nor did His ministry cease after His ascension. He prayed the Father to send "another Comforter," which is none other than the Holy Spirit. Christ could not be everywhere in His physical body, but in the Holy Spirit He is now with and in every believer the world over. Spirit-born and Spirit-filled people are the miracle lives of this age. This life cannot be feigned, for Christ says that He is the "Spirit of Truth; whom the world cannot receive. . . . ."

MAY 2—"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in My Name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John 14:26. More emphasis is needed on the teaching in the Bible about the Holy Spirit. What a fulness there is in Him! How much we need this One sent by the Father, in the Name of the Lord Jesus. As Comforter He is "the God of all comfort" (II Cor. 1:3). The word thus translated is Paraclete, or One called to our side, to meet all our needs. That word is also translated Advocate, and as such He defends us against all our foes. The Spirit also is our Teacher, and Reminder of that which He has taught us. "Holy Spirit, faithful Guide, Ever near the Christian's side."

MAY 3—"And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." John 16:8. The Lord Jesus said to His disciples, on the eve of His departure from this world, "It is expedient for you that I go away." The Spirit could come only after Christ had ascended to the right hand of the Father, thus ushering in the Dispensation of the Holy Spirit. We see also emphasized the personality of the Holy Spirit. He is not simply a good influence, an atmosphere, or a temporary help; but a personal Presence. Finally we have here the convicting power of the Holy Spirit. We can rebuke sin, but only God can convict man of sin, and effectively so.

"Once it was the Blessing, Now it is the Lord;
Once it was the Feeling, Now it is His Word;
Once the Gift I wanted, Now the Giver own."
—A. B. Simpson

MAY 4—"Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all Truth; and He will show you things to come". John 16, 13. The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God; the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of Christ; He is the Spirit of Truth; and He also is the Spirit of Prophecy. The Holy Spirit is God. Ultimate Truth can be arrived at only as the Spirit of God guides into all Truth on the basis of the revealed Word of God. Jesus said, "I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life", and in John 17 we read, "I "Thy Word is Truth." The Christian further need not be troubled about the future, in a world of sorrow and death, for the Spirit "will show you things to come." We are not left in the dark about the future.

"Spirit of the living God, fall fresh on me."

MAY 5—"A new heart also will I give you, And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes." Ezek. 36:26, 27. The "New Heart" here spoken of is the "eternal life" of Rom. 6:23, and is the "gift of God" to the sinner who accepts the finished work of Christ. In order to have the gift we must needs receive the same. "But as many as received Him, to them gave He the power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name." (John 1:12) It speaks of putting the Spirit of God within us. No more than the pain of so much choice between what I should do, and what not, for the Spirit will "cause" me to do the will of God.

"Sweet Will of God, Still fold me closer, Till I am wholly lost in Thee."

MAY 6—"Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? . . . . What, know ye not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, and ye are not your own?" I Cor. 3:16;6:19. The Christian's body is the Temple of God, and hence the Temple of the Holy Spirit. He serves God with his body, as well as with his spirit. The Spirit-filled believer is a "living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God" (Rom. 12, 1). To serve Christ with a Spirit-filled body is "reasonable service," something that average people can understand. What an exalted life. That person who wanted his pocket-book baptized as well as his body, may well be an example to all Christians, that their bodies as well as their souls be baptized with the Holy Spirit.

MAY 7—"But ye shall receive Power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me . . ." Acts 1:8. After the ascension of our Lord, His disciples were to "wait for the Promise of the Father." In our text we have the Program of the Church. That program is evangelism in the power of the Spirit. It is sheer presumption to do that which we cannot do (to bring men to Christ) in our own strength, or by ingenious human methods. There is a lack in the church of power to make Christ known. We need to adhere to God's plan of evangelization, and mighty results will follow. The Spirit of God is power for salvation, and for service—the Spirit does the inworking and the outworking of the gospel.

"Once it was my working, His it hence shall be;
Once I tried to use Him; Now He uses me."
A. B. Simpson

MAY 8—"When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a Standard against him". .Isa. 59,19. The great mission fields seem to be in "a bad way" at present. Satan never leaves unchallenged any aggressive movement to "disciple all nations." The Chinese expression for "crisis" is Dangerous Opportunity, an appropriate definition of missions. J. Hudson Taylor, many years ago, wrote on the work in China under the title "Blessed Adversity." "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and the Holy Spirit is for extremities. Can we not draw an analogy from the first part of the verse above, where it speaks of people who shall "fear . . . . His Glory from the rising of the sun," and believe God for a great ingathering from Japan, which land is called "The land of the rising sun"? In the face of terrific odds, when the doors of all great mission fields seem closed, the Spirit-filled believer is planning on an enlarged missionary program.

MAY 9—"If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, from within him shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive. . . ." John 7:37-39. We are nearing the time when we again commemorate the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. What a thirst it is that is here spoken of! Our need should drive us to Christ, for He will satisfy, and give us the "well of water" (John 4:14). This is more than just to be saved. It means, as someone has put it, to be saved from the "undermost to the uppermost." A Christian life with such an experience, lifts it out of the ordinary into the extraordinary.

"Lord, make me today to be an extraordinary Christian." —David Brainerd

SMITH CORNER MENNONITE CHURCH

We have seventy-four enrolled in our Sunday School, and seventy-one are on the church roll. However, this year will show an increase on the Sunday School roll.

These are among the outstanding things of the past year: A membership increase of seven. With this came increased fellowship. Prior to last year the banner attendance in Sunday School was seventy-seven. This last year, by the grace of God, the banner attendance went from seventy-seven to eighty-four, to eighty-eight, to ninety-two. The offerings increased with the attendance. Needless to say, a greater spiritual life developed among those who "desired it." We started a new department for children, ages four to ten, in the basement. There will be several classes with graded instruction. We were able to begin with twenty-six in the new department.

By removing some ground in the basement we were able to build a new room. We installed a new heating stove for the basement and a pressure water system. We waited long for these two items. The meeting house needs some repairs, and there is a move on to make them. Some of the members desire to improve the building by doing some work on it. This may take time, but, I think, it will be done. As most of you know some people think that anything is good enough; while others think that the meeting house ought to be beautiful as well as a good building. In a congregation there are both kinds.

We have a complete church council, and those elected fill their office very well. There are other organizations which fill their place in the life of the church. All work for a "better church to serve a better community."

Spiritually the work is good. True, there are reverses, falling away, sorrows, and many other things that hinder. However, at the same time those who are Christ's understand, and they enjoy the Christian life and its fellowship. They know that these blessings are to a great extent made possible by the loyal brothers who constantly support with prayer and money the work of home missions. Without your support, this work, as well as that of many others, would suffer. These people could not carry on alone, and material things must be taken care of.

IS APPRECIATION A LOST ART?

By Cora E. Stutzman

After cleaning the bungalow to spotless perfection, Anne donned her blue sunbonnet and went to the little flower garden back of the garage. She drew a deep breath of delight when she saw there were flowers enough there to arrange a number of bouquets. Snip—snip—snip. Anne, the young bride of but a month, had her scissors in action and many a little kitten-faced pansy and queenly rose was laid in the basket Anne had brought with her. She quickly hurried to the house after cutting the flowers, for it was eleven o'clock and the flowers had to be arranged before Bob came home for lunch.

"My, won't Bob be surprised, and delighted when he sees all these lovely flowers," said Anne to herself as her white slender fingers artistically arranged pansies in a yellow bowl for the dining-room table, and roses in countless thin glass vases for other places in the little home. The most beautiful rose of all Anne put on Bob's desk. She felt he would surely appreciate it while he was straightening up his daily accounts.

At twelve Bob came in for lunch. He ate his entire meal without once alluding to the flowers. That evening while working at his desk he seemingly did not see the gorgeous rose Anne had placed there especially for his benefit and delight. Nor did Bob notice the other beautifully arranged flowers throughout the bungalow. Anne felt a bit disappointed but tried to hide it by saying, "I guess men do not care for flowers or notice touches of beauty in a home." Again she said as she sighed, "Yes, I guess men are like that."

"Constance," called her mother, "I am going over to see Mrs. Krammer's new rug. I may want to buy one similar to it. I shall probably be gone for an hour. Be a good little girl while I am away."

After her mother had gone Constance felt as if she would like to do something lovely for her before she returned home. She sat down on the porch step, and tried to think of the nicest thing she could do, and which would please her mother the most. Finally she jumped up saying,"I know what I will do. I heard Mother say that the cupboard in the pantry was such a clutter that she hates to look at it, but that she can't find time to put it in order. I shall clean and put the cupboard in order."

A passer-by would have heard little Constance singing as if her heart would burst as she deftly and neatly arranged box after box and dish after dish on the shelves.

She had barely finished the task when her mother arrived home. It was not long until her mother made preparations for supper. Constance's heart beat wildly when she saw Mother go into the pantry to get food, dishes, and pans. "I wonder what she will say?" said the little girl. "Maybe she will give me a big kiss and hug and tell me what a nice little girl I was for doing that for her." Those breathless seconds Constance waited for her mother to come out of the pantry seemed hours. But when she did enter the kitchen not a word was uttered about the clean pantry shelves. That night before Constance fell asleep several large tears rolled down her cheeks because "Mother didn't seem to see that I did something for her that she wanted done for a long time."

James Brand had to change busses at Kansas City. He found he would have to wait an hour for the next bus. Such a wait seemed so long to James, for he was on his way home to Louise. This made the sixth time the young evangelist had been away from home to conduct meetings. A couple of times Louise had gone with him, but the other times it had not been possible for her to accompany him. At such times James would bring home some lovely gift for her. He had not had sufficient time to purchase her gift yet, but now that he had to wait an hour there was time to find something. "What would Louise like?" he said to himself as he stepped into a large department store. James suddenly remembered with pain that when he had returned from the trip previous to this one he had given his wife a lovely blue vase, and she told him that she did not like the shape of it, and it fitted with no color scheme in the house. Now he felt almost afraid to buy a gift for her for fear she would not like it.

James heard Louise wish for a dress, so with the aid of a clerk he picked a lovely piece of soft gray silk, figured with fine sprays of pink flowers. He felt she could not help but like the material.

Hours later found James at home. But he did not feel so happy as he would have liked to feel, for when he had given Louise the dress material she had said, "James, this material is all right, I guess; but I had wanted a blue wool dress for this fall. I do not know when I'll ever wear this."

"Oh, I do wish I would not have to wash dishes tonight, for I have pages of Latin home-work to do," said Maud disgustedly as she rose from the table.

"Maud dear," said her frail, old grandmother, "you forget about the dishes. I'll do them so that you may go right to those lessons."

Grandmother, who was already very tired, labored over the dishes for nearly an hour. Even if she felt scarcely able to wash them, she was happy to do her granddaughter the favor.

Later when Grandmother was getting ready to retire she looked a bit older and greyer.

"I wonder," she said, "if after all Maud was glad I washed those dishes for her. She—she never said a word about it. No, not even a 'Thank you.' I guess young folks must be different today."

Rachel, good-natured, middle-aged wife of Deacon Tim Matthews, "had been a very good wife to Tim," so folks for miles around had said. But no one ever heard Tim say so.

One day as Rachel was preparing the very nicest meal she could think of for Tim, she was thinking that when she was first married how Tim would say she was such a good cook and the meals she prepared him were the best he had ever eaten. She remembered too in those first weeks how Tim would compliment her on her housekeeping methods, her industry and thriftiness. But that was so long ago! It mattered not how hard she tried to please him, Rachel never received a bit of praise now, and, as she said, "I'm just starved for it. Wish he would be like he was when I first married him. It seems as far as I'm concerned I belong on the farm about the same as the stock Tim owns."

T'WAS SAID IN 1896

"Speaking of the present approved style of women's dress, which involves so much superfluity of material, I believe it is fair to say that the 'wealth of sleeves' wasted in a single month in the one city of New York or Philadelphia would suffice to pay for a substantial garment for every man, woman and child in the crop-blasted counties of the state of Nebraska.

"I remember a remark of one who had a strong sense of the beautiful and picturesque in nature and art, that after beholding the fatiguing styles of fashionable attire, it was a real rest to him to see an Irish serving woman in her simple everyday dress, with its lines flowing straight to the feet without any excrescences or extravagances. So the early Christians, believing that the pursuit of the world's changeable fashions begot a worldly spirit and an antagonism to the cross, encouraged simplicity in this as in other particulars." The Mennonite, March 1896

Education Values Inherent in the Civilian Public Service Program

By Robert Kreider

Seeking Cordial Community Relations

Campers in Civilian Public Service camps become aware of their responsibility to establish cordial relations with the local community. The C.P.S. camp symbolizes a way of life. It is as a "city set upon a hill." Young men in these camps are cognizant that their relations with the community must be only the very best—relations characterized by service, goodwill, and tolerance. Awareness of their public responsibility is of real educational significance for a group of conscientious objectors.

Community relationships are established on many fronts. The Christian avenue to this fellowship is through service to others. In essence the work project is such an act of community service. The contribution of the assignees on the work crews—digging ditches, planting trees, caring for wild life, building fence, constructing dam—tends toward friendly relationships with the farmers and ranchers of the community. A job well done is long appreciated by an agricultural community.

Campers are afforded other avenues through which to give testimony to their non-violent way of life. The conduct of camp business relations in the community is such an opportunity. The retail and wholesale merchants and the professional people welcome courteous and friendly relationships with the camp. The periodic visits of the campers to the town to shop, to attend programs, to visit in the homes, to worship in the churches—these can be opportunities to testify by actions to the way of non-resistance. Every week from the camps go forth speakers, quartets, choruses to conduct services in the churches and to appear before civic groups. In several of the camps assignees serve the local community by teaching Sunday School classes, leading youth groups, repairing toys for the Community Chest, assisting needy families and institutions. All of these expressions of goodwill contribute to the mutual understanding between town and camp.

Personal and Spiritual Discipline

The tragedy and gravity of this hour in the world's history impress us with the value and Christian necessity of effective spiritual discipline. "Man does not live by bread alone." Prayer, the reading of the Scriptures, common worship are basic elements in the maintenance of the Christian faith. It is the art of practicing the presence of God.

At the heart of all of the programs of the camps is this spiritual orientation. For many campers the highlight of the day's experiences is the camp devotional service in the early morning hours before the men go forth to their day of labor. Daily services are a unifying influence for the camp. They set a spiritual tone for the day. At the close of the day a period of quiet and devotion concludes a day of activity.

On Sunday mornings the entire camp gathers in the assembly hall for worship services. These services are conducted by the camp director. Also on occasion the camp pulpit is filled by ministers from the home churches. Sunday School classes, led by campers and the camp staff, are held each Sunday morning. In many of the camps Sunday evening services and Christian Endeavor programs are arranged through the leadership of the campers. Mid-week prayer meetings have become an enriching experience of the week.

Special religious services—"Spiritual Life Meetings"—have been arranged by the Mennonite Central Committee for all of the camps. President C. N. Hostetter of Grantham College was secured this year by the Central Committee to visit the Mennonite camps. He conducts the special services, meets and counsels with the campers, leads in the devotional periods. The contribution to a camp by such meetings is indicated by the sermon subjects: "Is Life Worth Living?" "Taking Jesus Seriously," "The Man God Uses," and "Confidence Amidst Confusion." These spiritual life meetings, along with similar special religious services, are particularly fruitful experiences to the young men of the camps.

Not only are there rich opportunities in the camps for spiritual discipline, but also for personal discipline. One is challenged to adjust one's self to group living, to live purposively for the good of the camp community. One is challenged to use to advantage one's leisure time in wholesome fellowship, in class attendance, in reading, in recreational activity, in devotional life. Camp life provides many opportunities for spiritual and educational enrichment. The individual camper is called upon to exercise a measure of personal discipline that he may utilize these opportunities to the full during this period of service.

THE ERA OF CONSTANTINE AND THE RISE OF THE PAPACY

II Timothy 2:1-15; 22-26

Program for May 10, 1942

I. Worship Service: 1. Songs: "The Whole World was Lost," No. 467; 'Stand up, Stand up for Jesus," No. 193. 2. Reading of Scripture passage, prayer, and leader's remarks. 3. Biographical sketches of the early church Fathers: Chrysostom, Ambrose, and Augustine. Find material in any good church history or encyclopedia. 4. Offering for C. E. purposes.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"In 323 Constantine made Christianity the state religion. The most important offices were given to Christians, and the emperor's sons were educated by bishops. The bishops obtained large incomes and the privileges of the heathen priests and were almost overwhelmed with honors. The emperor built many churches at his own expense and ordered fifty copies of the Bible to be made and distributed among the churches. His mother journeyed to Jerusalem and there built a church over the supposed sepulchre of Christ.

In order not to be obliged to live in the heathenish city of Rome, Constantine built a new city and called it Constantinople, and in this city he permitted only the Christian religion. Through his influence a great change came about. The heathen religion lost its power and Christian ideas began to prevail everywhere." Taken from Sketches from Church History by C. H. Wedel.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks: 1. Discipline in the church, Matt. 18:15-17; 2. The Temple Purged, Matt. 11:15-17; 3. Errors in the Middle Ages; 4. Monasticism; 5. The Rise of Mohammedanism; 6. Early Reformers; Priscillian and others; 7. The Spread of the Gospel to Germany; 8. Gregory VIII, and his influence.

IV. For Discussion: 1. What good came to the Church through Constantine? 2. What harm came to the Church through Constantine? 3. What proofs of the power of Christianity are there during these centuries?

V. Facts for Study:

"Together with the change of the external conditions of the Church there also came about a change from within. Instead of insisting upon an experience of the grace of God in the heart, they put great stress upon mere confession. At their church councils they quarreled in the most disgraceful manner. Public worship in its outward form became very elaborate: candles were lighted, incense was burned, and pictures of Christ and the Virgin Mary were hung on pillars and wall. First the people prayed before the pictures, but soon worshiped them as divine."

The Bishops did not remain just shepherds of the Church and brethren within it. They developed grades of rank among themselves and the question arose who of the bishops should be the first one and have authority over the others. The desire for wealth and honor indicated that the spiritual welfare of the church was not their uppermost concern. Thus the way for the rise of the Papacy was paved.

The private life of the Christians now also began to change and conform to the world. They still went to church, but also attended and took part in pagan amusements. Many were guilty of lying, cheating, and other sins. No church discipline was exercised anymore, and with many Christianity was only a name.

The real papacy, as it was known later, had its origin in the fact that in the 8th century the popes received grants of land and established a worldly kingdom. In a short time they got control over the greater part of Italy. There were a number of dissolute persons who occupied the papal throne, but the one Gregory VII, through his ability and morally clean life raised it into honor in his day.

A study of its good and bad features would be of value for any C. E.

VI. Illustration: WEIGHED!

There is a machine in the Bank of England which receives sovereigns for the purpose of determining whether they are full of weight. As they pass through, the machinery, by unerring laws, throws all that are light to one side, and all that are of full weight to another. That process is a silent but solemn parable; it affords the most vivid similitude of the certainty which characterizes the judgment of the Lord upon the hearts and lives of men and movements.

MAKING FRIENDS AT HOME

Hymn: "Saviour, Like a Shepherd Lead Us." Unison Prayer: The Lord's Prayer. Prayer Hymn: "Saviour, Teach Me Day by Day." Scripture Reading: Eph. 6:1-4. Daily References: Showing appreciation, Ex. 20:12. Keep good in spirit, Col. 3:18-21. Patterning after the heavenly home, John 11:1, 5. Training for the future, Prov. 22:6. Mutual helpfulness, I Pet. 5:5. A loving home, John 11:1,5.

Leader's Talk: As we discuss our topic today, let us consider the home duties and responsibilities which are common to us all. Let us compare our tasks. As a matter of interest let us set down on the blackboard the types of work we do and the amount of time spent doing them. Then let us discuss the following questions: (1) What part of your work do you like least? (2) Does it take you longer to do it some days than others? (3) Does your work ever make you stop playing? (4) What types of work do you like best? (5) Do you ever forget your chores? (6) Do you ever try to get out of doing them?

Responsive Prayer:

Leader: "We thank thee, our Father, for Jesus who showed us that work is good. We thank thee that we are strong enough to work. Help us to do our work well, being mindful of thy gift of strength of limb and skill of hand. Help us to think of other boys and girls who have too much work to do. Show us some wise and friendly way of helping to get them better ways of living with less work and more play and more time to go to school.

Response: Hear our prayer, O Lord,
Hear our prayer, O Lord,
Incline thine ear to us
And grant us thy peace. Amen

—George Whelpton

Informal discussion: What pleasures does your family share?

Song of Consecration: "I Would Be True," Closing prayer by superintendent.

JESUS' SUMMARY OF THE LAW—Mark 12:28-31

"A Brotherly Meeting"

"While the souls of men are dying
For a little bit of love:
And the children, too are crying
For a little bit of love.
Stand no longer idly by,
You may help them if you try.
Go, then, saying, 'Here am I,
With a little bit of love.' "

The Lord Jesus summed all the Law of Moses into two great commandments: Love for God, and Love for our neighbor.

Jesus sought to develop action in daily life in terms of love, that love is to go toward God, and also toward one's fellowmen. The story of the Good Samaritan is a Biblical example of love. We know that the way of love still works today, even though at times we almost wonder if some people ever knew the law of love.

We do things for our people and friends, because we love them. Love often makes a great difference in our lives. It is the fulfilling of the Law. When we love our neighbor as ourselves, we will do nothing to harm him. The following story explains just this. Once a man saw a little girl carrying in her arms a little boy almost as big as she was. He asked the question, "Little girl, isn't that little boy too heavy for you to carry?" She replied, "Oh, no, sir, he is my brother." The little girl loved her brother and nothing she could do for him was too hard. What a change would come into our lives and communities if we sincerely loved others. Remember we can love others only when we love God, for "God is love."

The Question Bee

1. Have a good memory drill in reviewing the Ten Commandments. 2. Which commandment is the hardest to keep? The easiest? Why? 3. Apply these scriptures to our topic: Deut. 6:5, Romans 13:10, Jude 1:21, Mark 12:31, John 13:35.

The Prayer List

Thank God for: (a) friends, (b) work, (c) neighbors (d) Christian parents, (e) the word of God.

Ask God for (a) more missionaries, (b) to forgive our shortcomings (c) create in us a new heart (d) our own nation to heed the call to repent.

"If you spend too much time sweeping pebbles out of your path, you will never get time to remove the boulder."

Exemplary Living

Righteous'! But the serious question that every professing Christian must be willing to face fair and square is: "What does the poor sinner friend find in you?" Does our life bear witness of a Christ experience? Does our life bear witness of consistent Christian living? Are we patterns of the believers? If so, can we stand the shock of imitation? Such may be questions that will help us sense more keenly the "responsibility" that we are shouldering, in the light of our calling of God in Jesus Christ.

Some years ago it was my privilege to watch an artist paint the picture of a living, human being. The secret of his success was dependent upon that one who was seated before him. There were three requirements that would determine accomplishment or seeming failure.

1. There had to be on the part of that one who volunteered to pose, a definite "fixing of the eye."

2. There had to be "the establishing of pose."

3. There had to be "a quest for attractiveness of countenance and meaningfulness of expression."

Can we not use the preceding illustration as a fair analogy to that of the "model Christian," and the copying world in which he lives.

Paul in the instruction given unto Timothy as recorded in I Tim. 4:12, goes on to explain in Phil. 1:17 the significance implied when he said: "I am set for the defense of the Gospel." His life was now corresponding to that which he professed was in the power of the gospel. Furthermore, the concern of his life was that neither shame nor ridicule should be inflicted upon the sacredness of such a "Godly Institution," and that the power invested therein may not be minimized, because of his negligence or indifference by the "Critic."

Before a person can become eligible in his own life to defend the sacredness of the gospel, a person must come to the experience of Paul as he reveals unto us the "secret" of his effective ministry (Phil. 3:14). "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

1A. The Fixing of the Eye—(Press toward the mark)

1B. The first step that determines the destiny of man's possibilities for the focusing of the eye is wholly and completely dependent upon a personal, definite experience of the power of God as manifested in Christ's Resurrection.

1C. This means that there must be a personal acknowledgement, and acquaintanceship with Jesus Christ. Then can we apply II Cor. 5:17, "That old things are passed away and all things have become new." Why? Because we have become new creatures in Christ Jesus. (Rebirth)

2C. This means that according to (I Cor. 12: 12, 13) all believers, as described above, are baptized or grafted into the body or invisible Church of Jesus Christ.

3C. This means that our life begins to move, act, and live in accordance to our head, which is Jesus Christ. For as in a human sense the head determines the functioning of the outward body faculties, even so, Christ becomes the master head and mind of all above described believers, who in penitent faith have become members of His Glorious Body.

4C. This means that we have become recipients of an eternal infinite "Reservoir" in whom is found complete all the attributes of His Grace.

Conclusion: Such is the first step toward "Exemplary Living."

CORRESPONDENCE

EMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Los Angeles, California

As we look into the immediate future and think of the clear evening skies of the summer months, finding ourselves in the midst of wars and rumors of wars, we are reminded of the precious words of our Saviour, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." These words behoove us to work for the night is coming when man's work is past.

The Sunday School contest referred to in the December issue completed itself in the month of January with the older men's class winning the prize which consisted of a large picture of Christ kneeling in Gethsemane.

We had a reception for the Paul Wengers when they passed through in the latter part of January. Rev. and Mrs. Frank Manning who are members of our church left their field of service in southeastern Africa on November 1, 1941, and arrived at Boston on Christmas Eve. They came to Los Angeles on February 26. At our reception for them they related some of their experiences in which God's keeping power was truly manifested. They are in our midst at this time and, God willing, they expect to return to dark Africa in October. We are much in prayer for them and for those of our missionaries who are at their post of service or in enemy-occupied territory.

Miss Virginia Hogan was married to Tom Walker on January 30. Rev. Regier officiated at the wedding which took place in our church.

Our church flower committee has posted a calendar on the bulletin board. Anyone wishing to donate flowers in memory of some loved one or in commemoration of some special event, may do so by placing their name on the calendar. It is quite interesting to see the beautiful flowers and in whose memory they are donated.

With pleasure we report the re-election of Rev. W. A. Regier for a period of three years. On Easter Day we had a children's program and music by the church choir and two choruses. —Mrs. Frank Regehr, Corr.

POEM BY MRS. AESCHLIMAN

"We are enclosing a poem written by our former pastor's wife. Many of the readers, no doubt, remember Rev. P. R. Aeschliman who passed on to his reward several years ago. His wife lives alone in the same house just across the yard from her son's place. She composes many pieces of poetry and music. Prior to Rev. Aeschliman's death we called Rev. W. Harley King to our pastorate, and he is still faithfully serving us." —Some friends

RESURRECTION MORNING

At dawn before the break of day
An angel rolled the stone away.
The keepers in their fright have fled,
And suddenly became as dead.
Then Christ arose victorious;
The sight must have been glorious!
While His friends were in despair,
Bringing precious spices there
Early at the dawn of day,
Found the stone was rolled away.
And the women mourned and wept
Saw the place where Jesus slept.
There a shining angel said
He is risen, is not dead.
And the angel told them go
Tell His true disciples so.
Frightened from the tomb they fled
There the Lord divine they met.

—Mrs. P. R. Aeschliman

THE CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN

Formerly Called Dunkers

1. This body of Christians originated in the eighteenth century, the church being a natural outgrowth of the Pietistic movement following the Reformation.

2. Firmly accepts and teaches the fundamental evangelical doctrines of the inspiration of the Bible, the personality of the Holy Spirit, the virgin birth, the deity of Christ, the sin-pardoning value of his atonement, his resurrection from the tomb, ascension and personal and visible return, and resurrection both of the just and unjust (John 5:28, 29; I Thess. 4:13-18).

3. Observes the following New Testament rites: Baptism of penitent believers by trine immersion for the remission of sins (Matt. 28:19; Acts 2:38); feet washing (John 13:1-20; I Tim. 5:10); love feast (Luke 22:20; John 13:4; I Cor. 11:17-34; Jude 12); communion (Matt. 26:26-30); the Christian salutation (Rom. 16:16; Acts 20:37); proper appearance in worship (I Cor. 11:2-16); the anointing for healing in the name of the Lord (James 5:13-18; Mark 6:13); laying on of hands (Acts 8:17; 19:6; I Tim. 4:14). These rites are representative of spiritual facts which obtain in the lives of true believers and as such are essential factors in the development of the Christian life.

4. Emphasizes daily devotion for the individual and family worship for the home (Eph. 6:18-20; Phil. 4:8, 9); stewardship of time, talents and money (Matt. 25:14-30); taking care of the fatherless, widows, poor, sick and aged (Acts 6:1-7).

5. Opposes on Scriptural grounds: War and the taking of human life (Matt. 5:21-26, 43, 44; Rom. 12:19-21; Isa. 53:7-12) violence in personal and industrial controversy (Matt. 7:12; Rom. 13:8-10); intemporance in all things (Titus 2:2; Gal. 5:19-26; Christian brethren (1 Cor. 6:1-9); divorce and remarriage except for the one Scriptural reason (Matt. 19:9); every form of oath (Matt. 5:33-37; James 5: 12); membership in secret, oathbound societies (2Cor. 6:14-18); games of chance and sinful amusements (I Thess. 5:22; I Peter 2:11; Rom.12:17; extravagant and immodest dress (I Tim. 2:8-10; 1Peter 3:1-6).

6. Labors earnestly in harmony with the Great Commission, for the evangelization of the world, for the conversion of men to Jesus Christ, and for the realization of the life of Jesus Christ in every believer (Matt. 28:18-20; Mark 16:15, 16; 2 Cor. 3:18).

7. Maintains the New Testament as its only creed, in harmony with which the above brief statement is made.

IN MEMORIAM

DAVID HILDEBRAND, August 31, 1863 to March 23, 1942. Son of David and Catherine Olfert Hildebrand. Born in Furstenau, South Russia. Migrated to America with mother in 1874. Church membership: Brudertal Mennonite Church and Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church. Married Mary Schmidt. Survived by two sons, Jake and Ben Hildebrand, and three daughters, Mrs. H. E. Reimer, Mrs. D. S. Nickel, and Mrs. John F. Voth.

PETER J. STUCKY, June 30, 1866 to March 29, 1942. Son of Joseph and Katherine Waltner Stucky. Born in Kotosufka, Russia. Migrated with village group to America when government withdrew privileges of exemption from military service as formerly granted. Parents established home about five miles from "Emigration" house in McPherson, County, Kansas. Often walked to church and to catechetical instruction. Church membership: Hopefield Mennonite Church and Eden Mennonite Church. Married Anna Strausz, who with the children survive him.

ANNA GOERING, née WALTNER, June 16, 1867 to Feb. 8, 1942. Daughter of Andreas and Katherine Stucky Waltner. Born at Kotasufa, Wolhynia, Russia. Migrated to America with parents in great Mennonite migration of 1874. Settled in McPherson County, Kansas. Attended parochial school in the "Emigration Haus" and also a few weeks in a district school. Catechetical instruction from Elder Jacob Stucky. At first member of Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church. When "Hoffnungsau Eden" Church organized, family transferred membership to it. Married Peter C. Goering, who survives her. Leaves family circle of ninety-one.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

May 10, 1942

MONDAY: THE DAY OF AUTHORITY

Matt. 21:12-22

Topic: RECOGNIZING CHRIST'S AUTHORITY

Introduction

On Palm Sunday evening Jesus and the Twelve returned to Bethany for the night. They returned to Jerusalem, probably early on Monday morning. The experience with the fig tree occurred on the way into the city. Matthew relates the cleansing of the temple first, as it was the most important event. Mark tells us that the disciples discovered next morning that the tree had withered.

Jesus Cleanses the Temple vss. 12-17

It was the Passover week and many people were pouring into the city. All faithful Jews wished to offer the required sacrifices, and many had to buy the animals needed for sacrificing. They also had to exchange of their money for the Jewish half-shekel, demanded from all adults, to pay the temple poll-tax and probably make other contributions. This business of selling animals and changing money was legitimate if conducted honestly and in the proper place. Jesus was indignant that this business should be done in "the court of the Gentiles," within the temple enclosure. In addition, these men, protected by the priests, made exorbitant profits, so that it had become extortion. These men stood in awe of Jesus and quailed before Him. They recognized His authority and left when He ordered them to go. He refused to tolerate these evil practices in God's house. To Him it was the house of prayer (Isa. 56:7). God made provision for a house of prayer and worship for the Jewish people. This was the center of their national life. Jesus acted on His authority as the Son of God and Lord of the temple, when He cleansed it.

Jesus now turned His attention to the blind and the lame and healed them. They knew their need and trusted Him for healing. He gave God's riches freely to these needy ones. Jesus, as King, cleansed His palace and then took His seat in it and distributed gifts to His people. Jesus could not cure the spiritual blindness of the chief priests and scribes. They saw the wonderful things that He did, yet persistently rejected Him. They saw suffering and human miseries relieved. They heard the children's joyful hosannas, and instead of rejoicing, they were deeply indignant at Jesus. When men reject the truth they easily stand unmoved and even scoff in the presence of divine works. Jesus put His approval upon what the children said and thus admitted that He was the son of David, the Messiah. In the mouths of these children true praise was being restored in the Temple.

Jesus Curses the Fig Tree vss. 18-22

It appears that Jesus left Bethany early in the morning and without His breakfast. He saw a fig tree in leaves and expected to find some edible fruit on it. In Palestine the leaves of the fig tree come out after the fruit has formed. He found only leaves. He pronounced a curse upon it and it soon withered away. This miracle is peculiar and unique and has caused much questioning. The disciples did not realize the meaning of it as a solemn warning of certain judgment on the unfruitful Jewish nation. The leaves on the tree were a false sign of fruit. The life that is not fruitful, will wither. God's judgment will visit such a life. The leaves of Christianity are not enough; there must be fruit in evidence.

Jesus wanted to impress His disciples with the power of faith. This miracle was so different from all the others they had seen. They would need great faith in the coming days—faith that could remove mountains of difficulty. They must believe and serve with undaunted faith. Jesus meant to show how great a work could be accomplished by a true faith in God. The miracle was proof that there are spiritual forces about us and that if we are in harmony with God's will, we need not fear. Prayer must spring from true faith—we must believe. This is God's condition for answering our prayers. Jesus had the utmost faith in God. He acknowledged the complete authority of God.

May a church today appear to be flourishing and yet spiritually produce only leaves?

—Missionary G. A. Linscheid, faithful conference worker, passed away on April 13. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved.

—May 1 is the deadline. The Hon. O. Jolliffe has promised $50,000.00 to Bethel College, this amount to be given as soon as Mennonites raise an equal amount. The deadline set for matching Mr. Jolliffe's gift is May 1. A number of individuals have given or subscribed larger amounts of $500.00 or $1,000.00 each. On March 15 approximately one-half of the amount was still needed.

—Relief worker, John E. Coffman, reports that during December six thousand German Prayer Books were distributed to as many German internees and prisoners of war in England. The main relief projects from November, 1941, to February, 1942, were: the Wickhurst Manor Nursery Home which provides a home for thirty evacuee children; the Woodlands which provides a home for twenty-eight homeless and aged people, and help given to twenty-five Spanish refugee children in Plymouth.

—Rev. P. J. Boehr, who is contributing the devotional messages for May, is pastor of the St. John Mennonite Church, Pandora, Ohio. Brother Boehr taught public school at Henderson, Nebraska, before World War I. In 1915 he entered missionary work in China. In 1925 he received the Master of Theological degree from Princeton Theological Seminary.

—Greater loss of life was sustained by reconstruction workers after the last World War than by soldiers in the war. According to The Columbian, paper of the Cascade Locks, Oregon, C.P.S. Camp, "the percentage of reconstruction workers who lost their lives in line of duty was actually higher than that of soldiers who paid the supreme sacrifice in the trenches."

—First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa. Rev. Charles Cline, missionary worker among the Jews in New York brought the message on April 12.

—The Middle District Conference will meet this year in the First Mennonite Church at Summerfield, Illinois, on August 16-18. Please note the dates in your memo-calendars.

—John T. Neufeld, Program Com.

—From the O. B. A. Messenger: "Several ministers who visited O.B.A. this year have remarked 'What a privilege to have such a Bible school; our people surely should rally to its support.' —Rev. J. R. Barkman and P. Kuhlman, together with the girls' trio and the boys' quartet, have been presenting a musical stereoptic program on 'The Life of Christ.' —'Why not plant a bushel or two of potatoes for O. B. A. (Oklahoma Bible Academy)? Let us know about it. Or are you willing to feed a calf for O. B. A.? We surely need your help!"

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: On Easter Sunday we received six members by baptism and three by letter. Two more will be received by letter soon. The Friendship Circle's quota of $250 to be raised each year for four years to pay the $1000.00 pledge on our proposed church building has been raised in six months time. It would greatly facilitate our work here if sister churches would notify us when any of their members move to Wichita. Some Mennonites have lived here a year or more before this church became aware of them. Mrs. P. E. Franz, Corr.

—East Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa. We praise the Lord for His wonderful care. On April 5th our pastor received twelve new members by baptism and five new members by letter. —The yearly dawn service was held at the St. John Lutheran Church, Spinnerstown, Pa. Following the service the young people visited the sick and aged members and friends of the church and sang carols, making six stops. Ida Carbaugh recently became the bride of Ralph Schaffer.

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: During our week-day Lenten services our pastor preached on "The Decision of His Friends" and "Christ's Decision for Us." Herbert Baehr of Chicago brought us an Easter message in song. Our church cooperated in the union Good Friday service. The well established tradition of an Easter breakfast after a sunrise service Easter morn and the regular Sunday School and morning worship coucluded our Easter services. With a series of services as inspiring as these as a background the Easter sermon on "The Crucial Significance of Immortality" filled our hearts again with the hope that only our Christian religion can bring. —The Bluffton College String Quartet played for us on April 19. Laurence Burkhalter spoke briefly about the religious situation in India.

—Goldie Wurger, Corr.

—Rev. A. S. Bechtel wrote on April 7, "We are having a very wet, snowy day down here today. Had a good thunder shower last evening and rain during the night and then a good snow. It is very sloppy and muddy. This is great for all fields and gardens. Just fine for all growing things. The wheat fields look wonderful down here."

—Brother A. J. Richert recently resigned from the chairmanship of the Board of Publication. However, he continues to serve as a member. Elected to the chairmanship at a recent meeting of board members was Brother Herman Andres of Newton, Kansas.

—"Rejections for alcoholic indulgence increased during 1932-1936 by over 35 per cent in the Northwestern Life Insurance Company."

—"The Midwest Conference of the F. O. R. will be held at Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Iowa, May 1-3. Among the speakers will be A. J. Muste, Ralph Loomis, Herman Will Jr., and Carl J. Landes."

—The Bluffton College Vesper Choir gave a concert at the Ebenezer Mennonite Church near Bluffton on April 12.

—The Christian Youth Volunteers of Freeman Junior College raised some money through the sale of Christian literature and miscellaneous articles and sent some to Miss Elizabeth Foth serving in the Red Hook in New York and some to the Civilian Public Service camp at Denison, Iowa.

COUNTRY CHURCH

"In some great day the country church
Will find its voice and it will say:

I stand in the fields
Where the wide earth yields
The bounties of fruit and of grain,
Where the furrows turn
Till the plowshares burn
As they come round and round again;
Where the workers pray
With their tools all day
In the sunshine and shadow and rain.

And I bid them tell
Of the crops they sell
And speak of the work they have done;
And speed ev'ry man
In his hope and plan
And follow his work with the sun;
And grasses and trees,
The birds and the bees
I know and I feel ev'ry one.

And out of it all
As the seasons fall
I build my great temple alway;
I point to the skies
But my footstone lies
In commonplace work of the day;
For I preach the worth of the native earth,—
To love and to work is to pray."

FAITH EXPRESSED SIMPLY

By Walter H. Dyck *

A typical Mennonite country church is known by the simplicity of its faith, its conduct, its worship, and its architecture.

1. The faith of our Mennonite country folk is known for its simplicity. Jesus spoke common words to common people. "A sower went forth to sow." "I am come that they might have life." "Love your enemies—" "Love your neighbor—" "What do ye more than others?" Simple words, a simple understanding, and simple trust that Jesus meant exactly what he said.

2. The conduct of our country folk is known for simplicity of application. If Jesus meant what he said, then love can't mean hate. This includes integrity, truthfulness, helpfulness, sacrifice, willingness to bear misunderstanding if need be. "As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men." "Do good to them that hate you." "Let your light so shine before men."

3. The worship of our country people needs to be simple if the atmosphere of the home is to be brought into the place of worship. The group singing which warms hearts for prayer and meditation, is now set up in a larger pattern. Now the love for father, mother, brother, or sister finds application in attitudes toward neighbors. "The Father seeketh such to worship him."

4. The architecture, too, of our country churches

---

* Pastor, First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebr.

has a traditional and meaningful simplicity. Church spires and bells used to be forbidden in lands where men feared the spreading influence of such simple but powerful living. Those who dare to live what they believe need no bells to call them to worship, nor steeples to point out that its principles are a part of the community living. They love to worship "in spirit" and aim to prove it in "in life."

FARM AND CITY

By William H. Stauffer *

I am the pastor of a rural church by choice. It is my hope to be the pastor of rural people during my entire period of active service. The city with its speed and artificiality holds no interest for me. My heart and soul lies in the wide open spaces and with the people who make their homes there.

God started human life in a garden with a man, a woman, and some children. He created the family as the basic unit of his social structure. God made the country. Man made the city.

As one looks back over the records of man one discovers that the fundamental characteristics of most groups of people were developed while they were predominantly tillers of the soil. And it is significant to note further that these same groups developed their basic weaknesses in the areas where they became urbanized. The city with its large groups of people, confined in small conjested quarters, creates more problems than it can solve.

In our own United States this fact is abundantly illustrated. The foundations of our American life were laid by men who were closely linked to the soil. Our basic philosophy which started our nation on its way was a rural philosophy. It has only been more recently that urban trends have begun to set the pace. Even today most of our prominent leaders are men and women who have farm and rural backgrounds.

Mennonites are basically a rural people. Our people have achieved the record of the past and present more largely because they were and are a farm and rural people than any other one factor. Today one finds Mennonitism at its best in the rural areas. The whole philosophy of Mennonites is a rural philosophy. It is one that cannot, or at least, will not maintain itself in the cities. If and when we abandon our distinctive rural philosophy we will be

OVERWORKED

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Up with the birds in the early morning—
The dewdrop glows like a precious gem;
Beautiful tints in the sky are dawning,
But she's never a moment to look at them.
The men are wanting their breakfast early;
She must not linger, she must not wait;
For words that are sharp and looks that are surly
Are what the men give when meals are late.

Oh, glorious colors the clouds are turning,
If she would but look over hills and trees;
But here are the dishes and there is the churning—
Those things always must yield to these.
The world is filled with the world of beauty
If she would but pause and drink it in;
But pleasure, she says, must wait for duty—
Neglected work is committed sin.

The day grows hot and her hands grow weary;
Oh, for an hour to cool her head,
Out with the birds and the winds so cheery!
But she must get dinner and make her bread.
The busy men in the hayfield working,
If they saw her sitting with idle hand,
Would think her lazy and call her shirking
And she never could make them understand.

They do not know that the heart within her
Hungers for beauty and things sublime,
They only know that they want their dinner
Plenty of it and just "on time."
And after the sweeping and churning and baking,
And dinner dishes are all put by,
She sits and sews, though her head is aching,
Till time for supper and "chores" draws nigh.

Her boys at school must look like others
She says as she patches their pants and hose,
For the world is quick to censure mother,
For the least neglect of the children's clothes.
Her husband comes from the field of labor;
He gives no praise to his weary wife;
She's done no more than her neighbor;
'Tis the lot of all in country life.

But after the strife and weary tussle,
When life is done and she lies at rest,
The nation's brain and heart and muscle—
Her sons and daughters—shall call her blest.
And I think the sweetest joy of heaven,
The rarest bliss of eternal life,
And the fairest crown of all will be given
Unto the wayworn farmer's wife.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

Christian Witnessing in the Country

There is need and opportunity for Christian witnessing everywhere today because of the millions of people who are still without Christ. Sometimes we get the impression that the need for evangelism is greater in foreign countries than at home; in cities than in rural districts. The fact is, however, that there are a great many spiritually neglected people in the rural communities right around us. These needy communities are often passed up by churches looking for mission projects because they seem so small and so unimportant. They may be small but they are not unimportant.

There are several advantages connected with Christian witnessing in rural communities in contrast to witnessing in more densely populated urban communities. In the first place, rural people are not as much rushed and pressed for time as are their urban cousins. It is still possible for country people to take time to speak with those with whom they come in contact. They, therefore, will also be likely to take time to listen to the message of those who come to bring the Good News. In the second place, rural people do not face the large number of competing secularizing and demoralizing agencies that city people face. There are fewer, if any, movies, public dance halls, pool rooms, saloons, gambling resorts and other places of commercial recreation that bid for people's time and loyalty. The rural church does not face the competition in this respect that its urban sister does. Spiritually impoverished country communities may suffer from loneliness and under-stimulation rather than overestimation. The Christian Church is often the chief, and sometimes the only, organization in the community where people can meet in a social group. In such a situation the Christian worker has a wonderful opportunity to secure the attention and the loyalty of the people. Furthermore, the cost of erecting and maintaining church buildings is much lower than in cities.

Building Confidence

Rural people not only like to share confidences with others, but they often need advice and help in managing their kitchens, gardens and farms. To help someone get his equilibrium materially provides greater opportunity to help him spiritually. Trust and confidence in one phase of life leads to trust and confidence in other phases as well. This confidence has to be built up before successful Christian witnessing can be done. Several cases illustrating how this can be done recently came to my attention. A rural mission worker in helping a man roof his chicken house won the friendship and the confidence of a man who had for twenty years been opposed to the church. This relationship led to a reinstatement in the church and the winning of an active Christian worker. In another case the mission worker, who incidentally was a Mennonite, helped a family fight off starvation by teaching its members how to can, dry, and preserve fruits and vegetables for winter use. A few days spent in that home with the help of willing neighbors led to a full pantry and a heavy laden set of cellar shelves. During the course of this work helpful religious discussions were held. The result was a better domestic situation and a renewed interest in the work of the local church.

Witnessing by Working

There is a wonderful opportunity for Christian witnessing by living among people and becoming a part of them and in so doing to demonstrate the power of the gospel. Preaching on Sunday is a fine thing, but application and example through the week is far more convincing. It is easy to point out people's sins. It is more difficult to live among them in such a way as to demonstrate to them that you by the help of Christ have mastered your own sins. One can get closer to men by sharing their daily lives and work than by making formal and habitual contacts with them at Sunday meetings and in Sunday school classes. The rural mission worker can witness for his Lord in the kitchen, out in the garden pulling weeds, behind the plow, or at any other daily task that needs to be performed for those who are economically and spiritually needy. Our churches would be greatly enriched if gospel teams would be organized to minister to needy people all around us. The ministry should be twofold; with heart and hand, with work and the Word.

CONFERENCE PICTURE

We of the Eastern District regret very much that some of you had trouble in getting your conference picture. The photographer proved to be incompetent and unreliable. Rev. Bohn and I have tried again and again to get the pictures but he has failed us. Now the man went out of business and into defense work. Our conference has, therefore, taken upon itself to refund the money to those who to our knowledge did not receive their pictures.

Meditations Through a Kitchen Window

By Esther Ratzlaff *

Beauty and God in soap bubbles? Sometimes women feel dishwashing is a piece of drudgery that falls to them as housekeepers, with nothing beautiful about it, but rather just good three-times-a-day routine. Spring is here, and as we peer through the kitchen window, our hands may be in soap suds, but our eyes, which are the windows to our souls, can see beyond. Patches of color washed clean by spring rains, the song of birds, reflections of light, people hurrying about their work, children at play, make mental impressions and lift our thinking to a plane which cannot be human. To feel the glow of the morning sun against a freshly cleaned face, a crisply starched house dress, and loosely brushed hair is one experience. Now open the window and let God add to this experience. A soft breeze falls upon the face as a touch of the vastness of God and lightly tugs at the roots of the hair to remind us that there is life there and from whence it comes. Our thoughts are again reflected as the sun through the window reflects beautiful colors and designs on the soap bubbles in the sink. We see trees at a distance—some in vivid yellow-greens, some in deep dull greens; some are budding and others are blossoming as if they had suddenly burst forth with the beauty and loveliness God has stored there through the winter. Beyond the trees there are large areas of blue green—wheat fields which through the graciousness of the Ruler of Nature will soon turn into a golden harvest to supply our physical needs. Sometimes we are so busy attending to our physical wants and needs that we forget that making a living or earning is only a bi-product of a life. We have grown soft because of the comforts and conveniences of the age in which we find ourselves; so soft, in fact, that we feel we are being abused if we have to walk to the grocery store six blocks away. Upon arrival we become even weaker. Instead of getting our hands into some honest-to-goodness soil and growing some of the things we should eat and at the same time live closer to nature, we are satisfied to supply our energy from ready-to-serve foods on the grocery shelf. But we say we must be practical. Yes, but our ideas of practicality need not be stereotyped. Someone has a pet theory about how to be practical and what is the best pattern for living, and forthwith all people try to fit themselves into that certain suggested pattern. Perhaps there are persons who would enjoy supplying their needs in some unconventional way, but they dare not follow their desires because public opinion would frown upon the idea. Is there any reason why individuals should not give expression to some of their ideas even though they do not conform strictly to those of our next-door neighbors? If this were the case we would be surprised at the number of things we regard as necessities that would simplify our living, which in turn would give us more time for some of the higher things in life. We need to give ourselves time to think; we need to free our minds from the many trivial thoughts that clutter them. These few moments of elevated thinking can lift us to a higher plane and make us forget the little things that lead us to worrying. Faith in God, and a connection with the Infinite can make us oblivious to a good deal of idle chatter and can make many minor irritable issues look disgustingly simple.

Nature is a splendid channel through which we can commune with God. It gives us a feeling of security which is unshakable. Man-made things may come and go, but God's orderliness will continue. We can completely depend upon the routine of nature from year to year. The seasons come with planned certainty; the stars and plants move in their orbits with regularity; time marches on surely and steadily, but what about man's relation to this orderliness? Perhaps we feel we aren't being treated fairly and take the attitude that the world owes us more than we are receiving, but how often do we check ourselves to see in which way we are fitting ourselves into God's plan? Too many times we have our pet ideas and expect God to adjust to our plans. Rural life offers tremendous opportunity for self-expression and freedom if we only make proper use of it. What is "proper use" will need to be determined by each individual in his own particular situation. Each person must set his own goal and strive toward it. Mistakes and stumbling blocks are certain to come to anyone who is progressing but if we make these experiences stepping stones our scope of thinking will be broadened by them.

Thus, it may be that a woman in the kitchen can quietly enrich her own life and greatly influence the lives of those with whom she comes in contact, if daily she can See something beautiful,

Think something beautiful,
Say something beautiful,
Do something beautiful,

in the deepest sense of the word.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By P. J. Boehr, Pandora, Ohio

MAY 10—"Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Zech. 4:6. How much man still believes that might makes right." We see the application of colossal material equipment among the nations today, to make right what man by his spirit has made wrong. Furthermore, man's saying that "knowledge is power" should mean less to the Christian, when men and nations, with the world's wisdom, have come well nigh to their wits-end. It is not by physical might, nor by mental and moral power, that things will be set right, "But by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

MAY 11—"The Spirit which He has caused to dwell in us, jealously over us." (Weymouth) Jas. 4:5. In the previous verse we are warned that "whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." It is a serious matter not to put God first in our affections. This is placed on an equality with resisting the Holy Spirit, who wants full control of our lives, and that to our best interests. We need not fear, but rather covet, the jealousy of the Holy Spirit.

"Utterly abandoned at the Holy Ghost! . .
Seeking all His fulness at whatever cost;
Cutting all the shore-lines, launching in the deep
Of His mighty Power strong to save and keep."
—Author Unknown

MAY 12—"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 4:22,23. The Christian has ground for a wonderful testimony. Nor is it "by works of righteousness which we have done." Whatever of good he does the child of God gives due honor to the Holy Spirit, Who causes him to bear the "fruit of the Spirit." What an enrichment of life and testimony the Christian enjoys by permitting the blessed Holy Spirit to "fill and fulfill" his life.

"Spirit of the Living God, Fall fresh on me!
Make me, break me, mold me, use me. Spirit of the living God, fall fresh on me."

MAY 13—"For the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Rom. 14:17. It has been said that wherever the religion of Mohammed comes there the garden is changed into a desert. But are not also many people mistaken in thinking that good working conditions, good housing, neighborliness, opportunities for education, and plenty of food for all, is the Kingdom of God? It does not come that way, but the Kingdom of God has a spiritual rather than a material basis. No wonder that righteousness and peace through "the Blood of the Everlasting Covenant" issue in "joy in the Holy Ghost."

MAY 14—"Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as My Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." John 20:21, 22. Each of the four gospel writers gives the Lord's great commission to make disciples of all nations. In Matthew the command is emphasised in the royal commission,—"Go ye"; In Mark obedience receives emphasis, when we read that the disciples "went forth, and preached everywhere." In the Gospel of Luke emphasis is laid on the message to be preached,—"And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached. . . . among all nations." Finally, in the Gospel of John we have the motive for going into all the world,—"As My Father has sent Me, even so send I you."

MAY 15—"And we are witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him." Acts 5:32. The more we yield to the Holy Spirit the more He will fill us and use us. He uses only such people as are truly "born again." There seems to be no limit to the possibilities of the Spirit-filled Christian. Of supreme importance to all God's children, in order to keep spiritually fit, is obedience.

Until the emptied vessel lies broken at His feet;

"Utterly abonded to the Holy Ghost!
Oh, the sinking, sinking, until self is lost!
Waiting till His filling shall make the work complete." —Author Unknown.

MAY 16—"And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:18. There is here a similarity, and a contrast. In Acts we read that the populace spoke of the Spirit-filled disciples at Pentecost, as "full of new wine" (Acts 2:13). Their boldness in testimony was so expressed, and they were so full of joy, so that people mocked them, like they would do to drunken folks. Christians may be "talkative" and "happy" when they have the message of life to bring to dying people. The contrast lies in that with which people are filled —some with wine, and that to excess; others are filled with the Spirit, Who does not allow excess. It is sometimes said that a drop of spirituous liquor makes a person "a drop drunk," etc.; hence there always is excess in drinking liquor. We also note in this verse that the Christian is commanded to "be filled with the Spirit."

The Place of the Rural School in America

By Edward E. Kaufman *

America like Topsy grew up from a simple, social, independent, rural community life into the complex social, industrial and economic order which today is fighting for its very existence.

The colonists came to America to seek freedom of worship and independent enterprise. They found it in the rural and urban life of early America. The challenge of adversity developed in them not only courage, persistence, and the interest and welfare of their friends and neighbors; but it gave them the wisdom to see the need of an enlightened public and the hope and promise of a better day.

These same colonies soon organized into a federated government. Through their vision, courage, and willingness to suffer for a cause worthwhile they forged ahead into the America of today. Early American leaders and many of our leaders in our religious, social, economic, and political life today are the product of men and women who have a rural background.

Maybe it is vain, but may I suggest, and it seems that history bears it out that when the influx of the rural people into the large cities reaches the point where the vitality and opportunity of rural life is endangered or limited, it is the beginning of national decay. History indicates that the health and prosperity of rural life determines the health and prosperity of national life. If that is true, and I believe it is, let us champion this American heritage by seeing to it that rural America not only stays healthy and strong, but that we make America strong by making rural America stronger.

If rural America made America what it is today, let us do our part in seeing that rural America will make a better America tomorrow. Let us analize rural life and see what it has in its stream of life which makes it of so great importance in the life of a nation.

Now some few years ago upon entering a city of eight thousand people as a Junior in high school I was told by my English instructor that she could tell every boy and girl who came up through the rural schools by his willingness to stick by a difficult task without help from his teacher until a solution to the problem had been found. Another instructor in the field of science made the point that in his classes students with rural backgrounds were not often satisfied by being told about something, or to have read it in a book. They had to test it and see for themselves what made it work. Theory was all right but not enough. Inductive reasoning was their way to success. Then the athletic coach said, "Give me boys who work hard and who are farm fed, and I will give you first place trophies."

These conclusions to me are recognition of the fact that rural life serves as a nursery for individual growth in ability, in character, in personality, in self reliance, in a sense of acknowledgement to the greatness of the universe, the beauty of nature, the power of the deity, the depth of love, the value of human and natural resources, the consolation of a friend, the price of vanity as well as the joy of romance.

MOTHER'S CREATION

"Sometimes I think God grew tired of making,
Thunder and mountains and dawn redly breaking—
Weary of fashioning gorges and seas.
Weary of planting great forests of trees.
Sometimes I think God grew tired of heating
The earth with the sun—and of fully completing
The whole of the world! God grew tired, and so
He just took a bit of the soft
afterglow,
He took just a petal or two from a flower,
Weary of fashioning gorges and
And took a song bird from a sweet-scented bower.
The dewdrops he took from the heart of a rose,
And added the freshness of each breeze that blows
Across lonely green meadows—
he took all the love
Left over from making his heaven above,
His kind fingers mixed them—
God's hand and no other—
And made for the first time,
the soul of a mother!"

No small part of the contribution of rural life is made by the rural school. To the little red school house of days gone by to the large well equipped consolidated rural school of today we must pay a tribute. From its walls have come many of our great men and women with service today and vision for tomorrow.

* (Edward E. Kaufman has served as superintendent of the Buhler, Kansas, school system for a number of years. Buhler is largely a Mennonite town. Brother Kaufman is active in the Mennonite church of this town and also serves as treasurer of the Western District Education Committee).

The rural school has served as a vitamin to successful living for all mankind and as a cradle for the propagation of a faith of simple folk with a mission for the world. The dream of Horace Mann originated in the form of rural and urban education, public schools for every child. This dream came true by national legislation in the ordinance of 1787 which set a precedent and provided section 16 and 36 for school purposes for every district of 36 sections. Thus was born the rural school of America, the pioneer of the public school of today. It has been the pioneer of progress for nearly three centuries. From it has developed our secondary schools, junior colleges, and schools of higher learning.

In all this progress the rural school has never lost its mission. Today it still stands the pioneer citadel of adventure and experiment for better things. It is the laboratory for educational growth and development. In its halls flows the spirit of adventure, the willingness to try the new, the hope of a better school tomorrow, the nucleus or embryo for the large well standardized school in the larger city. We as a religious folk have prospered by the inoculation of the vitamins of rural education. It has served us as a green pasture, it has kept us calm by its still waters. It has served us in our mission to the world. Let us nurture it and keep it, that it may continue to pioneer and to serve us that we might serve America better.

A Letter From the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States

In the hope of clarifying the problem, I, as President of the General Conference, wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington concerning loans to the Government for civilian purposes. And the following reply was received, dated April 24, 1942:

Dear Mr. Krehbiel:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 6, 1942, suggesting the issue of bonds for civilian purposes.

Many suggestions similar to the one made by you have been made for the issuance of a special obligation, but such suggestions have not been adopted. The moneys received by the Treasury from the sale of War Savings bonds, as well as from the sale of all other public debt obligations of the United States, are deposited in the general fund of the Treasury and mingled with all other moneys received by the Treasury from the collection of taxes or from other sources. All, expenditures of the Government are paid from the general fund pursuant to appropriations made by the Congress.

The President, in his Budget Message of January 5, 1942, made the following statement:

> "In a true sense, there are no longer nondefense expenditures. It is a part of our war effort to maintain civilian services which are essential to the basic needs of human life. In the same way it is necessary in war time to conserve our natural resources and keep in repair our national plant. We cannot afford waste or destruction, for we must continue to think of the good of future generations of Americans. For example, we must maintain fire protection in our forests; and we must maintain control over destructive floods. In the preparation of the present Budget, expenditures not directly related to the war have been reduced to a minimum or reoriented to the war program."

During the current fiscal year it is estimated that more than six billion dollars will be spent by the Government for other than war purposes, including payments to maintain the agricultural program, general public works, etc. In view of these substantial payments for other than war purposes, persons who desire to purchase War Savings bonds can do so with the knowledge that substantial parts of the Government's receipts are being devoted to "maintain civilian services which are essential to the basic needs of human life," as stated by the President in his Budget Message.

The Postal Savings System accepts deposits and funds placed with that System are utilized by the Government. Also, there are available for purchase the regular issues of Treasury Bonds, Tax Series Notes and other obligations which do not bear any descriptive designations relating to our War activities.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) D. W. Bell
Under Secretary of the Treasury.

It is not for me to say how any one should give his support. But I am publishing the above letter for the information it contains, trusting that it may help some to decide.

The Postal Savings deposits and the Treasury Notes, evidently, are available now as they have been heretofore. Some have used and may want to continue to use the one or the other of these.

Let us also not forget to support the Mennonite Central Committee with outright gifts for the Relief and Civilian Service work of national importance. And may God speed the day when Peace shall return.

C. E. Krehbiel
Conference President

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

Jagdishpur, via, Rapiur, C. P., India

Nov. 17, 1941

To Our dear Friends in the Home Land:

This last October, between the dates of 9 to 16, it was our privilege to attend our first Annual Missionary Conference which was held in Champa. The missionaries used one or more of various means of transportation in coming to Conference. Among these were, Walking, Ox-cart, Special Bus, Train and Automobile—some bicycles even missed out on a well deserved rest.

As we all gather at Champa there was much rejoicing at the privilege of all being together—this is the only time of the year at which all the missionaries do have the privilege of being together. Therefore, it is somewhat of a social event too. Especially were we thankful that Mrs. Isaac could be in our midst because she had just recently undergone a major operation and it looked for a while as though she would not be able to come but, thanks to God, she too was there.

One of the first impressions that came to us was the fact that the entire missionary family was pervaded by an atmosphere of consecrated willingness to do the conference work and some of that work was no easy task. Being new missionaries we had no important responsibilities which left us free to make observations. So, observe we did. We did not even have the responsibility of voting on the issues before our conference. We were glad for that because the work is entirely new to us and we, as yet, have very little appreciation of how the work must be done and of the problems involved. So, if we would have been expected to vote we certainly could not have done so intelligently. We were glad to just listen in and learn what is being done and through thus listening we even learned a little about the pro's and con's of some of the work.

The actual business sessions of the conference were preceded by almost two days of what might best be called "Preparatory Meetings." And it just happened that Sunday followed these two days so it really amounted to three days of preparation. These meetings consisted of Bible study, Consecration and Prayer. Thus our Senior Missionary, Rev. P. W. Penner, who conducted these meetings, led us in our spiritual preparation for the actual work of the conference.

When the time came to carry on the business sessions, Dr. Bauman, our able chairman, led in another short devotional service in which God's Will and Guidance were again implored. Then everybody put their shoulders to the wheel and worked hard. More often than not, the question under discussion was a difficult one. At such times one could feel and see by the way the missionaries made their various contributions to the discussion that everybody there had but one thing in mind and that was to find God's Will in the matter and do accordingly. For instance, when the difficult question of stationing came up for discussion with a view to making some kind of a decision, the discussion grew quiet and many heads were seen to bow in prayer. The P. A. Penners are off the field. Six more missionaries were due to leave in the near future for furlough. Now, how was the work to be distributed among those remaining on the field? It was a most difficult question and everybody was reluctant to allow any part of the work to lapse. The conference was working hard. A couple of hours elapsed but seemingly no satisfactory arrangement could be found and there was a pronounced unwillingness to let the matter come to a vote. Mealtime came and it became necessary to adjourn without making any kind of a decision. Therefore, in the next session the discussion on the same question continued and only after a considerable period of more hard work an arrangement was agreed upon by which the work of those missionaries who are to leave on furlough was distributed among the missionaries remaining on the field. But it must be said that no one was very well satisfied with the arrangements for when 26 missionaries are doing the work for which there should be at least 30 missionaries and then to distribute all that work among 20 missionaries is, to say the least, not ideal. But that is the situation and the circumstances compel us to make the most of it. Is there any doubt as to the need of more workers?

Our stationing too was under consideration and it was decided that we should be stationed at Champa in order to help as much as possible with the evangelistic work there. In order that we might more adequately and rapidly prepare for this we are now at this station (Jagdishpur) doing full time language study. In our studying we are putting special emphasis on the actual speaking of the language as that is our greatest immediate need if we are to do anything among the people. So, in order to do as much talking as possible we have much conversation with each one of the three Middle School Masters who are our language teachers. Besides this we teach Sunday School classes and during the week try to get around among the people and talk with them. Thus by about the middle of February, we hope to be of at least a little service to our Lord and Master by taking a small active part in the work.

With Christian greetings to all,

COUNTRY CHURCH

Set like a jewel on this wind-swept plain,
Its clapboards rising upward from the sod,
The country church stands staunch through wind and rain,
And there they come for miles to worship God.
And now they find Him waiting for them there,
Far from the city's clamoring din and strife,
Among their own fields, swept with clean sweet air
That is fragrant with the essences of life.
Within these walls life has its sacred part:
Here they bless the very young,
And many a heart has here been joined to heart,
And many a farewell hymn has here been sung,
And neighbor joins his neighbor, clear of eye,
In praising God beneath this country sky.

WHY I LIKE TO LIVE IN THE COUNTRY

By Dwight Platt *

I am only ten years old, but I have lived in two large cities (Chicago, Illinois, and Topeka, Kansas), two middle-sized cities (Newton and Manhattan, Kansas), and two little country towns (Merom, Indiana, and Moundridge, Kansas). I like the two country towns best.

In the country towns there is more place to play. In the country we can make all the noise we want to and do not disturb anyone, and we do not have to listen to other people's noise. We are not always in the way either. I like to watch our milkman milk the cows, too. The milk tastes better if I can see the cows it comes from. The things I eat taste better when I can get them out of the garden. It is more healthful in the country, because we have fresh air instead of the smoke of the city, fresh vegetables right out of the garden instead of the canned ones in the city.

There is work besides fun and health in the country. You have to feed the chickens, cows, and horses, and work in the garden, wheat field, etc., if you live on the farm. If you live in the country town you have to tend the garden. All this work makes you strong and healthy. In school there are not so many pupils, so we get more time to recite. In this way we exercise our brains and become wise.

In the country we can go wandering over pastures and fields watching and learning the habits of certain animals. We may hear the buzz of bees in the country instead of the drone of the machines at work in the city. We can see the sunset in the country instead of the tall buildings in the city.

In the city you drive around always looking out or you will bump into the car in front of you. In the country you can drive around enjoying the beautiful scenery.

So now you see why I like to live in the country rather than in the city. I think the things made by God in the country are better than the things made by man in the city.

WHY I AM GOING BACK ON THE FARM

By J. Hobart Goering *

Here in a Civilian Public Service Camp we frequently devote thought to things of the future. "What will I do after the war is over?" is the question one often asks of himself. Many will probably go back to do the same type of work which they did before the war. Some will very probably change their work as a result of camp experiences and training. Opportunities for learning new fields of work certainly are great, and the men appreciate that fact. As for me, I eventually plan to return to the farm.

The question now is, "Why am I making this choice?" There are many reasons for my decision to return to the farm. I shall mention just a few which I consider to be quite important.

I was born and reared on the farm. As I have grown older my interest in the farm and its activities has continued to grow. The various agricultural activities have their attractions. There is real joy in being out in the field in the great out-of-doors on a tractor or some other implement tilling God's wonderful earth, preparing it for seeding. There is the joy of watching and cultivating the seeds and then the plants as they grow to maturity for more food for humanity. Can you imagine a more worthwhile task? Yes, there is another side to this picture. All roses must have thorns, and I am not overlooking that fact for a minute. It is heart-breaking to gaze upon a field of wheat completely demolished by a hail storm. It is most discouraging to find a prize animal in your herd of cattle dead as a result of the dehorning of the day before. I am satisfied that those times come in all occupations. But then there is a joy in finding the first leaves as they burst forth out of the ground to produce a new crop. There is a real thrill in finding a new baby calf in your herd or a new litter of pigs some beautiful morning. In my estimation the joys and thrills of farming far outnumber the times of discouragement.

* (Dwight Platt is the son of Selma Rich Platt, a teacher in the Moundridge, Kansas, school system. Dwight is in the sixth grade. His post office box number is 132).

* (J. Hobart Goering's home is Moundridge, Kansas. He is a member of the large Eden Mennonite Church of that place. On may 5th he will have completed eleven months of service in the C.P.S. camp at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He has been active in camp activities. He is the superintendent of the Sunday School and director of the chorus. He works as one of the four assistant cooks. Before conscription he taught school in McPherson County, Kansas, for four years. Previous to that he attended Bethel College (1836-1938). After the "duration" he intends to return to the farm).

The Mennonites have always been a rural people. They have lived and made their most valuable contributions to humanity on the farm. They are known the world over as good farmers. I am proud of that heritage and I want to do my part in keeping up that record. To become a good farmer is a great goal toward which to strive. Farming is a noble calling with vast opportunities and, therefore, worthy of everyone's consideration and respect.

Then too, the farm offers many opportunities for the expression of basic Mennonite principles. One farmer is building a new home. His neighbor comes over and helps him, not for wages but because of a spirit of cooperation, love, and goodwill. Some day, of course, this farmer may help his neighbor when he is in need. But that is not the motive behind the service of the first neighbor. He does not help because he expects to be repaid. He helps out of a spirit of cooperation. Does that not present a wholesome picture? I fear that some of our Mennonite communities are losing this neighborliness to some extent. That spirit is vital to Mennonitism. We dare not lose it. In this respect the farm presents a situation which can hardly be duplicated in the city. There is a great difference between merely visiting together and working together. The same holds true on the farm. This working together and helping each other develops an understanding among people. Understanding leads to cooperation and cooperation leads to success, progress, and real happiness in life.

In connection with farm life, I also like to think of the place of the rural church. The rural church is an ideal place for fellowship with God and man. It's various activities, which should very definitely be social as well as spiritual, contribute a great deal toward a unified and cooperative community. The rural church, therefore, presents another great area for service.

My growing interest in the farm is not confined solely to the time when I was actually living on the farm. I realize more and more every day the importance of the farm. My desire to become a farmer has grown continuously during these past months in camp. We have had some very stimulating and inspiring lectures on rural life recently by President Ed. G. Kaufman and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz. These talks have meant a great deal to me.

I am not looking at the vocation of farming from the financial standpoint either. I do not think a person who wants to become rich will try to do so by farming. I truly believe that the farmer's life should be a life of service. I see in it not merely the opportunity of raising food for humanity, which in itself is very noteworthy, but the opportunity of helping to develop good relations among people, that spirit of cooperation and friendship which this world so desperately needs today. Some day, God willing, I hope to do my part.

Education Values Inherent in the Civilian Public Service Program

By Robert Kreider

The Non-resistant Testimony

Civilian Public Service is affording young men opportunities to grow in the faith. There is little doubt that the conscientious objectors who return to their homes after their period of service will be more intelligent and effective witnesses for peace. C. P. S. camps are valuable for the apprenticeship they provide in disciplined non-resistant living.

The situations are many where conscientious objectors have opportunity to make their peace convictions known. An early occasion was the declaration before the local Selective Service board of their intention of being a conscientious objector. The prospective assignees were confronted with the responsibility of making known their decisions in the home community.

Upon arrival in camp the assignee has varied opportunities to deepen his convictions, to make more articulate his peace testimony. Notable is the stimulating study of pacifism and non-resistance in the course on objectives. The devotional periods, worship services, lectures by readers from the peace movement —all these aid the camper in formulating a clearer, fuller conviction of the non-resistant way of life. Not to be forgotten in importance are the "bull sessions" on the project and in the dormitories. Such discussions frequently center about the conscientious objector's position.

The Mennonite camps have established camp papers which have a wide circulation among the Mennonite constituency and among the friends of Civilian Public Service. These publications afford avenues for the campers to give clarified expression to their peace testimony. When the assignees return to their home communities on furlough they are called upon to explain their C. O. stand and describe camp life to their church and to their friends. Every week groups of boys go forth to the churches of the community and environs to present programs. These groups welcome the campers for their service. It is of significance to the assignees who must present their peace testimony humbly and with conviction.

A challenge of camp life is to discover practical alternatives to war. It is imperative that the young men of Civilian Public Service offer a better way to the world than the way of military force. To be effective Christian witnesses for peace it is important that the conscientious objector understand the Scriptural and historical bases for his position, the nature of the peace movement, and the channels open for the peace testimony to the community and the world. Civilian Public Service lays before the C. O. assignee manifold opportunities to become a more enlightened and articulate witness for Christian non-resistance.

Many young men in Civilian Public Service camps are looking forward to new areas of service wherein they may be even more effective witnesses for peace. Such opportunities for service are relief and reconstruction work in the latter stages of the war or following the war. There are campers who are preparing themselves for this type of service through the study of foreign languages, first aid, and vocational subjects. A real testimony to the world will be the service of these young men who volunteer for works of relief and reconstruction in areas of conflict. Reconciliation is a cardinal purpose of the followers of the non-resistant faith.

CONCLUSION

An educational program is in progress in all of the Mennonite-operated C. P. S. camps. We have noted the nature of that program. It is diversified in character and varies somewhat from camp to camp. In this stage of Civilian Public Service such organized education frontiers—planning and developing a systematic adult education program for the Mennonites in Civilian Public Service. It is to be hoped that some expression of the adult education of C. P. S. camps may be continued in Mennonite communities after the camp programs have come to a conclusion. Could it be that Civilian Public Service will contribute to a revitalization of the Christian education program of our churches?

We have indicated some of the opportunities which Civilian Public Service presents for a great educational experience. The areas of educational opportunity are many: common labor, fellowship in camp, community friendship, peace testimony, and spiritual discipline. These are at once the characteristics of the camp educational experiences as well as the challenges and the problem of the program. Civilian Public Service has its many problems. These educational goals and opportunities have been only partially realized. Therein lies the challenge of our Mennonite camps that we give ourselves with devotion to the attainment of these goals.

Civilian Public Service is a golden opportunity in the life of the Mennonite Church. It summons the sacrificial support and devotion of the entire church—campers, camp staff, church leaders, and laymen. May God's blessing rest upon the church in this common enterprise of faith and service.

THE CRUSADES AND NEW RELIGION MOVEMENTS

I Cor. 13:1-13

I. Worship Service: 1. Songs: "Fairest Lord Jesus," No. 97; "Christ for the World We Sing," No. 327; 2. Reading of scripture passage, prayer, and remarks by leader. 3. Talk on "The Dark Ages." 4. Offering for Foreign Missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

The Crusades

The land in which Jesus lived has always been of interest to Christians and has been visited by many of them. In these years when the Church began to lay more and more stress upon works, a pilgrimage to the Holy Land was thought of as an act of special merit. After the Turks had conquered the Holy Land they often treated such pilgrims cruelly. One of these, Peter of Amiens, described conditions there so vividly that the pope and the people were aroused to free Palestine from the Turks by force of arms.

The pope promised every crusader remission of sins and salvation. Various crusades were undertaken. Many perished on the way, but their zeal never abated and finally in 1909 the city of Jerusalem was captured with the slaughter of thousands on both sides. A so-called Christian kingdom was organized. More crusades took place, even a children's crusade which brought terrible hardship and suffering and uncounted deaths. In the end the Turks again regained control of Palestine, Jerusalem falling into their hands in 1187.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The Children's Crusade; 2. Church worship in these centuries; 3. The Waldenses, their origin and doctrines; 4. Persecutions of the Waldenses; 5. John Huss; 6. The Bohemian Brethren.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What was the effect of the Crusades?
2. Why did the Waldenses and similar groups come into being?
3. What kind of life did they lead?

V. Facts for Study:

"Hatred of true Christianity was one of the saddest signs of these dark days. Whoever departed from the teachings of the Church, or would not recognize the authority of the pope and the priests was called an apostate or a heretic, and was persecuted and even killed." One of the orders who made it their business to hunt out the Christians were the Dominicans, a society of monks.

The more the church lapsed into the worldliness and formalism the stronger became the opposition of small groups of Christians to its course. These became known under various names in different countries, such as Novations, Priscillians, Paulicians, Bogoniles, Albigenses, and Waldenses. Membership in these groups was voluntary and a holy life in imitation of Christ was essential. They called themselves Brethren or Apostolic Christians.

VI. Illustration:

Peter Waldo was the leader on one of these groups called Waldenses after his name. He insisted on the careful study of the scriptures. He had been shaken out of a life of ease and indifference by the sudden death of a friend. He gave part of his property to the poor, and with the rest had the Bible translated into the native tongue. He organized a society of preachers to bring the gospel to the poor, and so reached thousands. Everywhere hungry souls gladly accepted the gospel message.

The Waldenses, as this group was called, valued the N. T. very highly, especially such parts as the Sermon on the Mount. They accepted the commandments of Christ without reserve, and tried to observe the command, "Love your enemies," literally. They generally regarded the oath and military service as wrong. They did not take part in the abuses of the Roman Church, pilgrimages and worship of the saints.

Their apostles often came from the best families and had attended the best schools. They could have occupied important positions, but preferred for Christ's sake to travel about in simple garb, often selling small household articles, and using every opportunity to talk about the gospel. They practiced the precepts of Christ as given in Matt. 10.

No one was admitted to membership except by baptism and on confession of faith. Their knowledge of the Bible was astonishing. They had it in their own language, and the children learned to read it and memorized long passages. This group was at home in the South of France, the North of Italy, and in part of Germany.

MAKING YOURSELF GOOD COMPANY

"There is an old proverb which says, 'The hand that gives, gathers.' How truly this is stated, for everything which we give to others multiplies before returning to us.

"Don't be afraid to give of your time and talents. Give words of cheer. Give of your material possessions, for God has promised a blessing to you if you give freely and generously. Malachi, one of God's prophets said: 'Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.'

"So you cannot lose. Besides the spiritual blessing which comes from giving, God has promised that if you share with Him, He will pour blessings upon you."

Qualities you need to develop to make yourself good company:

1. Have confidence in yourself—Believe in yourself and you are well on the road of success. However, beware of being over-confident. Be willing to accept corrections and help as well as to give suggestions to others.

2. Be yourself—"Ape no greatness. Be willing to pass for what you are."

3. Amiability—Amiable people, though often subject to imposition in their contact with the world, yet radiate so much of sunshine that they are reflected in all appreciative hearts. Duelzy.

4. Cheerfulness—The cheerful live longest in years, and afterwards in our regards. Cheerfulness is the offshoot of goodness. —Bovce

5. The art of conversation—"To listen well, is as powerful a means of influence as to talk well, and is as essential to true conversation."

Never hold any one by the button, or the hand, in order to be heard out; for if people are unwilling to hear you, you had better hold your tongue than them. Chesterfield.

Not only to say the right thing in the right place, but far more difficult, to leave unsaid the wrong thing at the tempting moment. Sala

6. Fidelity—To God, thy country, and thy friend be true, then thou'lt ne'er be false to anyone.
Vaughan

7. Forbearance—Cultivate forbearance till your heart yields a fine crop of it. Pray for a short memory as to all unkindnesses. Spurgeon

8. Manners—One of the most important rules as to manners is to be for the most part silent as to yourself. Say little or nothing about yourself, whether good, bad, or indifferent: nothing good, for that is vanity; nothing bad, for that is affectation; nothing indifferent, for that is silly.

GOD'S LAWS FOR THE UNIVERSE

Psalm 8:1-9

If the days, seasons, and years did not come regularly, it would cause us to wonder. If the sun did not give us warmth and light, the moon light at night; if seeds did not transfer to life, we would think all natural laws were broken.

There are fixed laws which govern all these processes, and all witness to the genius and power of the Creator. When God made the earth, He said, "Let there be light," and there was light. God also said, "Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree, yielding fruit after his kind." God wants His children to bear fruit after their kind. One has said, "The fruit of a Christian is another Christian."

In one of Gypsy Smith's meetings, a lad of ten accepted Christ as his Savior. The next night, the lad returned to the meeting, bringing his mother, and she, too, accepted the Lord Jesus. The next night, the lad returned again, bringing this time his grandfather, who also accepted the Lord Jesus. The lad was bearing fruit after his kind.

The Law of the Harvest

Another law of the universe is the law of the harvest. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap" (Gal. 6:7). If we want to reap peaches we plant peach trees. If we wish wheat, we plant wheat. It is just as true in the spiritual world as in the physical world.

A man asked his servant to sow barley, but the servant sowed oats. The master asked why he sowed oats and the servant replied, "I hope to grow barley." The master said, "What a fool you are! Don't you know you cannot reap oats from barley?" The servant replied, "Well, master, you yourself constantly are sowing wild seed, and yet you expect to reap life everlasting. Don't you know you cannot reap life everlasting from evil seed?"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

May 17, 1942

Tuesday: The Day of Conflict

Matt. 22:41 to 23:11

TOPIC: How Do We Reject Christ

Introduction

Our lesson events occurred on Tuesday of the Passover week. Jesus and the Twelve returned to Jerusalem from Bethany, and came into the temple. There the chief priests, scribes, and elders tried to entangle Him in his words, so they could accuse Him before the authorities. They questioned his authority for cleansing the temple. Their questions clearly revealed the growing conflict with the Jewish leaders. In each instance Jesus silenced his questioners. Even the lawyer's question did not lead Jesus into an argument. He quoted Deut. 6:5, God's commandment, as an all inclusive answer.

Jesus Asks a Question vss. 41-46

Jesus could ask questions and He directed attention now to his own person and office. He gave the naughty Pharisees an opportunity to do some real thinking. Christ, is the New Testament term for the Hebrew word, Messiah. Jesus was known as Christ only to his inner circle of disciples. The Jews were excepting the coming of their Christ. Jesus' question challenges the Pharisees to change their thinking concerning the Messiah. They thought this question was easy to answer, for it was generally believed that the Christ would be the son (descendant) of David. God had promised (II Sam. 7:12, 13). This question, "What think ye of Christ?" is of the uttermost importance to each one of us. He alone is the anointed, the eternal Son of God.

Jesus quoted Psalm 110:1 in asking another question. The Jews believed that David was speaking about the Messiah. It was not customary for a father to call his son, "Lord." How then could He be the Lord and still be David's son? This question they could not answer. Jesus wanted to teach them the idea of the spiritual lordship of the Messiah. Jesus did not tell the answer to His question to the Pharisees. Christ has two natures. He is both "Root and Offspring of David (Rev. 22:16); both of David and Son of God." The Pharisees refused to think of the expected Messiah as divine, and would not admit that Jesus is the Messiah. They were completely silenced.

Jesus' Warning Criticism vss. 1-11

Matthew 23 consists almost entirely of criticisms of the scribes and Pharisees. Our lesson portion sets forth the vanity and self seeking of these religious leaders. As a body, they were the official guardians and interpreters of the law, the teachers who were in the sense the successors of Moses. What they taught out of the law and in accordance with God's word, was to be obeyed. Their practice however did not agree with their preaching, and hence was to shunned. Their interpretations of the law, and their added traditions and ceremonials of their own invention, made its observance an almost impossible burden. They opposed modifying and single requirement. They did not attempt to keep their own rules. Instead of doing things with a sincere desire to honor God and help their fellow-men to know Him better, these men primarily wished to be seen and honored by men. They coveted the reputation as being very pious and godly. "Broad phylacteries" were worn upon the forehead and large "borders," tassels were fastened to the corners of their garments. Such piety—not so rare in our day—is put on for display. Sincere piety emanates from within the heart. They loved the most prominent and honorable places in public worship, seats of special honor. They wanted people to address them with titles of honor, and noticeable greetings in public places. Rabbi, "my teacher" or "my master," is a Jewish title given to their learned teachers. Jesus warns against eagerness for such distinctions. He censures the proud grasping at personal distinctions. All of Christ's followers are brethren in faith and love for Him. The sacred name, "Father," as here used, is the believers' address to God alone. Good teachers make men look to God, and not to themselves. Jesus announces Himself as their Messiah, Teacher, and Guide. Christian workers and leaders must be humble in spirit, willing to serve before they can be much use in God's service. True greatness is measured by sincere humility.

What are some ways in which people show religious pride today? How do active people in the Church sometimes dishonor Christ? How do we at times reject Christ?

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH OF CHRISTIAN

Moundridge, Kansas

A class for young married people has been organized with Herbert Kaufman as teacher. Waldo Goering has been appointed as song leader for the Sunday School.

This winter Miss Aganetha Fast visited our church, and Missionary P. A. Penner brought us the message on a Sunday morning. In the evening Brother Penner showed us his films of the India mission field. After having seen these pictures we certainly can praise God for the wonderful ways He has used this pioneer missionary in India during forty years of service.

The choir of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church of Wichita presented a sacred program on Sunday evening, February 15. This choir came in the interest of their church building project, and a free-will offering was taken. On March 1 Mr. Harry Martens and Dr. P. S. Goertz visited our church in the interest of Bethel College.

Dr. Klassen, a dentist of Hillsboro, spoke at a recent C.E. program. He also showed his pictures of the C.P.S. camp at Colorado Springs. Brother Klassen was a C.O. during World War I, and after the war he did reconstruction work in France under the supervision of the American Friends Service Committee.

The following marriages occurred during the year: Jean Vogt and Ben Krehbiel, Edith Sharon and John Niehage, Thelma Krehbiel of Washington, D.C., and Curtis Adams of Fort Washington, Maryland.

At the semi-annual business meeting the matter of revising the church constitution was considered. Our church participated in the community union meetings during Holy Week. On Easter our mixed choir, directed by Ed. A. Wedel presented the Easter cantata, "Life Eternal" by Fred B. Holton. Mrs. Gene Wedel was the accompanist, and the soloists were, Linda Stucky, soprano; Laura Mae Wedel, contralto; Orval Kaufman, tenor; and Reford Wedel, bass.

Farm and City

By William H. Stauffer

swallowed up by other groups.

In the city the individual is the basic unit of society. The father is the breadwinner. The mother keeps the house going. The children run around for want of something constructive to perform. Many are at home hardly more than to eat and sleep. Frequently there is no other common basis of family interest or unity than in the biweekly pay check. Each member of the family is a separate unit unto themselves, and often operate and get along quite independently of one another. The home is simply the base of operations.

In the rural areas the situation is quite different. In rural life the family, instead of the individual, is the ultimate unit of society. In this case they are closely linked and interdependent. The welfare and efficient operation of a farm and home requires the united effort of the entire family. Each has a task to perform. Each is a vital part of the farm and home program. Each has a sense of belonging. This is very vital to healthy Christian living.

In the city one of th biggest unsolved problems is that of leisure time. Urban families find it impossible to find constructive, steady work for their growing, energetic children to give them a sense of responsibility. This problem finds easy solution on the farm. Each member of the family has definite chores and other tasks to perform. These must be performed regularly and well. This is very valuable for growing children. There is nothing quite as valuable in the stabilizing of character than the discipline of having to do chores regularly, winter and summer alike. That does something to one's moral fiber for which the city has no counterpart.

The city church is a church of individuals coming from wide geographical areas and interests. The country church is a family church. Its members gather more regularly as a close working unit with common interests and backgrounds. They speak a common language. The church is a more vital part of their lives. They haven't so many diversions and distractions.

The city man deals with nuts and bolts, with gadgets and mechanisms. He lives in artificial material surroundings. His philosophy of life is colored by this. The farmer deals with plants and animals, with growth and harvest, with life and death. This too colors his outlook on life. The latter has a much more wholesome opportunity to live a normal Christian life. The city boy gets his milk from the milkman. The country boy gets it from the cow.

All of this is not to suggest that the city should be forsaken. The task of the church in the city in many ways is greater and just as important as that of the country. But what I am definitely suggesting is that we as Mennonites are basically a rural people. Our genius lies with farm and rural families. We should concentrate our efforts there, and leave the city problem to others who are better fitted for that task. When one goes fishing he takes bait in accordance with what he wants to catch. I am suggesting that our bait is rural bait which is much more needed in the country than in the city.

We have a unique contribution to make in giving to rural life in general the flavor of Mennonitism at its best. That flavor is a farm and home as a homestead with a fine family in it in which the outlook is not primarily the making of a living through soil mining; but the living of a life, the rearing of a family, the preservation and improvement of the soil, the goal of passing on to coming generations a sense of stewardship that is akin to God's plan.

This our fathers did well. This we must do. This we must inspire our children to carry on. The only solid and permanent basis for any agriculture is not commercialized farming on a large scale, but rather family-sized farming with the operator the owner. Our goal should be to farm less acres better.

Our Church as a rural church is in a unique position to carry on this task. We have the proper facilities to make the church the base of operations of an entire community. I can think of nothing more inspiring than to see a group of rural families making up a church, a school district, a social unit, a cooperative business unit—in other words—a real community in which every family and every member in that family has a sense of belonging. This must be the task of our Church. Unless religion permeates the whole of life it will ultimately lose out.

Where should we begin? There are many starting places. In my opinion, however, the most vital and immediately necessary place to begin is for the church to make provision to set up its young people on farms; bring them together for study and discussion of every phase of their individual and corporate lives—economic, social, political, religious; and to assist them in devising methods of action to live life as God had planned it in the Garden of Eden. We'll never save the souls of our people unless we follow the example of our Lord in making provision for the whole man.

—Need for church paper in every Mennonite home: A Mennonite pastor writes, "Then very few people get The Mennonite and they are more interested in supporting outsiders than our Mennonite works."

THIS ISSUE

Dr. J. Winfield Fretz of Bethel College helped to get the various rural life articles. Busy persons give of their time to write them. May they bring enjoyment and inspiration to many Mennonites who live close to the soil. May they remind city Mennonites of happy work and play on the farm.

THE ASCENSION OF JESUS

One of the important holidays occurring in the month of May is Ascension Day. It commemorates one of the great events in the life and work of Jesus and should have a place in the church calendar similar to that of Good Friday and Easter. For forty days after His resurrection Jesus appeared intermittently to the disciples in order to give them "many infallible proofs" of His resurrection. Incredulous at first everyone of them seems to have been absolutely convinced that Jesus did rise as He had said He would, after they saw Him in person, heard Him speak, and observed the telltale marks of the crucifixion upon Him.

But it was also necessary that reliable witnesses should see His final departure to be with the Father. And so we find Jesus taking with Him a group of believers and leading them out to the Mount of Olives. Here He gave them His final commission to be witnesses for Him in all the earth. Here too, as He lifted His hands in blessing, He ascended into heaven in plain sight of them all. It took this added experience to make them qualified witnesses for Him. They had walked and talked with Him during His ministry. They had beheld His crucifixion. They saw Him risen from the dead, and now they beheld Him ascending to glory. All that they needed now was the enduement of the Holy Spirit, and after that they would be flaming evangels for their Lord.

But it may be asked why the ascension of our Lord is so important. It was the necessary culmination of His work on earth. He needed to go away at the proper time so that the Holy Spirit might come, as He had promised. The disciples needed to know that He had actually gone, in order that they might take up the work that He had delegated them to do in His stead. He needed to go in order that they, by the power of the Holy Spirit, might do the "greater works" that He said that they should do. He needed to go to glory in order that He might take up His work as Intercessor in behalf of His people. He needed to be in the presence of God in order that He might be our High Priest to give us continual access to the throne.

The ascension of Jesus was an important event in the great chain of events which went to fulfill the marvelous plan of God for the salvation of man and the preservation of the saints. In a measure the Church has appreciated its importance, but in our modern life we do not seem to hear as much about the observance of the day, or of the significance of the event which it commemorates, as in days gone by. It is another illustration of the apathy of people today toward the things that are of great spiritual importance. The tendency of some communities to observe the day by special meetings is to be commended and encouraged. In the rush of modern life we need to guard that we do not become so absorbed in the less important, even though legitimate, that we lose sight of the greater things of Christ.

MENNONITE PRINCIPLES AND THEIR APPLICATION TODAY

By Olin A. Krehbiel *

It is not the purpose of this paper to hand down ready made formulas but rather to provoke thought and discussion in the hope that from such a free exchange of ideas constructive conclusions might emerge.

In considering principles and their modern application we are reminded that since early times Mennonites have coupled faith with practice. It is right at this point that we have the opportunity to render a great service for the cause of Christ, as there is much in Christendom which is neither faithful nor practical. Doctrines are empty shells without works; while works lack a pattern without doctrine.

In brief the following principles are held by our church as given in the constitution of the General Conference and as summed up in The Guide to Christian Teaching published under the supervision of our Board of Education; Salvation by grace through faith in Jesus Christ, the Scriptures as the Word of God and only infallible rule of faith and conduct, baptism on confession of faith, separation of church and state, non-resistance, avoidance of oaths, scriptural church discipline, sanctity of marriage, and simple living.

Salvation by grace through faith in Christ is the very heart of the gospel and has been held by the church in general from the beginning. It is therefore not distinctively Mennonite, as there are other denominations who have built on this foundation stone. But don't we often make the mistake of taking the greatest truths for granted? It is my firm conviction that frequently the most important and obvious facts of life are the ones least observed. We human beings are so forgetful, and experiences become rather hazy over the years. Should not this sweet redemption tune be sung again and again until the whole being reverberates continually with the thought?

* Pastor of Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa., and president of the Eastern District Conference.

The Scriptures as the Word of God is also a generally accepted fact among Christians. However it has a special meaning to Mennonites who have maintained the right of the common people to read and interpret the Bible for themselves. How well are we succeeding in our time to impress our people with this concept? Are they a Bible studying group or are they living on canned theology? How can we get them to read expecting the inner light of the Holy Spirit to lead them into all truth? Is there not a great need to make this doctrine take on living freshness?

Although new converts are still baptized on confession of faith we have departed from the Anabaptist practice of rebaptizing those who received this rite in infancy. In that day a radical break was needed to emphasize the necessity of heart belief over against mere form. Now most of the churches which baptize babies recognize the need of a confirmation, which means a concession toward our view. So we are not violating the spirit of the conviction of our forefathers when we accept into our membership adults who have been baptized in infancy and are satisfied that they are born again. Or is this a wrong analysis and evaluation?

In self-examination while thinking over the matter of the avoidance of oaths, I discovered that never had I preached on this subject even though the topic had been discussed during the course of teaching and in private conversation. How many other ministers must confess the same neglect? It would be interesting to know how our laymen regard this doctrine and how many practice it. Another phase of this tenet which deserves attention, is the Mennonite custom of being as good as ones word. This used to be a distinguishing characteristic of our group. Aren't we slipping? Why? Which is more important, the letter observance or the spirit?

There was a time when Mennonite home life was a model to others in showing forth a fine Christian relationship between husband and wife as well as between parents and children. It is with alarm that we note the divorce evil creeping into our fold, together with the policy of letting children run wild. What can we do to stem the tide that is beating down the sanctity of marriage and home ties? Must not parents accept more of the responsibility instead of shifting it to others? How can ministers guide husband and wife to a happy home? Should our conference create more literature on this subject?

Although non-resistance is becoming increasingly difficult to apply in a world where total war is the order, this is not the time to give up the Christ-given principle, but rather we must find new means of expressing it more effectively under the modern conditions. Our efforts have been too much on the defensive. Is it not time to take the offensive? Should we have waited to be drafted, or would it not have been better to have organized a volunteer peace army ready to do various types of constructive work for the government? As long as our nation was not involved in the war the present system seemed to be the best method of meeting the peace time draft, but now that war is upon us it appears that the camps are more of a stop-gap. Have we been out-maneuvered by military men and pigeonholed in Civilian Public Service camps where we will fall prey to an exemption complex while others make sacrifices in blood and tears? We must seek out the weaknesses of the C. P. S. program and help our leaders remedy them. Exploration of other veins of undiscovered worth should also be made. If something isn't done even the opportunity to do work among civilians will have slipped through our fingers. What is our responsibility to the soldier boys? Must we stop our ears to the cries of human need simply because there are organizations linked up with the military arm who are doing this work? Can't a field of service be cut out for us? There is no question as to the worth of relief work, however the number of persons that can be used in this labor of love under present conditions is limited.

Another angle which threatens to be the greatest undermining to our peace witness is that the home folks have not fully met the issues facing them. The regimentation of manpower and money for defense thus far has only been a taste of what is to come. What can we do when the country is really geared to total war? It is easier for the farmer to be a pacifist than the machinist. The policy of the government is to cut out civilian goods so as to drive persons into war work. This makes the situation in the industrial sections more acute than in farm communities. Factory owners find their plants commandeered for war production. What shall these who are forced in that direction do? Although the minister personally may be a lover of the non-violent principle his hardest task is to counsel those who are directly battling with tough opposition. More often he is disappointed that so few seek his advice. If church members in peace time did not hesitate to work on Sunday because it meant holding their jobs and making a living, then they won't give up their jobs when forced to turn to war work. What would some of these same church members think of a preacher who did not speak on certain subjects just to hold his position? Sacrifice is neces-

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

The Church and Home Ownership

Within recent years numerous studies have been made of farming conditions in America. The studies show that farm ownership has been decreasing annually. Less than one hundred years ago 75 per cent of the American farms were owned by the people who lived on them. Today only about 58 per cent of the people who operate farms own them. This means that farm tenancy is increasing. The recent depression found many farmers having to surrender titles to family farms that had been in a single family for three and four generations. In a high percentage of cases the titles did not pass into the hands of other farmers but into the hands of absentee landlords such as insurance companies and mortgage companies. These absentee owners generally live far away and have no other interest than that of deriving profits from their investment. They have no interest in the local community, its organization or its people except as it is profitable to be so interested. This is detrimental to the best interests of any community.

Scriptures and the Land

There are a number of reasons why this problem of land tenancy is a matter of concern to the church. In the first place, the Scriptures have much to say on this matter. All through the Old Testament we are taught about the sacredness of land. Man was looked upon as a trustee and God as the full and rightful Owner of the land. Man did not, therefore, have the right to abuse or exploit it for selfish purposes. In Gen. 2:7-8 and 3:17-19 we are told of the intimate relation that exists between man and the earth. Not only is that the substance from which God made us and to which we shall again be changed, but it appears that God meant man to be closely dependent upon the earth throughout his life. All of man's food, clothing and shelter comes directly or indirectly from the earth.

Numerous references in the Old Testament indicate that God meant man to be the possessor of land. When Moses led the Israelites out of Egyptian slavery into the land of "milk and honey" each family received a portion of land (Josh. 17:2-6). The basis of land ownership was laid down in the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus. The chief provision of which was that in the fiftieth year, the year of Jubilee, each again secured possession to the land originally belonging to his family. The law read: "ye shall return every man unto his possession, and unto his family." Within this fifty year period land might be sold outside the family but in all sales the opportunity of redemption was to be given to the seller. This law had two remarkable practical results. For one thing, no family could be denied ownership of land for more than forty-nine years and secondly, no family could add permanently to its ancestral holdings. It is clear that the law was designed to prevent dire poverty which results when successive generations are denied land ownership and, on the other hand, it guarded against luxury and waste which characterizes the accumulation of landed estates through successive generations. This law was effective for many years. It is illustrated in the case of Naboth who refused to sell King Ahab his vineyard on the ground that it was "the inheritance of my father."

The prophet Micah expressed the wish of individual land ownership when he pictured the day in which "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid." (Mic. 4:4). What is this but saying that every man would one day own his own home?

Our Fathers and Land

Many of our present day farmers have forgotten this ancient law. They see no relation between religion and land tenancy. They conceive themselves masters of the land and not God's stewards. Our Amish brethren have been more conscious of this than we. Abuse and exploitation of the land has been considered so sinful that a member practicing it is subject to church discipline. It is important that we again discover the close relationship of land ownership and religion that our fathers once held. A growing tenancy is a serious threat to a prosperous community and a thriving church life.

IS THERE A DIFFERENCE BETWEEN C.O's AND NON-COMBATANTS?

Today a young brother in my church asked me this question, and he added that some of his friends had told him that there is no difference. He seemed rather disturbed about it in his mind. I told him that our enemies can give the best answer to this question. Our enemies see a difference between the two, because they are not afraid of the C. O.'s, but they are afraid of the non-combatants. On the other hand, our enemies can see no difference between a non-combatant and a combatant when it comes to meeting them on the battlefield. Are they right, or are our non-combatant brethren right? We need all the light for our young men on this question that we can get.

sary. Have we instilled in the hearts of our people enough of the spirit of self-denial?

Four hundred years ago separation of church and state was something new. Now it has become one of the foundation stones of our democratic form of government. In recent years with totalitarian views making such inroads into the thinking of the peoples of the world there is danger that democracy bow to such practices. Evidence the fact, that some are now refused citizenship because of their religious beliefs. Dan Gilbert writing in an article "Inside Washington" has issued a warning that socialistic trends threaten to squeeze out the small Christian schools which depend on private gifts, and thus again the state is increasing its control over the church. What can we do to stop or counteract this trend?

The application of simpler living is becoming more difficult as society becomes more complex, and yet the importance of this feature is not to be underestimated. It demands a sort of non-conformity to the world. One of the great dangers among the General Conference Mennonites is that in attempting to proclaim our freedom from the plain garb we have become enslaved by the fashions of Hollywood and Paris. Our church architecture also shows that there has been too much of an endeavor to copy the larger denominations rather than to develop designs that express our own faith. Why not have Mennonite architecture as well as Mennonite literature and art? The materialism of the world has fastened itself as a leech on our denominational body. We are not free from the spirit of keeping up with the Joneses. Installment buying has encouraged living beyond ones means and going into debt. Is it not essential that our people capture again that thrift and industry that they once possessed? The spirit of brotherhood and helpfulness is stifled by the new grasping commercial trend. Is the mutual aid conception outmoded? I think not, but rather it needs a wider application. Christian cooperation is more advanced than the cold way of the world which would have everyone look after himself or let the government do it. We need men with pioneering faith to show mankind what a real Christian community can do. This age could well profit by a practical demonstration of a simple living of the Christ-like graces. Are there not real possibilities in this direction? The fact is that our members have been influenced more by the five or six days a week spent in the factory, shop, and school than by the two hours weekly in church or the four years in a denominational college.

How are we to attack these problems and translate old truths into fresh patterns? To my mind it was a mistake for Mennonites to give up their schools in favor of government operated public schools. One must admit the Catholics and other denominations which maintain their own schools were wiser than we. Can we hope to have our colleges counteract all the anti-Mennonite and non-Christian exerted on our youth by state schools and other outside agencies, especially, when only a small percentage of our young people are privileged to attend these institutions of higher learning? Is this attacking the problem from the wrong end? Too frequently we have dissipated our energy fighting among ourselves. Everyone passing the buck on someone else. Ministers have blamed the college and parents. Colleges have blamed the home folks and the ministers. This calls for a united attack by the home, the church and the school. Any criticism that is given should be constructive with a view to strengthen as a whole the effectiveness of our testimony for Christ. No seeking of scape-goats and no branding of honest criticism as disloyalty.

Two things stand out in my mind if the Mennonite church is going to make a worthwhile contribution to society. One is a strengthening of the home base and the other is a launching out in new directions. Most of this paper has to do with the former but let me close with a word about the latter. The historical beginnings of the Anabaptist movement was not narrow sectarianism. That is a lesson to keep in mind. Although I have grown up in an atmosphere that has given me a strong conference concern, nevertheless, I realize the danger of hide-bound denominationalism. True, if we don't support our own work no one else will, but we must not be afraid of expanding and making wider contacts. Have we not too frequently thought of ourselves? If we are interested only in holding our own, we are of all men most miserable. Would not an aggressive evangelical missionary zeal to spread our convictions be a valuable asset in the work God has given us? —Lansdale, Pa.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By P. J. Boehr, Pandora Ohio

MAY—17—"And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:18. There is here a similarity and a contrast. In Acts we read that the populace spoke of the Spirit-filled disciples at Pentecost as "full of new wine." Their boldness in testimony was so expressed, and they were so full of joy, that people mocked them, like they would drunken folks. Christians may be "talkative" and "happy" when they have the message of life to bring to dying people. The contrast lies in that with which people are filled—some with wine, and that to excess; others are filled with the Spirit, Who does not allow excess. It is sometimes said that a drop of spirituous liquor makes a person "a drop drunk," etc; hence there is always excess in drinking liquor. We also note that the Christian is commanded to "be filled with the Spirit!"

MAY 18—"Did not our hearts burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened unto us the Scriptures?" Luke 24:32. The Emmaus disciples only then got their "heart-warming" when they knew it was the Lord. They give two reasons for this experience—"while He talked with us," and "while He opened unto us the Scriptures." This will cause anyone who knows the Lord to have the chill taken off from his spirit. Many a person since then has gotten, what has been called, "the religion of the burning heart." Charles Wesley had his spiritual life transformed that way. Graf Zinzendorf had this experience. He said, "I have but one passion, and that passion is Christ!"

MAY 19—"Being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Acts 1:4. The risen Lord is in conference with His disciples for forty days; what a theme that conference has—"the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God!" How much we could have wished to "listen in" to such a far-reaching gathering as this was. The disciples, who were sitting under the Lord's instruction about the great things to come, were so well impressed about "the Glory that shall follow," that they asked, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" In a troubled world every child of God should long for the Prince of Peace to come and set up His everlasting kingdom.

MAY 20—"I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil." John 17:18. The Christian is in the world, but not of the world. The total number of Christians throughout the world make up the Church. We have our mission ("to disciple all nations") to perform among men everywhere till the Church in completed. Then those who were "called out" from the world to become members of the Body of Christ will be "caught up" (I Thess. 4,17) and taken out of the world. The Christian's outlook is very hopeful, like Adoniram Judson's saying goes, "The prospects are as bright as the Promises of God."

MAY 21—"But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." Isa. 40:31. We live in a very active world. To some it seems folly to take out time for prayer and Bible Study. How encouraging this word from Isaiah is for all who are the Lord's. It means, like someone of the saints has said, "let us advance on our knees." Prayer links our impotence with God's omnipotence, so that the weakest saint can do exploits for God. There is buoyancy for soaring like on eagle's wings; the race is won by the waiting soul; also the walking is in the strength of the Lord.

MAY 22—"But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with Power from on High." Luke 24:49. After many days of fellowship with the risen Lord and receiving instructions about the "things concerning the Kingdom," there came the tarrying, "until ye be endued with Power from on High." The Lord Who sends us into His work also gives us the equipment for the work. Here as also in Acts 1:4, the "Promise of the Father" has reference to the Holy Spirit. The tarrying was not a time of idle waiting, but a time of active prayer and preparation fo heart. The disciples obeyed their Lord's command to wait until they were filled with the Spirit's power and were in blessed fellowship one with another. Waiting in prayer before God in our day will still do wonders.

"More things are wrought through prayer, than man dreams of."

MAY 23—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Acts 1:11. There is intimate connection between Christ's ascension and His Return at the close of the Church age, or the Holy Spirit Dispensation. The passage makes it clear that the One we are to look for, is not death, or the descent of the Holy Spirit, but "this same Jesus." He ascended with uplifted hands, in the attitude of blessing, and shall come again "in like manner." What a "Blessed Hope" at this time when all other hopes disappoint us.

"O, Lord Jesus, How Long, Ere we shout the glad Song? Christ returneth, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Amen."

MAY 24 (Pentecost)—"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all of one accord in one place.... And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit. . . ." Acts 2:1-4. What a fulfillment of prophecy it was when the time "was fully come." Hearts were ready to receive the mightiest and most spectacular outpouring of the Holy Spirit in history. Given the same conditions of waiting before the Lord, of heart preparation, and of Christian fellowship ("they were all of one accord") that prevailed just before the greatest Pentecost in history, the Church would experience and the world would see very extraordinary spiritual results. Christians need a Pentecost now, a baptism of power and of testimony; so that many more will say: "We do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God."

"O Lord, send a Revival, and let it begin in me!"

EXEMPLARY LIVING

By J. J. Regier

The second step toward "Exemplary Living" is: 2A. The Establishing of Pose.

How important in this day, to be able to say: "For I know in whom I have believed." II Tim. 1:12. Such experience comes only to those who have been faithful in the exercising of "Divine Power" that is to the disposal of every child of God.

Too many times we are found in like attitude with the young man who was living in an illusion of "Extreme Economy." This young man thought it would be possible to operate his desk light with a door bell battery in the basement. When circumstance compelled the usage of light, he to his amazement discovered that his economic idea would not produce desired results. An electrician was called—with but a moments hesitation the electrician replied, "Sir, your trouble is lack of power, it takes more power to produce a light than to make a noise."

In order that we may produce a light such that will turn others "Heaven-ward," there must be a passing from the stage of "Experiment" to the degree of "Knowledge." Yes, from the youth of doubt to established unshaken matured faith in Christ Jesus. To be a pattern, a model believer before a critical world, we must pose as it were steadfast, unmoveable uncompromisingly before them, so that they who are of a contrary part may have no evil thing to say of us.

To be of such usefulness to our "Heavenly Father," there must be a daily exercising of this available God-given power. FIRST—

1b. Through the Soul's Sincere Desire, which is PRAYER.

1c. Definition of Prayer:
  1d. Lifting up of desires—Matt. 26:39*a*
  2nd. It is the exchanging of "Self Will" for God's Will.

EVANGELIST J. J. ESAU TO VISIT CANADIAN CHURCHES

At the annual Home Mission Board Meeting, held in Newton plans were discussed how to aid our churches and the members to develop a deeper spiritual life and also to link the churches in Canada more closely to the churches in the United States. For two years the Home Mission Board had been in contact with Rev. J. J. Esau, Bluffton, Ohio, and had encouraged him to conduct evangelistic meetings in the churches in the States. In his work he was encouraged to visit the smaller and far removed churches as well as the larger ones. This work proved a real blessing. During the past Rev. Esau made his own itinerary.

At the meeting it was decided to engage Rev. Esau to visit the Canadian churches, starting in Ontario and working to the west. Plans for this visit and the itinerary for Ontario were worked out by a group of ministers headed by Rev. Jacob H. Janzen. The first church to be visited is located at Leamington, Ontario, May 3rd. On the average two services are to be held in each church. It will require the entire month of May to cover all the Ontario churches.

Rev. Benjamin Ewert and a committee of fellow ministers in Manitoba will arrange for the visitation in the province. The work in Manitoba is to start with the first of June.

The plan is to have Rev. Esau bring Biblical messages that are evangelistic in nature and also to weave in some facts and information to make all members and churches feel that each individual or church is a vital part in the great work done by the Conference through the various boards, and to encourage the brethren everywhere to stand firm in the faith and to be true in their Christian service. The Home Mission Board kindly asks that this important work be remembered in daily prayers before God.

"He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:" Eph. 4:11, 12.

Thanking you for every prayer and financial support for Home Mission work in the past, I am,

Very sincerely in Him, A. J. Neuenschwander

HIS TOUCH

Medical Report from India

Repeatedly we read that Jesus touched someone and "The fever left her," "his leprosy left him," "and their eyes were opened," "and he spoke plainly." What a difference His passing by made in the lives of those whom He touched. What a difference His life and touch has made in our lives, physically as well as spiritually. Diphtheria, once so dreaded, now causes few deaths. I have never seen a death due to smallpox. "Child bed fever" continues to decrease.

Our duty as medical missionaries is to serve as a medium through which Christ can helpfully touch people, that they may be healed and that His truth may free them from ignorance and superstition. Phulmat was some six months pregnant. Associated with this there was an illness causing considerable suffering. When I saw her she had six or seven third degree burns on her abdomen each about two inches long and three-fourths inch wide. When asked why they burned her thus, the husband said that they had no doctor, so "what could we do?" Bhagat is another example. He lived with his parents some twelve miles from the hospital. He had been at the point of death for some time. This little innocent babe had burns on his neck, arms, and abdomen so severe that even some of the ignorant Christians of the village attributed his death to the burns which he had received.

Following are the statistics of medical work in India during 1941: out-patients, 18,000; in-patients, 1,775; return visits, 15,000; major operations (including cataract), 194; cataract operations, 114; minor operations, 757; obstetric cases, normal 54; abnormal obstetric cases, 16; laboratory tests, 4,350; average daily in-patients, 42¾; income, Rs 13,200 (about $4,000).

To you who read this, these statistics may be merely so many figures. To us they mean so many contacts through which we have tried to do our part in this great fellowship of believers, in Him whose touch reaches and influences every phase of life.

"Then touched He their eyes." There were 114 cataract operations the past year. At Basna there were 560 eye patients treated and an estimated 1,200 eye treatments were given.

The Leper Home had an average of 536 in-patients. Since the home cannot accommodate nearly all the patients who apply for admission, an out-patient clinic is conducted where 5,468 treatments were given.

Janjgir reports a successful health program in which sixty babies were entered in a baby show. Twenty-three prizes were given. The babies of the Christians rated much higher than those of the non-Christians.

The foregoing statistics represent an increase of 25 per cent as compared to 1938. At Basna there were six times as many in-patients as ten years ago. And "There is yet much land to be possessed."

WHO WILL FEED THESE?

A few weeks ago The Statesman, the so-to-say official newspaper of India, told us that now in 1941, India has a population of 388,800,000. If Burma is included the number is over 400,000,000. This comes very near to the population of China. In case India can remain at peace and no wide-spread famines come, and China should remain in strife and destruction, then it is likely that India will overtake China in numbers.

In the last fifty years India's population has increased a full hundred million. It was 287,300,000 in 1891. In the last decade (1931-1941), it has risen fifty million.

British India has 667,000,000 acres of land. Of this 232,000,000 acres are cultivated. Fit for cultivation but not cultivated are 154,000,000 acres. Covered with forest are 89,000,000 acres. So the average amount of cultivated land per person is .72 acre.

In our school at the Basna mission station (P. O. Jagdishpore) we teach how to bring such land under cultivation as is fit for it. But all this is physical. What is our reply to Christ's challenge, "Feed my four hundred million sheep in India the bread of life"?

Letter from Brother M. C. Lehman

Sister M. C. Lehman received from the State Department on April 12 a letter written by Brother M. C. Lehman written on December 22, 1941. Brother Lehman wrote from the Grand Hotel, then headquarters of the American Embassy at Bad Nauheim, Germany. Quoting from his letter:

"We are all, one hundred and thirty-two in number, in a nice large hotel here and are well treated and cared for in every way. I will come to the States with the Embassy. Route and time are still uncertain, and you will have to ascertain from Washington as I will not know myself when or where we will arrive..." "I am well and busy writing and reading."

Clothing Shipment to France

During the early part of April a shipment of five tons of new and used clothing was made to France on a Portuguese vessel. The contents of the shipment were various, including men's, women's and children's clothing of all descriptions and sizes.

This shipment, valued at over $11,000 will be distributed among the refugees now in concentration camps in France.

Dr. Herbert R. Schmidt to Paraguay

Dr. Herbert R. Schmidt of Bethel Clinic, Newton, Kansas, left on April 19 by plane for Asuncion, Paraguay, where he was scheduled to arrive on April 22. Dr. H. R. Schmidt is a brother to Dr. John R. Schmidt who since last summer has been serving the medical needs of the Menno and Fernheim colonies.

Dr. Herbert R. Schmidt will perform surgical operations among the Mennonite colonists in the Chaco. Present plans call for Dr. Schmidt to work in these colonies for five weeks and then return to the United States.

New Relief "Front" Opened in India

Reports from Mennonite missionaries in India as well as recent war developments bring to attention another field for relief service to refugees and war sufferers.

After a representatives meeting of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ missionaries Brother Peter Penner sent the following cable to Brother Orie O. Miller.

Champa, India
April 10, 1942

Representative meeting convened organization relief planned cable rupees three thousand monthly."

A recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Mennonite Central Committe authorized the sending of 3,000 rupees per month to India beginning with April.

Brother Byler Visits Switzerland

In a letter dated February 28, Brother Joseph N. Byler gives interesting impressions of a visit which he made to Switzerland. Besides visiting Bern and Geneva, Brother Byler worshipped with the Mennonites at Langnau. Brother Byler's purpose in visiting Switzerland was to make investigations regarding a long-range relief program for which contacts with the Swiss government would be necessary.

Love In Courtship

By John R. Mumaw

It has been a genuine satisfaction to me to know that real friendships are a great asset to Christian living. Friends make vital contributions to life in its varied and in its many prospects. The youth who steps into social activities among young people must learn how to make himself worthy of the best friendships. He needs to possess the noble quality of social dignity; that quality of honor that makes one trustworthy, respectable, and esteemed. Deepened friendships pave the way for courtship.

The urge to be in company with others is a perfectly normal impulse. The desire to associate with those of the opposite sex is only another step in the usual development of youth. It has its fundamental basis in the sex instinct. From this instinct there are impulses developed which are the strongest man possesses. When left to express itself without control it can lead a soul into the most degrading filth of social vice to pierce itself through with the deepest of sorrows. It also has in it the possibility of creating the most beautiful relationships in the whole structure of human society.

I like Browning's poem "Love Among the Ruins." He describes the place where "the quiet-colored end of evening smiles miles and miles." He imagines the position on a sloping hill where two lovers met. On that particular site a great city once was the pride of its people. As he anticipates meeting "a girl with eager eyes and yellow hair" who waits for him there on the side of the hill while she hears the sheep cropping near by, he thought of the great palaces that once stood on that site. He called to mind the marble walls that once stood there. He thought of the lust of glory among men. He thought of their wealth and their gold. He thought of their triumphs and their fame. He mused in contemplation of "Earth's returns for whole centuries of folly, noise and sin," and concluded that "Love is best." I agree with him. Don't you?

Recently I came across a long list of things that help to bind people together. The author referred to the sorrows of life and the disappointments that come. He reminded the reader that our possessions may be taken from us and that our hopes in life may be darkened. But to people who really love each other, even though all else is gone, they will conclude as they sit together: "Life is after all worthwhile so long as I have you." "Love is best."

I think we fail sometimes to rate love properly. Too many people give reasons to the critic for giving it a low rating. They use occasions of love for other purposes than that which God intended. But I still believe that love is best. One may contemplate the glories of human power, things that can be attained by human activity, but all that is superseded by love. There is something beautiful about love. It is ennobling to character. It strengthens the spiritual life when it is pure; love strengthens the life.

There are enemies of chastity that would spoil the beauty of love. They mitigate against the ordinance of marriage and against the institution of the home. Do you know that sins against the laws of purity are more frequently mentioned as a prohibition in the Scripture than any other form of transgression? They are labeled with such terms as fornication, uncleanness, abuse, adultery, and whoredom. Take the various catalogues of sins recorded in the Bible and you will find one of these in those lists more frequently than any other kind of sin.

The psychologist tells us the sex impulse may be aroused by various experiences. There are four different kinds: first, ordinary physical causes; second, abnormal physical contacts; third, emotional states; fourth, imagined situations. These suggest certain laws that dominate in the social life.

In order to avoid the tragedies that come from being overpowered with sex impulses it is necessary to be very cautious in our social contacts. Men and women need to be careful in the use of their eyes. David should have made a covenant with his eyes. People need to be careful in the movement of their bodies, in their dress, and in their speech. One sees again and again that a breach in social contact which leads into social sin leaves its scar upon the victim for life. Courtship if not engaged in according to the principles of purity will leave a mark that can never be erased. On the other hand, courtship can make a distinct contribution to life happiness. We want to adopt such principles of conduct that will leave no regrets. Love is responsible for a multitude of life's tragedies, as well as for a multitude of life's triumphs. For that reason, Christian young people, as you approach the years of courtship you need to choose the principles of right to assure yourselves against the many forms of social sin.

I have eight proposals to offer for your consideration: Exercise a reasonable restraint, employ good judgment, use common sense, make use of safe counsel, practice fidelity, guarantee honesty, pledge yourself to discretion, and seek divine guidance.

(The above is the first installment of an article published in the Christian Monitor, a publication of the "Old Mennonites." The rest of the article will appear as parts of a series).

Freeman Junior College, Her Place and Need

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus," I cor. 3:11. This is her motto. Our aim is to live up to its meaning. All our endeavor is to be in harmony therewith. To change the figure, our existence, development, fruit-bearing must proceed from Him who is the true vine. Our inmost longing and satisfaction is to bear much fruit wherewith to glorify the Father.

That this has not always been nor is now our true manifestation we humbly and with repentant hearts confess. With faith in God and His Word, who cleanseth us, we face the future. Deeply conscious that we need His cleansing and reviving care, we consecrate ourselves to serve Him in these dark and disturbed days. We believe this school is vital to the work of the Lord and our Mennonite Conference. He has kept and provided for the continued maintenance of Freeman Junior Collge during a decade of very scant supply. Drought, plagues, depression, and war have sapped and depleted our resources which were supplied. Nevertheless, our expectation is from the Lord. He brought the school into existance for His purposes; He sustained her in days of supernatural and natural testings; He must sustain and provide for her in sore trials which are upon us, as a non-resistant people amid a world at war.

Freeman College is served by a faculty of men and women who know the power of faith and believing prayer. They meet at regular intervals in early morning hours for prayer to seek guidance and grace to meet the problems of their young people. As for the students they are supplied with regular chapel periods, Christian student organization and activity wherewith to be drawn into the presence of the Lord. They study the Word under the guidance of outstanding men of God. And all other classwork is done under capable and believing men and women of God, so that all studies are properly related to the authority of God and His Word. In this manner our school is seeking to prepare its students for life duties, the foremost of which is to become branches in Christ, the true vine, and to honor His Father by bearing much fruit. —H. Albert Claassen

Program for May 24, 1942

No. 6 of Series of Six Studies in Church History

THE REFORMATION

Matthew 13:1-23

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," No. 549, "The Work Is Thine," No. 550.
2. Reading of scripture passage and prayer.
3. Biographical sketches of Hans Denck, Balthaser Hubmeier, Martin Luther, and Ulrich Zwingli. See church history book or encyclopedia.
4. Offering for home missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

In the year 1517, Martin Luther, who had found a Latin Bible at the University of Erfurt and had read it, posted 95 theses on the church door at Wittenberg. In these, he condemned the sale of indulgences. People had been led to believe that repentance was not necessary; all they had to do was to buy a letter of indulgence and their sins would be forgiven. When Luther refused to recant he was excommunicated. He was then secretly brought to the castle of Wartburg by a friend and there he translated the New and then the Old Testament into German. Later he returned to Wittenberg, resuming his work as teacher, preacher, and author.

The people accepted Luther's leadership, and whole cities and countries separated from Rome and introduced an evangelical manner of worship. The Bible came to be accepted as the only guide of our lives and faith. Cloisters were suppressed, pictures were removed from the churches, and the German language was introduced into the religious services. Luther's small and his larger catechism, his songs, and hymns, among these "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," as well as his efforts for the establishment of schools and the education of the children of common people did much to further the progress of the Reformation.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The Anabaptists and Their Leaders: a. Felix Manz, b. Konrad Grebel, c. George Blaurock.
2. The Great Church Council at Augsburg in 1527.
3. The Moravians.
4. Jacob Hutter and the Hutterite Brethren.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What abuses within the Catholic Church led to the Reformation?
2. What influences of the time helped the progress of the Reformation?
3. Why was the translation of the Bible into the native tongue so important?

V. Facts for Study:

The Reformation also gained a strong foothold in other lands at this time. In Switzerland Zwingli and later Calvin worked. In England King Henry the VIII broke relations with the Catholic Church, because the people would not let him divorce his wife, but he retained many Catholic practices and his reformation was not that of the inward life so much. Under his successor Edward VI a more thorough reformation set in which under the reign of Queen Elizabeth gained ground. Under her the English Episcopal Church was organized. Later those groups known as Puritans, Presbyterians, Baptists sprang up who wanted a simpler form of worship and a deeper spiritual life than they found in the State Church.

In France much blood was shed because of the Reformation. The Protestants, called Huguenots, met terrible persecution. On one occasion, on the night of August 24, 1572, occurred the so-called massacre of St. Bartholemew, when the Catholics killed thousands of men, women, and children. Later, however, religious freedom was granted.

In Scotland the earnest and determined stand of John Knox won the hearts of the Scottish people for the reformation, and his prayer, "O God, give me Scotland, or I die," brought forth ample fruitage.

In the Netherlands and in Sweden the re-discovered gospel spread and gained ground. In the former country the Mennonites found willing friends, and in the latter the Lutheran Church became strong and well established.

Thus these various groups, breaking away from the Catholic Church and making the Bible their handbook, proved that the gospel has power to renew, cleanse, and purify the Church as well as the lives of individuals.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

ACTIVITIES FOR THE SUMMER MONTHS

It is our hope that we are not too late to offer some activities that your Intermediate society might engage in during the summer months.

1. Union meetings with other societies in your town or community.

A most worthwhile feature of these meetings would be a question-box. We believe you could all benefit much by this sharing of experiences. Some questions which might be considered are these:

1. How can we secure promptness? 2. How can we be sure that people will do what they promise to do? 3. Who should sum up the results of the meeting? 4. What is the value of a pre-meeting session? 5. What about "clipping readers"? 6. What is good publicity? 7. How should the discussion of the topic be conducted?

2. Musical evenings:

1. Singing of hymns. 2. Interpretations of great hymns. 3. Instrumental numbers. 4. Study of the complexity of the church pipe organ.

3. Outdoor meetings:

This may be held on a hillside, beside a lake or on some shady spot of the church lawn, but be sure the middle of the meeting coincides with the setting of the sun.

4. Recognition service:

—In June there may be a recognition service for young people who are graduating from high school or college. Those who return from schools may be recognized in some special way.

5. Echo night:

—Toward the latter part of the summer have an evening when those young people who had the privilege of attending retreats or camps will tell of their experiences and the inspirations they received.

6. Picnicking day:

Plan a day for a picnic in some favorite spot. Invite young people who are not members of your society and show them what a wholesome good time Intermediates can have.

7. Visitation day:

Have a certain day set aside when each member is expected to visit at least two shut-ins.

8. Nature study hikes:

Invite some one who really knows birds or flowers to conduct this hike. God will seem all the more real to you after such a hike.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN GOD'S LAWS ARE BROKEN - - MATT. 5:17-20

A Penalty Program

There is always some result whenever a law is broken. If this law pertains to ourselves—our health, character, mind—we always pay a price, even though we cannot see it at the time. If the law broken touches others, for example, lying, stealing, murder, and the like, it never escapes the attention of the just judge. When we break God's laws, we bring punishment upon ourselves.

Adam and Eve

God put Adam and Eve in a beautiful garden of Eden. They were allowed to eat of every tree, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. If they did, they would die. There was happiness for a time, until Satan persuaded Eve to disobey God, and she yielded and gave Adam too. The result we all know. We suffer every time for our sins.

Other examples in the Bible were Achan, Saul, and David.

The Question Bee

1. Why is the sinner always miserable? 2. Can we let conscience always be our guide? 3. What is meant by "Dividing the sheep and goats"? 4. What happens when we disregard the rules of health? 5. What are the wages of sin? 6. What are the rewards of a true follower?

The Prayer List

Thank God for: (a) A mind to know right or wrong. (b) healthy bodies, (c) a form of government by the people.

Ask God for: (a) wisdom in doing His will, (b) a greater desire to serve, (c) our hearts to be fertile soil for his vineyard.

EXEMPLARY LIVING

3d. Broadens spiritual scope and penetrates God's Power.

2c. Purpose of Prayer:

Many times we are under the impression that prayer is a means that awakens God to a human need. Not so, prayer neither awakens or is intended to make God more willing to bless, but in its reactionary influence it makes the "petitioner" more receptive and fit to be blessed from a God who is continually knocking, thus suggesting His concern, and furthermore denotes His longing to come in and share His victory with our defeat. May we remember, "That nothing lies outside the power of prayer except that which lies outside the will of God." How many failures and mistakes would be avoided if we would take Christ into account, from the greatest to the minutest detail of all activities of life.

How can we pose in spiritual effectiveness before a "Sin Sick World"?

2b. By looking through the eyes of God and see what we can see. (Seeing ourselves as God sees us).

Where can we see a greater revelation of ourselves than in the lamp light of God's Word?

1c. He sees there a weakness that is pointed out in behalf of man. But looking through the eyes of God we can also see a possible STRENGTH. II Cor. 12:9

2c. He sees in us a "Hobby Sin;" maybe it is known or unknown to us, but He also sees the possibilities for victory over the practice and dominion of that sin.

3c. We see implied in His Word man's blindness, deception, counterfeit, such resulting in stunted, dwarfed Christians. But there is also given the "Counter-part," Jesus Christ, Who is the Light of the world, the light of life and the life of all light.

We cannot make our own lives effective through earnest effort and desire; it is confined with-in the realm of God's provision and it is only as we resort to that proven and established fact that we in our pose will bear forth meaning and exemplify significance for the cause of Christ.

How can we meet the challenge that confronts every child of God namely: "To keep the lower lights a burning, to represent Christ here as He represents us there"?

3b. By Listening and Heeding to "The Still Small Voice."

"An Indian who was asked to define conscience said, 'It is a little three-cornered thing in here. (Pointing to his chest). When I do wrong it turns around and hurts very much. If I keep on doing wrong it will turn until it wears the edges off and then it will not hurt anymore.' "

As we look into our own lives, it may be wise for us to pray the prayer of the Psalmist: "Search me O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts:

And see if there be any wicked in me, and lead me in the way everlasting. (Psalm 139:23, 24)

Many of the "essential values," that contribute to the spiritual welfare of a "Born Again Child of God," have been forfeited to the "Hush" but "Rushing" trend of time. We conclude that "Haste makes waste," even exposing the spiritual make-up of man to the dart of the adversary.

Are we indulging with unhindered, compromise in those activities that bore conviction yesterday, but where we today cohere with him who through coercive persuasion has brought about a "grinding off of sharp edges;" where that once responsive key of your life has lost its tone of melody and has become dull and irresponsible to the "Still Small Voice"?

May God grant that though we are weak, yet through our realization of our own weakness we may look into the face of Christ and claim His all sufficient strength to create in us a keenness to sense to see, to hear and to know the joy that comes in heeding to His bidding, as we continue to "exercise in His abounding Grace."

(To be continued)

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Appreciation for Services of Henry and Bluffton Boys

Newspapers in the recent tornado areas carried interesting stories about the work of the Henry and Bluffton boys in clearing the rubble and debris in the town of Lacon, Illinois, and Goshen, Indiana. Remarks of commendation came from many people who observed the spirit and quality of work which the boys performed.

Brother Bachman, director of the Henry, Illinois, camp and Brother Hartzler, director of the Bluffton, Indiana camp (now Medaryville) report that the boys in their respective camps showed an excellent spirit and a willingness to do their part in this emergency.

Florida Health Project Begun

A new type of "work of national importance" was begun with the opening of a twenty-five men unit at Crestview, Florida, in the latter part of March. The camp will be composed of boys from Mennonite and Brethren administered camps and will be jointly administered by the two groups.

The work program will be under the Florida Public Health Service and will consist of hookworm and malaria control measures.

New Units at Hagerstown Open

Units 3 and 4 of the Washington County, Md. (Hagerstown) camp have received their initial assignments of four and five boys from Grottoes and Sideling Hill respectively. Unit 3 will accommodate Old Order Amish boys, and the assistant director is Brother Henry Beiler. Brother Noah Miller of East Aurora, New York, will serve as assistant director at Unit 4 in addition to assuming oversight of the religious life of the other units which comprise C.P.S. camp No. 24.

Unit 4 is located on the farm which was recently purchased by the Mennonite Publishing House of Scottdale, Pa. and made available by the House for C.P.S. use.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

Thursday: The Last Day With The Disciples

Luke 22: 14-30

TOPIC: The Lord's Supper

Introduction

Jesus sent Peter and John into Jerusalem to make the needed preparations for the Passover meal. Jesus gave definite directions for finding the right room, ready, equipped with the necessary table and couches. There they made ready for Jesus and the Twelve. When evening came they all met in this room, and then began the most memorable evening which Christ spent with his disciples, a period of deeply intimate fellowship and spiritual instruction.

Jesus Institutes the Lord's Supper vss. 15-23

Jesus had an intense longing to keep this last passover with the Twelve before his sacrifical death. As their best Friend, He would make this his last solemn farewell. In this last talk with them, He gathered his deepest teachings. He purposed to transform the solemn passover feast which commemorated the great deliverance from Egypt, into a spiritual feast which should be a memorial of deliverance from sin through his death. This feast is for every race under heaven. This was to be the last official passover. Jesus indicates that this is his last earthly meal with them. He would not eat again thereof until the new kingdom had been eablished by his death. After his death and ascension Jesus was separated from his disciples, but He will come again and establish the kingdom of God on earth. (vs. 18, Matt. 26:29)

Jesus took a loaf of unleavened bread, blessed it, and broke it—bread was not cut with a knife—and gave to the disciples. He often spoke in metaphors: "I am the door," "I am the living bread," "I am the way," etc. Jesus meant quite naturally; "This bread represents my body which is given for you," not given to you. Note the distinction. God has given us bread to sustain life. This bread must be broken and received into the system before it can nourish us. Christ's body had to be broken, crucified for us before it could be the bread of life for our soul. The sacrifice of Christ's body was necessary for our eternal life. This new supper is a memorial of our deliverance through Christ. The Lord's Supper commemorates a past event, and looks forward to a future event, the coming of the kingdom. God has made a new covenant with man, for the forgiveness and remission of sin. This covenant is based upon the sacrifice, upon the blood of grace and salvation by faith.

Christ's death on the cross means everything to us. It spells the difference between eternal life and eternal doom. He laid down his life for us. He died that we might have everlasting life. He wants us to hold this memory. He instituted the Lord's Supper for this purpose. When we partake of the Supper, we thus testify that we believe that his death has atoning virtue and that we are trusting in Him for salvation. The value of the Supper to us, will depend upon the spiritual preparation we make for observing it. There is no place for mere admirers around the Lord's table. It is for those who have confessed Christ as Lord and God.

Judas sat down with the Twelve: Mark 14: 17-21, Matt. 26:21-25, and John 13:30 indicate that he did not partake of the Supper, having gone out before Christ instituted it. Christ's death was in God's plan of salvation. He knew what wicked men would do to Christ. Judas was free to choose for himself. He had to assume full responsibility, and to bear the full consequence of his guilt.

True Greatness vss. 24-30

How disappointed Jesus must have been with the disciples. They appear to have been disputing with covetous feelings about the positions of honor they were to hold in the coming kingdom. Jesus had been saying so much about this kingdom. This hurt Christ's sensitive soul. They were not to be like earthly kings. Greatness expresses itself in service in the kingdom. Christ's followers will see true greatness in a readiness to be of service. The disciples stood by Jesus in his trials, and they shall share his glory and authority with Him in his kingdom.

In what sense did Jesus fulfill the meaning of the Passover lamb?

What is the main condition that fits one to receive the Lord's Supper?

Under what conditions may the Lord's Supper prepare us for service?

Spirit of power, Spirit of God,
Spirit of burning, work through Thy Word;
Search us and sift us, spare not the dross,
Show us that self-life ends at the cross.

—D. W. Whittle

IN MEMORIAM

PETER MILLER, SR., Feb. 14, 1859 to April 8, 1942. Son of John and Maria Schrag Miller. Born in Poland, Russia. Came to America with parents in 1874 and settled with them on a homestead farm in Turner County, South Dakota. Church activity: Member of Salem-Zion Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, and was very much concerned about the spiritual well-being and growth of the church. Took great interest in missions. Many ministers and missionaries enjoyed hearty welcome in his home. Married Anna Kaufman, Nov. 1, 1888. She preceded him in death in 1936. His children Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Brown, missionaries in China, could not be informed of their father's death because of war conditions.

ROSA WUETRICH BERGMAN, Oct. 11, 1870 to Feb. 24, 1942. Born in Switzerland. Was married to Cornelius Bergman January 11, 1895. Lived in Oklahoma, California, and Washington. Member of the First Mennonite Church, Monroe, Washington. In the early nineties she was employed as a helper on the Mennonite Mission Field in Oklahoma. Funeral was conducted by her pastor, M. M. Lehman.

CORRESPONDENCE

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Pandora, Ohio

We owe our Lord praise and thanksgiving for His goodness and mercy towards us.

The sisters of the St. John Church Mission Society gave us a very interesting program. On February 9 our church was host to a fellowship supper for the members of the church councils of the St. John, Bluffton, and Ebenezer churches.

Our pastor gave us a series of six sermons on "Understanding Jesus." The subjects were: "Love," "Faith," "Does Prayer Change Things?," "Jesus' Idea of Victory Without Defeat," "Church Fellowship," and "Perfection of Jesus Life."

On February 15 Dr. C. Henry Smith was our speaker at a special peace program. On the World Day of Prayer Missionary Walter Schutz from Africa spoke to us. On the following Sunday he told us of his experience among the people they had learned to love and also showed African curios.

The Senior Fellowship meets once a month in the different homes. It consists of unmarried folks above high school age. They presented the religious film, "King of Kings" for the benefit of the community.

Our pastor lead us in a study of "What Does It Mean To Be a Christian?" during six prayer and study services. In March the Men's Gospel Team from Bluffton College visited us. Brother Sam Locher, one of our Sunday School teachers, died on March 19 from a heart attack.

At a silver tea for mothers and daughters the Dorcas Mission Girls had Mrs. Paul Wenger of India and Mrs. Walter Schutz of Africa serve as the speakers. We received twenty-two new members on Palm Sunday. On Good Friday our choir sang "The Seven Last Words" by Dubois. Mr. Loren McNeil directed the forty-five voices.

We lifted an offering for the Gideons that they may present testaments to the boys in service. For the past ten weeks Bible instruction has been given to the six lower grades of the public school. One teacher from each of the four churches served. The pupils gave a program to show what they had accomplished. On April 19 Dr. Pannabecker, Bible instructor at Bluffton College, gave a talk on China and showed slides. Those married the past quarter are: Victor Bucher and Lucille Burry and Robert Neiswander and Helen Geiger.

EMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Pratum, Oregon

After Rev. Unruh had attended the meeting of the Foreign Mission Board in Newton, Kansas, he came home by way of Marion, South Dakota, and while there conducted a series of meetings at the Bethesda Mennonite Church. While our pastor was absent the Salem chapter of Gideons rendered a very timely program. Miss Goodrich, who is a missionary to the Jews in Austria, Russia, and America, spoke to us and showed pictures of her work. The Westmont College of Los Angeles presented a good program in our church. Their conduct, as well as their voices, was a bright testimony of their love for the Lord Jesus Christ.

At a congregation meeting we resolved to take an offering every fourth Sunday of the month for our C.P.S. camps. In February our missionary society brought together an attractive lot of canned fruit and non-perishable foods, which our pastor and wife, accompanied by Miss Etta Davis, delivered to the Cascade Locks camp. On March 29 Brother Unruh and camp. Lyle Krug and Roy Rutschman are in service there. So is Arthur Franz formerly of this church. Melvin Lehrman, Ernest Gerig, and Edgar Nafziger will report at this camp on April 23. Eldon Wenger, David Gerig, Clayton Dalke, and Harry Palleson are in military service. Let us pray much.

On Psalm Sunday our pastor delivered a very timely message on, "We Would See Jesus." May we as His children so see Jesus in His beauty and glory that our lives may shine with His glory and unsaved souls will see Jesus in us. How shall they see Jesus if they cannot see Him in you and me? Let us not forget to pray for one another. —Corr.

SALEM-ZION MENNONITE CHURCH

Freeman, South Dakota

On March 1 Rev. and Mrs. H. Albert Claassen concluded six and one-half years of faithful service in our church. At the farewell program words of appreciation were spoken by representative members of the church organizations and by visiting ministers. We wish them God's blessing in their new home. Our loss will be another's gain.

With deep regret we accepted the resignation of Rev. and Mrs. H. N. Harder, who had accepted our call. We pray that the Lord may speedily restore Mrs. Harder to her family and to her service in their chosen work.

Rev. and Mrs. P. A. Penner have kindly consented to take over the pastoral duties of our church for the present. We regard it a privilege and a blessing to have these sincere Christian missionaries with us.

Two weeks ago Grandfather Peter Miller died. He will be missed, not only in our congregation but in Mennonite circles as well, as he was widely known as the father of Mrs. H. J. Brown, still serving in China, and Mrs. Sam Goering, formerly of China and now at North Newton, Kansas. Many church friends were welcomed to his home during his lifetime.

At present three of our young men are in camps, Alfred Schmidt in Nebraska, Ervin Schrag in Colorado, and Felix Graber in California.

We have purchased two hundred copies of the Mennonite Hymnary. Many families got extra copies for individual use. We have been "Spring housecleaning" our church and grounds. The church interior has been redecorated. Furnishings were added to the mother's room and new seats to the choir loft.

We are looking forward to June 6-10 at which time the Northern District Conference convenes here. It is the fiftieth anniversary of this conference, and the motto chosen for this meeting is "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." If we think of God's goodness to us we can truly say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." —Mrs. Albert Schwartz, Corr.

WOODLAND MENNONITE CHURCH

Warroad, Minnesota

On January 18 Mr. Jacob Wiens visited our Sunday School and conducted services afterwards. Mr. Wiens is engaged in Sunday School work for the American Sunday School Union.

Communion services were held on Good Friday, when He died that we might be free. Each family was represented in song, verse, or story, in an Easter program given April 5. It was truly a blessed time for all attending.

The members of the sewing club have been busy during the winter months preparing fancy work and several comforters for the annual sewing club sale. The weather has been favorable all winter so that the semi-monthly meetings were well attended. —J. G. Q.

MENNONITES AND THEIR HERITAGE

Edited by Harold S. Bender

This series of six booklets is published by the Mennonite Central Committee. They are especially designed for the use of the men in our C. P. S. camps. Consequently, the facts of Mennonite history and heritage are given in a very compact and readable form in these booklets which should also prove very valuable for church study groups. The editor makes this statement about them: "They are but an introduction to the fields of study indicated by their titles, but they are full of rich material. May they contribute to a greater appreciation of the church and its splendid heritage of faith and life which has come down through more than four centuries from martyr saints in distant lands. But may they contribute still more to deeper insights of truth, more sturdy convictions, and an continued, unreserved commitment of life, without which faith has no meaning."

Number I. Mennonite Origins in Europe

By Harold S. Bender

The opening number of this series of study booklets on Mennonites and Their Heritage deals chiefly with the beginnings of the Mennonites in the countries of Europe. The three parts of the booklet cover a wider scope than that: A. The Soil Out of Which Grew the Life of the Mennonite Church. B. The First Mennonites and Their Faith. C. The Experiences of the Mennonites of Europe to the Present Time.

The author who has a keen insight into the history and faith of the Mennonites has here presented a brief yet intelligible survey of this large field. The student or reader will get a clear-cut view of the causes that led to the rise of the Mennonite Church and of its history for over four centuries in Europe. The author has in preparing this book drawn considerable material from the manuscript of John Horsch's book, Mennonites of Europe, which is now being published. The booklet breathes a spirit of deep devotion to the faith of the Mennonite Church and enthusiastic appreciation for the martyr courage of the men and women who have lived out this faith under difficult and trying circumstances. 71 pages.

Number II. Mennonites in America

By C. Henry Smith

This is a seventy-two page booklet dealing in a brief way with the history of the Mennonites during the two hundred fifty years they have lived in America. The author has accomplished a difficult task in condensing this history within such a small compass. Two main divisions are found in the booklet: A. How the Mennonites came to America and Where They Settled. B. One Vine but Many Branches—Origin, History, Peculiar Emphasis and Contributions of the Various Mennonite Branches. In a clear way the several tides of Mennonite and Amish Mennonite immigration to the American continent are outlined, together with the story of how the main settlements were formed. Very helpful for members of all groups of Mennonites is the brief and sympathetic treatment of the various branches of the Mennonite Church that is given here. From it one can gain an intelligent understanding of the main reasons for the existence of these branches, which will do much to help him appreciate groups other than his own.

Number III. Mennonite Heritage

By Edward Yoder

In this 62-page book the author discusses the basic principles of the heritage of faith which has been handed down through the more than four hundred years of Mennonite history. Considerable attention is given to the unique and original contributions of Mennonitism, such as believers' baptism, voluntary church membership, freedom of conscience, separation of church and state, nonresistance, nonswearing of oaths, relation of the Old and New Testaments. Especial emphasis is given to our nonresistance heritage, its basis, meaning, and implication. It is a helpful and inspiring presentation of both the Mennonite faith and its resultant way of life.

Number VI. Life and Service in the Kingdom of God

By P. C. Hiebert

This sixty-four page booklet is organized in two parts: A. The Christian Life and Its Meaning. B. The Christian's Service in the Kingdom. In the first part the author gives a splendid brief treatment of the essential principles for beginning the Christian life and for the growth and development in that life. Special attention is given to the place of worship, prayer, and the Bible in living the Christian life. The second part contains many practical instructions for exercising one's Christian faith and for expressing Christian life in forms of service in the Church and its activities. There is felt in this booklet a spirit of true devotion and spiritual earnestness. Its study will help many young people to deeper spiritual life and consecration to Christ.

The two books in the series yet to be published and which are now in manuscript form, are

IV. Our Mission as a Church of Christ, by Ed. G. Kaufman.

V. Christian Relationships to State and Community, by Guy F. Hershberger.

The books are uniformly bound in attractive and durable paper covers. Price, 20c each; in quantities of ten or more, 15c each. Order from the publishers, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.

Ye Shall Receive Power

There can be little or no power until that which makes for power is given the opportunity to express itself in the form of power. Jesus made this clear. He promised the disciples that they would receive power through the Holy Spirit. He told them to wait at Jerusalem. That is, they were to give the Holy Spirit the opportunity to express Himself in and through them. The Holy Spirit could not express Himself in power until consecrated men and women permitted Him to operate in and through them. Man's cooperation is all-important in the realization of power, be it physical or spiritual.

Today monstrous steam locomotives hiss by us, pulling loads which in former days would have required thousands of horses to move. A huge spiderweb of steel covers our continent. To all cities and to nearly every town and hamlet come the products of industry and commerce, brought by steam.

Steam means power to men who choose to use it. Once steam did not denote power. Once it climbed lazily into the air from hot mineral springs and was lost. Once it hovered over the food pots of early peoples. It hovered and was lost. Once it shook the lids of tea kettles, but that was all. Today the power of steam is manifested in great works. Why? Because man gave steam the opportunity to express itself in power.

Today hundreds of thousands of dots of light punctuate the darkness in which some city lies. Somewhere rushing water whirls a massive turbine. The rush of water is transformed into electric current. Long lines stretch across mountains and plains. A childish finger moves a switch. Electric power floods the room with light. Once rushing water did no such thing. Wasn't it capable of lighting a room? Yes, it was, but man had to give it the chance.

Today more than half a million windmills in the United States lift underground water to the surface and make it available for animals and vegetation. Once the wind turned no wheels and lifted no water. The wind blew then as it blows today, but man had to give it the opportunity to express itself in power.

There can be little or no spiritual power in us until we give the Holy Spirit the opportunity to express Himself in and through us. The power of the Holy Spirit is as available to us this day as it was to the disciples on the Day of Pentecost. God yearns to fill us with the power of the Holy Spirit. However, unless you and I give Him the opportunity, He cannot. What we do or fail to do determines whether or not the power of the Holy Spirit will be ours.

Today we need to do as the disciples once did. We need to permit God to lead us into that condition of spiritual life in which He can fill us with His Spirit. The disciples were to wait at Jerusalem. They didn't just "pass time." They waited yearningly, expectantly, for the Holy Spirit. We must hunger and thirst if we would be filled. We must want with all our might. Furthermore, it is very likely that while they waited, they pondered upon many of the significant sayings of Jesus which now began to come back to them. The study of Jesus' words is a wonderful preparation for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit can do little with heathen people until they have the words of Jesus. The Bible was read and the Holy Spirit worked a Reformation. We need to dwell upon the words of Jesus if we would have the Holy Spirit fill us with its power. The disciples continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. When God-loving men and women are as one in worship and fellowship, then the Holy Spirit can fill them with power. When love for the one God unites us, then great power is ours.

The power of the Holy Spirit is ours today, if we do our part. Wait, and do not hurry. Ponder the words of Jesus, instead of neglecting them. Assemble with God-loving people, and not with those who are unmindful of Him. A great experience will then be yours. Give the Holy Spirit an opportunity to express His power in and through you. God longs to fill you with power. Give Him the opportunity.

—rw.

If, in all meekness and lowliness of heart, we allow the Holy Spirit to dwell in us, and are obedient to His voice, He will keep our hearts in a holy calm in the midst of ten thousand cares, and weaknesses and troubles. —Selected

PROBLEMS IN PARAGUAY COLONIES

By Vernon H. Schmidt

If you were in a community where there was no doctor, and no medical help of any kind, where most illness went unattended except for simple home remedies, where those who had more severe illnesses travelled for an entire day in an old farm wagon, where people suffered patiently or otherwise from the physical troubles that come to the human race, you would think something should be done, would you not? Well, that is just the condition in which our Mennonite colonies in Paraguay were located, and which we are trying to remedy at present.

There are two distinct communities—the oldest colony, in the Chaco district, was a colony of Russian Mennonites who had emigrated from Russia about 1874 to western Canada, and then about 1928 moved to Chaco, Paraguay; this is called the Menno colony. About two years later the Fernheim colony arrived direct from Russia and settled on adjoining land. These colonists had two full days or more to travel by wagon, then one day on primitive train to their nearest doctor. But a number of years ago a hospital building was erected, and since then they have had several doctors for very short periods of time who took care of the needs of the colony.

The second distinct community was started about 1937 when a large group left the Fernheim colony for a portion of Paraguay, which had a climate more agreeable to them. This was the Friesland colony about four hundred miles southwest of Fernheim, one hundred miles northwest of Asuncion. Then early in 1941 a group of Hutterites, refugees from Europe, came to Paraguay and settled on land adjoining this Friesland colony called the Primavera colony. Thus, we have two communities in which we are interested in the medical work—the Chaco groups with about 4,000 people, and the Friesland group with about 1,500. Besides this in both districts there are many natives who need medical care and come to our colonies for this when there is any available.

Last July the Mennonite Central Committee sent Dr. John Schmidt, from near Canton, Kansas, to this hospital in the Chaco to serve as doctor there. He has been doing wonderful work there since that time, and has accomplished a lot of good and won the friendship and confidence of most of the people there; but the people are dreading the day when he might return to his home—and what will they do? They hate to think of returning to the former condition of medical service. There has been some talk of supporting one of their own young men in medical college, but so far no suitable person has been found willing to return to work there. There are several Mennonite girls there working as nurses, but the help is inadequate owing to lack of proper training for most of these girls.

In east Paraguay in Friesland and Primavera where I am working, the situation is different. Here we have among the Hutterites three doctors—one man and two women—but not so much in the way of equipment and facilities. But we are remedying that for in the near future we shall have a fine hospital building and adequate equipment to care for most of the common illnesses. There may be special cases where additional equipment would be advisable, but

HIS WILL

I chose to be a sturdy oak—
A tall and stately tree,
To stand beside a river bed,
With branches straight and free.

I chose to be of service to
Each stranger day by day,
And point the way to God and Heav'n
To those who came my way.

I thought my shadow was a place
Where weary folks might lie
And rest, while in the heat of day
Parched souls succumb and die.

That in the rain and cold at night,
My leaves might well provide
A shelter for each passer-by—
A place for him to hide.

'Twas not until my trunk was cut,
(My life seemed scarce begun)
I realized I wasn't right,
And said, "Thy will be done."

But after days and days of rest
And praying to the Lord,
Two workmen came with saw and plane
To make of me, — a board.

I lay and suffered while each stroke
Cut deep into my soul,
And then was set into a room
Beyond my own control.

The product was an easy chair,—
Not beautiful, — just plain,
But just the piece of furniture
That corner should contain.

And in that room, to my delight,
Was perfect harmony.
I found that being in God's Will,
Was all He asked of me.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

The Rural Church is a Fellowship

Throughout its history the Mennonite Church has attempted to be a Christian fellowship modeled after that of the First Century Christians. Where meeting houses are located in small towns and in open country communities that is still the aim and practice. In every successful Mennonite community in America the church or meeting house has been at the center of that community's life and activities. In fact, in many of the Mennonite communities the church and the community are spoken of in synonymous terms.

Fellowship and the Family

The Mennonite family comes to the Sunday morning meetings as a unit. Both parents and children attend Sunday school and worship service. Children do not run home after Sunday school but remain for church services with their parents. As one minister recently remarked, this is sometimes hard on the minister, but it is an encouraging sign for future generations of Mennonites. By discussing the same lessons, hearing the same sermons, and meeting with the same people week after week, the family is strengthened and unified. It has a basis of conversation and thought for the week at home. People come to Sunday morning services to hear the sermon and to receive spiritual guidance, but they come for more than that. They come to visit with each other, to see friends, and to exchange the latest news. This is all a part of true Christian fellowship. A Mennonite doctor recently told me that he frequently gets more joy and benefit out of his fellowship with members of the brother and sisterhood after the meeting than he does out of the sermon. The doctor may be voicing the opinion of many others in thus expressing the value of Christian fellowship. Of course, one should not mistake idle gossip for wholesome fellowship. Ordinarily the strength and inspiration of the sermon will temper the conversation and determine the spirit of the people after the service. It should also be remembered that the singing of hymns and the participation in prayers is a vital part of the fellowship experience. It is an occasion when the minds and the spirits of people are drawn closer together.

The Minister

In most Mennonite communities the minister is still the most important person in the community. He is looked to for leadership in various capacities. He is called on for help in times when serious decisions have to be made and when sorrow strikes the individual or the family. He is expected to speak words of approval or disapproval on social practices when there is a question of doubt in the minds of his people. He is looked to for suggestions and for original ideas, and his judgment weighs heavily in passing on the soundness of ideas expressed by others. The minister does much to determine the culture of the community by his choices of what he reads, what he preaches, and what speakers and programs from outside the community he brings into his church. By his choices he is determining what the minds of his people shall be exposed to and what they shall be denied. Over the years he thus determines public opinion and thereby helps determine the character of the community. He is, thus, at the center and at the head of the Christian fellowship of which we have been speaking. This same place of prominence cannot be claimed by ministers in every religious body.

Fellowship Like a Wheel

Christian fellowship might be likened to a wheel. Jesus Christ is at the center. He is the hub. God is both at the hub and at the rim. Beyond Him there is no other. He holds together the whole and by His spirit pervades the whole. Between the hub and the rim are the spokes on which the various Christians are located. Some are close to the center and some are far out toward the rim, but in a Christian fellowship none are ever out beyond the rim. The closer men are to the center the closer they are to Christ and the nearer they are to each other. Also the closer they move toward the hub the stronger they become in their Christian life. Mennonite churches have tried to be Christian fellowships modeled after the spontaneous First Century Christian fellowships. This is a noble ideal. The world needs more than anything else a demonstration of wholesome Christian fellowship. May Mennonites continue to develop and demonstrate this lofty ideal.

Paraguay Mennonites Express Gratitude for Clothing from North America

Last January 12 a shipment of over 11,000 pounds of clothing was made to the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay from the clothing depot of the Mennonite Central Committee. Brother Vernon Schmidt's letters of April 8 and 14 tell of the arrival of this clothing and its distribution to appreciative Mennonite families.

He says: "We have supplied 110 families with clothing since it arrived and averaged probably 25 pieces to the family." With the approach of winter the overcoats, comforters, and quilts seem to be especially appreciated. —Grant M. Stoltzfus with the set-up as it will soon be, the three doctors can do a wonderful amount of good in this community.

The hospital we are building here is to be about 16 x 120 feet, including a waiting room, consultation rooms for the doctors, a pharmacy, office, laboratory, operating room, and sick rooms for fifteen or more patients. In a small separate building about 16 x 25 feet will be a kitchen and a laundry. These buildings will have a cement floor, walls made of mud bricks, and a grass roof. There will be a veranda about five feet wide all around the buildings for shade to keep the rooms cooler, for the heat is very intense during the middle of the day.

We will not be able to complete the building mainly because the materials are not yet ready for the building. Carpenters would find it very difficult here to build houses. Here they would have to cut down trees and saw them up into lumber—they could not go to town every hour or so and buy another board if necessary! There are none to be bought! They must be made! We also must make the bricks for the walls. We had to buy nails for the building, screen wire for the windows, cement for the floor, and lime for plastering. That is about all the building material available in stores. The most common wood here in this district, suitable for building, is a cedar tree, but not the kind of cedar we are acquainted with in U. S. It is a good substantial wood. The builders here say that the framework and woodwork used, unless termites get into it, would be good for a hundred years. These buildings, I know from observation of other buildings in the vicinity, are very substantial and last a very long time. The grass we plan to use on the roof lasts about twenty years—as long as some shingle roofs do at home. Then, we will supply the interior of the building with all equipment necessary for the hospital — beds, bedding, buckets, brooms, tables, chairs, storage shelves, some instruments, kitchen and laundry equipment, cooking utensils, eating utensils for patients, and most other items needed until the money appropriated for this purpose is exhausted. Some things cost more down here than at home because it has to be imported from there, but other things are cheaper too because they are made here.

When this hospital is finished, I think this eastern community in Paraguay will have its medical needs supplied; and if the Chaco district has a permanent doctor, I think their needs would be about supplied also. Both places could use better trained nurses and also will occasionally need to replace equipment. But these things would not cause such a great problem as these initial needs have done.

Now about future work down here. A shipment of clothing has been sent from our Akron supply house which should arrive any time. This is to be distributed mostly to those Mennonites who have more recently come from Russia—the Fernheim and Friesland colonies. This shipment should care for most of the immediate needs of these people to this purpose. I am sure it will be a joy to me to be able to help supply the needs of these people by helping distribute this clothing. From remarks made by them when they heard the clothing was on its way, I know they will appreciate everything that comes too.

The second need here is expected in a short time —not so great now as it will be in a few months. The Chaco district has been subjected to a severe drought this year, and the people were unable to plant any crop. Hence, there is no harvest this year. Most of the people did care for small garden patches, so they have had a very small amount of vegetables so far, but since winter is coming on down here, and the garden supplies will cease, there will be a great need for food for this district in a couple of months and also for seed for their planting in the spring—August and September. It is my opinion that without our help conditions there will approach a famine soon.

One other thing—looking into the future. A great need is here for better transportation—better roads. The roads at present are so bad that most farmers would be ashamed to have them as a cattle lane from banr to pasture! And all travel, both of people and of freight coming in and produce shipped out, must be carried over these roads by wagon. It would surely be a big help here if we could in some way supply the need for better transportation.

Thus, we see that one need—medical need—is partially supplied, but that there is still some unsupplied. Another need—clothing—is coming. But there are still others even besides those mentioned that are unfilled. This is still a problem for the future. Can we help these people, these our brethren, still more? DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By P. J. Boehr, Pandora Ohio

MAY 25—"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" Luke 11:13. By nature man is evil. But even the people of the world favor each other when it comes to giving gifts. It is the "golden rule" when we do unto others as we wish them to do unto us. Here, however, we perceive a higher law in action, which is separated from the "golden rule" by the "how much more." It is God the Father who gives to us, His unworthy children, the Holy Spirit for the asking. Pentecost may therefore be an everyday experience for every Christian. The normal Christian life is the Spirit-filled life.

"Give all He asks; take all He promises."
—S. D. Gordon

MAY 26—"But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit. . . . Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Rom. 8:9. The eighth chapter of Romans is indicative of the Christian's life on the highest plane. It is a life according to the "law of the Spirit of life," and not a life according to the "flesh," or, as may be said, "let good enough alone." Every one who has accepted Christ as Saviour has the Holy Spirit, but it is a different thing to own Christ also as Lord. In the first instance we must have the Holy Spirit, or else we are "none of His;" in the second instance, the Holy Spirit must have "all of us." Then we can say, "make me a captive, Lord, and then I shall be free," or, as Ephesians 2:19 puts it, we are then "filled to all the fulness of God."

MAY 27—"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. . . . Quench not the Spirit." Eph. 4:30; I Thess. 5:19. "Sinning Christians," although a paradox, are the stumbling block to the non-church-goer. However, the Holy Spirit does not leave the Christian when he sins, but He cannot manifest Himself through such an instrument. The Spirit of God is tender and reticent, and so cannot countenance sin in the believer's life. To grieve the Spirit may mean active hindering of the work of God by the Spirit, by falling into sin; whereas to quench the Spirit means the withholding of the Christian testimony.

"Make me a channel of Blessing, I pray.
My life possessing, My Service blessing;
Make me a channel of Blessing today."

MAY 28—"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8:14, 16. From these verses we gather that, after having accepted Christ as our Saviour, we need not be left in the dark as to this greatest of all experiences. We have ample proof from Scripture that we can know that we know that we have passed from death to life, that we have "eternal life" now. The surest proof that I am a child of God is the "Witness of the Spirit" to my spirit. How else can we know that we are "led by the Spirit"?

"The Spirit answers to the Blood,
And tells me I am born of God."

MAY 29—"Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit Himself maketh intercession for us. . . ." Rom. 8:26. The Holy Spirit is also the Spirit of prayer. In Zech. 12:10 He is the "Spirit of Grace and of supplication," preparing Israel to recognize her Messiah, when the Lord Jesus returns. Then they shall "look upon me (Christ) whom they have pierced." What a preparation for prayer, when the Holy Spirit is the teacher! Such praying always receives an answer, because it is "praying in the Holy Ghost" (Jude 20), and "according to the will of God." The late evangelist Billy Sunday said, "God answers all prayers, by Yes, No, or Wait."

MAY 30—". . . And whoever shall speak against the Son of Man may obtain forgiveness; but whoever speaks against the Holy Spirit shall obtain forgiveness neither in this nor in the coming age." (Weymouth) Matt. 12:32. It behooves men not to trifle with the Holy Spirit. Isn't it significant that by a strange providence people with a "filthy mouth" never seem to use the name of the Holy Spirit in vain, but that often they use the names of God and of Jesus Christ in vain? Sinners everywhere can be thankful that we still live in the day when "The Spirit of God strives with men." In Heb. 10:29, we read of this "sin against the Holy Spirit" as "doing despite to (or insult) the Spirit of Grace." Few there are, we believe, who have committed this horrible sin; further, we believe that people who fear they have sinned in this manner, may yet find pardon and peace through Christ.

MAY 31—"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come! . . . . Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!" Rev. 22:17, 20. As God is the Alpha and the Omega (the Beginning and the End), so is also the Holy Spirit the beginning and the consummation of the saints. He is "calling out a people for his Name" (the Bride) in this the Holy Spirit dispensation. It is highly significant and explicit that here, at the end of the New Testament, the Spirit and the bride pray for the return of the Lord Jesus. Both are yearning for that glad day. Christ then answers, and says, "Surely, I come quickly." The Bride (or Church) responds with: "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus." During this month the passages were selected with reference to the Holy Spirit. May the "Eternal Spirit" once again manifest Himself in great power by a church-wide spiritual awakening all through the world, that many more hearts will yield to the Saviour, and Jesus may come very soon.

C. P. S. CAMP NEWS

New Mennonite Camp

On April 23 six boys from the Henry, Illinois, camp were transferred to C.P.S. Camp No. 25 at Weeping Water, Nebraska. This marked the opening of another Mennonite-administered camp and brings the total to ten. The work program of the camp is directed by the Soil Conservation Service.

Following are the staff members:

Director, Brother Erwin Goering, Moundridge, Kansas
Matron, Mrs. Erwin Goering, Moundridge, Kansas
Educational Director, Brother Harold T. Wiebe, Hillsboro, Kansas
Dietitian, Sister Selma Rupp, Moundridge, Kansas
Business Manager, Brother Donald Gundy (Assignee), Meadows, Illinois

An assignment of ninety-eight boys is expected to arrive at the camp on May 15.

Brother Albert Gaeddert Assumes New Duties

Brother Albert Gaeddert has been appointed as Assistant General Director of Mennonite C. P. S. camps in the western states. This new duty is in addition to his work as director of the Colorado Springs camp.

Brother Gaeddert to date has explored possibilities of hospital service for Mennonite C.P.S. boys.

NEW MENNONITE CAMP OPENS IN CALIFORNIA

Brother Henry A. Fast reports that on April 23 an assignment of twenty-seven boys arrived at C.P.S. Camp No. 31, Camino, California. These boys were transferees from the Cascade Locks camp in Oregon.

This is the ninth Mennonite-administered camp to be opened. The following have been appointed as members of the camp staff:

Director, Brother H. H. Brubaker, Mechanicsburg, Pa.
Matron, Sister Brubaker
Assistant Director and Educational Director, William J. Ramseyer of Normal, Illinois
Dietitian, Sister Florence Auernheimer, Reedley, California
Business Manager, Brother Rudolph Lichti, Parlier, California

Brother and Sister Brubaker are former Brethren in Christ missionaries to Africa. It is expected that this camp will soon be filled to its capacity of 150 boys.

EDUCATION IN THE C. P. S. CAMPS

Introduction

The Civilian Public Service Camps are not primarily schools, but from their beginning it has been a concern of the Mennonite Central Committee that each camp should through its educational program provide for the development of each campee in as many ways as possible.

A survey of the eight Mennonite-administered camps now in operation reveals a wide variety of educational opportunities being offered to the over nine hundred boys in them. The educational directors, while assuming much of the teaching responsibility, are in many cases finding teachers among the campees themselves. A number of college graduates are in our camps who render their help in the educational program. Most of the educational work is on a high school level though a few courses are of college grade.

The Core Course

The heart of the educational program in Mennonite camps is the "Core Course," entitled "Mennonites and their Heritage." This course of six units consists of twelve lessons per unit and treats on Mennonite origins, principles and distinctive emphasis and is the only course designed and intended for each campee. Reports from camps indicate that nearly every camp is offering this vital course or will soon offer it.

Bible Courses

In addition to this basic course most of the camps are conducting Bible classes, church history classes, and in at least one camp courses are given in certain phases of Christian work. Book study courses have been followed in a few camps. These Bible courses are in addition to Sunday school, prayer meeting, and Sunday evening Bible meetings.

General Subjects

To meet need among th boys for training in broader fields it is interesting to learn that throughout the camps subjects such as the following are offered: Farm Management, Farm Accounting, Agriculture, Economics, Bookkeeping, Typing, Public Speaking, Grammar, English, Physiology and Anatomy, Nature Study, and Spanish.

First Aid courses are offered at each camp, and in the present emergency each campee is strongly urged to avail himself of the benefits of this course. Other features which are considered essential in the education of each campee are the lectures given by the government men of the technical staff on Safety, Soil Conservation, Fire Fighting, and other subjects relating to the camp project. Plans are maturing which will provide training of evacuation, relief, and fire-fighting units among the boys in camp.

Cultural Pursuits and Hobbies

In each camp there is some musical interest and activity. Men's Choruses, led by campee-directors in many cases, rehearse regularly, and nearly each camp has several quartets. Camp choruses and quartets have frequently appeared in churches where they have taken part in programs. Besides the choruses and quartets there are classes in music, both vocal and instrumental.

In addition to the formal classes the boys spend time in woodworking, crafts, and camera club meetings. Several camps have access to local libraries as well as having libraries of their own which contain, in most camps, several hundred volumes on a wide range of subjects. Several Mennonite publishing houses have made generous offers of free literature to the camps. Many people have kindly loaned or donated books to camp libraries. Religious and scientific magazines, in addition to news periodicals, number as high as fifty at some of the camps. Many of these are free subscriptions.

Conclusion

The educational program seeks to provide the means for growth in spirit, mind and body during leisure time. Many boys are showing keen interest in the program. It is to be sincerely hoped that (as stated in the letter sent to many boys before their going to camp) these opportunities "can become one of the most significant experiences of their lives."

THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

A recently published booklet on The Conscientious Objector under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 can be obtained for 5c by ordering from the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.

This booklet gives official government statements regarding civilian service besides containing information on camp administration, types of C.P.S. service, method of assignment, and general information about the whole Civilian Public Service program.

PEACE SECTION NOTE

Church Service Units Encouraged

It has been suggested that the local non-resistant congregations should take immediate steps toward the organization of service units to operate separately from the local offices of Civilian Service. There are a number of communities which have already organized an alternative program. One church community has organized first-aid classes with competent medical instructors to give thorough training in the treatment of emergency cases. Such training is useful in all circumstances whether in times of war or of peace. It better qualifies the trainee to carry out his ideals of constructive service to his fellowmen.

Others are training for fire-fighting. This also is useful both in war-time or in peace-time. Still others are exploring the possibility in case of bombardment. All these various services are in line with our principles of constructive and preservative effort. And all of them require advance preparation for their effectual administration.

The point which we emphasize here is that we should have our own advance plan and program in our non-resistant communities as an answer to the expected pressure to join Civilian Defense projects. In some communities the organization of the non-resistant groups along these lines is respected and recognized by Local Defense Councils. It is again the furnishing of a positive answer instead of a negative emphasis of our position. —J.W.H.

FRIDAY: THE DAY OF SUFFERING

(Gethsemane and Trials)

Mark 14:32-34, 44-46, 15:1-5

Topic: FROM GETHSEMANE TO PILATE'S COURT

Introduction

In our lesson we consider some of the events of that fateful night in which our Lord was betrayed "into the hands of sinners." There was no sleep for Jesus and very little for the disciples, in that night. The first part of it was spent in quiet fellowship with the disciples in the upper room. After the Supper, Jesus led the disciples out of Jerusalem to the Garden of Gethsemane where He spent the rest of the night in prayer. Oh, the burden, the suffering, the satanic hate, the horror of darkness through which Jesus had to pass before He could cry, "It is finished."

Jesus' Agony in the Garden vss. 32-34

Jesus chose a familiar spot for prayer as He was facing the great crisis of His life. Gethsemane, which means "the place of the olive-press," was on the west slope of the Mount of Olives and about three-quarters of a mile from the city walls. Jesus frequently went there for meditation and prayer. He wished to pray alone, yet He wanted His disciples to be near as a comfort to Him. Prayer was as necessary to Jesus as breathing. Jesus craved for the sympathy of the three of the inner circle and took them with Him further into the shadows. Jesus was overwhelmed with soul anguish. The words used are strong expressions and indicate an intense agitation, dread, and spiritual distress. The horror of the satanic hate and mockery and crucifixion which awaited Him swept over His soul. It was the inconceivable agony of the weight of the sins of men. We shall not understand the real meaning of Gethsemane unless we recognize that there was "laid on Him the iniquity of us all" This weight of the world's sin upon His soul, this alone can explain His soul grief. Jesus prayed with an intense earnestness (Luke 22:44), a prayer of petition and submission. His prayer was answered, not by saving Him from suffering and death, but by strengthening Him for the terrible ordeal.

Jesus Betrayed vss. 44-46

Judas' betrayal of his Lord with a kiss was one of the most despicable acts of all history. The kiss was regarded as an appropriate way of saluting a rabbi. Judas had arranged this way of directly pointing out Jesus to His enemies. He approached Jesus as though he were delighted to meet a very close friend and pretended to express his deep heart affection. Jesus' enemies arrested Him and led Him away. It is easy for us to heap condemnation on Judas, but are there not many who betray their Lord today? Many who call Him "Master" and say complimentary things about Him do at the same time deny His deity, and the value of His atoning death. Professed followers of Christ help to bring the cause of God into derision by unworthy acts or tempers and, thus, do much harm to Christ and His kingdom.

Jesus' Trials vss. 1-5

Jesus was taken first to Annas and then to Caiaphas, the high priest at that time. Here He was tried before the Sanhedrin. The death sentence had been determined upon by His enemies. They had much difficulty in finding a good ground upon which He could be condemned. Early the next morning the whole Sanhedrin met in consultation to pronounce formal sentence and decide on how to present the case to Pilate. They knew that the blasphemy charge would have no value with Pilate. His verdict was necessary for Jesus' death. So they delivered Him to Pilate for judgment and sentence. Pilate's question indicates that the charge brought against Jesus was chiefly political, that He professed to be a king. This interested Pilate as it had a direct bearing on his authority and that of Caesar. Jesus admitted that He was the king of the Jews, but He explained that His kingdom was not of this world (John 18:33-37). Jesus made no answer to the many things of which the chief priests accused Him. All these things convinced Pilate that they had no charges serious enough to demand the death penalty. Jesus' whole life was a sufficient answer to all their charges.

Why could not even Peter, James and John share Jesus' lonely suffering?

In what sense was Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane answered?

When is silence wise? When ought we to speak?

LOVE IN COURTSHIP

By John R. Mumau

Exercise a Reasonable Restraint

Love needs restraint to be ennobling. There is little else that ennobles life as the love of a good man for a good woman. Love quickens the intellect and fortifies against temptation. In the life developments of a child, you will notice an infant cannot express all it feels. As the child develops it understands itself better and it learns how to express itself more clearly. That is the normal experience of a child. The same is true of love. A normal infant love does not express all it feels, nor should it. It is like an infant. So often those of the early teen age who engage in courtship are coarse in their conversations and very uncouth in their conduct. This accounts for most of the silliness that you see in boys. Some young fellows make dunces of themselves. Boys do not know how to express themselves. They have not grown up yet, and that is why their attempt at love-making is so blundersome. Among the girls, very frequently, the means of gaining attention from the boys is a loud laughter or a strange jitter. It is an infant expression. Love needs a normal growth before it expresses itself. For that reason the first feelings of love must be restrained.

It seems to me that even among the older folks, some people lose their heads in this matter of love and love relationships. I do not know if they are afraid it is the last chance or not, but some people get all excited over love. Love needs restraint to be noble and lasting.

Employ Good Judgment

Love needs good judgment to be successful. Look back again into the days of early adolescence. The early teen-age people are inclined to think they know, but time proves a change of mind in many things. For that reason the period of the early and middle teens is no time for courtship. This is a preparation period, a time of adjustment, a time when youth are learning their lessons of self-control. That is why it is unsafe for early teen-age groups to engage in courtship. It should be reserved for those who have reached the ages of eighteen, nineteen, and twenty—when they have a more mature judgment. However, these early years are a period of association. In this type of association we need to remember that good judgment is in the process of development; so we need the presence of our parents or older ones to direct the activities of the younger group. I think I ought to throw in a bit of caution here.

Some people think when they see a boy talking to a girl, she has a boy friend. Sometimes a boy gets so shallow that if a girl looks at him he thinks he has a girl friend. That is unfortunate. It shows a lack of good judgment. He isn't old enough to know what love is. Wait until you have good judgment. And even then it is unwise for a lover to press his claims too soon. There is the danger of rushing the season of dates. Such people often outrun themselves in the game. Frequency of courtship calls is reserved for those only who know they are about to get married.

SENTENCE SERMONS

Sometimes a short sentence sermon strikes a need in our lives which long-winded preaching cannot touch. The following have been selected more or less at random:

By nothing do men show their character better than by the things they laugh at. —Goethe

A poor argument is the worst help one can render a good cause.

It's what you learn after you know it all that counts.

Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly at a distance but to do what lies clearly at hand. —Carlyle

If we could see ourselves as others see us, the chances are we would never take a second look.

A loose tongue often gets its owner into a tight place.

If you would take the real measure of a man, note the size of the things that make him mad.

The best way to prove your religion is not to argue about its facts but to produce its proper results.

Inspiration in private devotion can never be replaced by perspiration in public service.

Striking while the iron is hot is all right, but too many men strike while the head is hot.

It is tragically possible to have a saved soul and a lost life.

God often encourages the weak in faith by giving speedy answers to prayer, but the strong in faith are often tested by His delays.

—The Bethel Collegian

THE BEAUTY OF MAY

Gone is the Winter, all nature doth sing,
Blithesomely, gladsomely cometh the Spring,
Mountain and meadow, forest and plain,
Clothed in their beauty sing praises again.

The Winter's long reign and the darkness are o'er
In the life-giving sunshine remembered no more,
While birds, hills and trees, united in voice,
Tell every sad heart to look up and rejoice.

The orchard in glory of pink and white,
The outgoing splendors of morning and night,
The sweet-smelling earth and the soft-falling rain,
Make gladness to flourish like hope after pain.

The hand of the Father in lavish array
A pageant of Beauty prepareth in May,
But His care for the sparrow, the flower, the tree
Is nought to the love that He bears you and me.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for May 31, 1942
No. 1 of Three Studies on Missions
MISSIONARY WORK—EARLY PHASES

Acts 11:19-26

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Forward Through the Ages," No. 267; "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," No. 274.
2. Reading of scripture passage, prayer, and leader's remarks.
3. Special music.
4. Offering for C. P. S. camps.

II. Leader's Introduction:

In the 18th century in many circles of evangelical Christianity great interest in the spread of God's kingdom developed. People began to realize that being a follower of Jesus should lead to service of love for the poor, the sick, the neglected, and the fallen. Out of this conviction the Sunday School movement was born in England. It began with teaching the children who spent their time on the streets. It soon took in older children, and finally, adults.

The formation of Bible societies started through a small incident. A preacher found that a little girl had gone a rather long distance to her aunt who owned a Bible to learn the text of his Sunday message by heart. He consulted with a friend how the Bible might be gotten into the hands of the people everywhere. This resulted in the foundation of the British Bible Society in 1804. Similar societies elsewhere did their share, and this helped the work the Sunday School was doing.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The Moravians; 2. The Wesleys and their Influence; 3. The Life and Work of William Carey; 4. The Work of Jacob Spener and August Hermann Franke.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What did the Sunday School movement do for the Church? 2. What part have Bible societies had in the mission movement? 3. How did interest in missions begin?

V. Facts for Study:

The Pietists laid much emphasis upon two things: the study of the scriptures and doing practical Christian work. As a result the German Protestants became interested in foreign missions. Among the very first ones sent were two young men, Ziegenbalg and Pluctchau, who did fine work in India. A little later Swartz went to the mission field. His work was outstanding; he was especially active in establishing Christian schools.

The Moravians, sheltered by Count Zinzendorf, began extensive missionary activities under his guidance in the West Indies, in Greenland, and among the American Indians. From that day on they have been foremost in mission work, giving a larger sum every year in proportion to their wealth, and furnishing more missionaries in proportion to their numbers than any other Christian denomination.

The man to enlist English Christians in giving the gospel to the heathen was Willian Carey. He was a poor cobbler by trade, but he had an intense interest in missions. He hung up a map of the world in his shop, and without instruction, mastered five languages. He induced the Baptist churches to organize a missionary society which sent him and a doctor, named Thomas, to India. He devoted some of his time to translating and printing the scriptures, and in his lifetime 212,000 copies were printed and distributed in forty different languages and dialects.

Among the pioneers in the work of missions are such men as John Eliot and David Brainard who went to the Indians of New England, and Hans Egede who worked among the Eskimos in Greenland.

One of the greatest results of these missionary efforts has been their reflex influence on the spiritual life and growth of the churches who promoted them.

HAVING GOOD TIMES TOGETHER

Daily References:

May 25 Rich and poor meet together, Prov. 22:2; May 26 Two or three together, Matt. 18:20; May 27 A sign of peace, Isa. 65:25; May 28 In worship, Ps. 55:14; May 29 Peaceableness, Ps. 133:1; May 30 Unanimity, Amos 3:3; May 31 Topic, Luke 15:22-24.

A Challenge to Societies:

"Maintain in the society's meetings and recreational events the spirit of self-respect, reverence, friendly cooperation and dependability."

Discussion of Topic:

1. How can we widen the comradeship of our members? Are there young people in our church or community who should be members of our Intermediate societies? How can we win them to our society and to Christ, above all?

2. Discuss the use of literature. How can the use of good literature be promoted? Does your church have a good library? Perhaps your society could start one or get other church groups to join in with you to interest people in having one.

3. What recreational facilities are there in our community? Are there some which Christian Endeavorers should not attend?

4. Finally, what should be our recreational standards?

Recreation is not the highest kind of enjoyment, but in its time and place is quite as proper as prayer. —S. I. Prime

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

WORKING WITH GOD IN MY COMMUNITY

Mark 16:20

A Challenger Meeting

This last meeting in this goup of five lessons, should challenge you Juniors, to survey your locality, and look about you to see what laws are broken. Some will be personal, some for the group, and maybe some affect the whole community. Among the latter would be the breaking of the Sabbath, injustice toward the poor, destroying health through liquor and narcotics. Every place where good can take the place of bad, through our efforts, others know that you are working with God. A safe rule to follow is "If you can safely take God with you in your work or play and not leave him outside, you may be sure you are in his will."

All the work that God's children do should be done with God, in cooperation with God. "We then as workers together with him." (II Cor. 6:1) The woman of Samaria worked with God in her community when she testified concerning Jesus Christ and brought the people to hear His words.

There are so many things that challenge the youth of America. Some dare us to take our stand for Christ in the face of ridicule or censor. Sometimes material gain rises higher than spiritual gain in our lives. This too destroys the real self. The lust of the flesh, the eye, pride of life, are all but expressions of self, and we must become strong through Christ to overcome them.

Then the devil is our greatest contest. He is the final source of all our temptations, only he approaches us through different channels. Sometimes he comes openly, like a roaring lion and again very subtly, transforming himself into an angel of light. But we have the promise of God that if we resist him, he will flee from us.

The Christian in the World Today

1. The World we see——disturbed
2. The Life we live——blameless and harmless
3. The Light we reflect——shine as lights
4. The Message we give——Word of Life

EXEMPLARY LIVING

By J. J. Regier

The third step toward "Exemplary Living" is the quest for a God designed radiance of a Christ imbedded life.

It is only as we look into the pagan lands such as India with her "Buddhism," Zoroasterism, and Hinduism; China with three basic religions, known as Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism; Japan with Shintoism, etc., that we begin to realize in part the significance of that saying, "Men are religious naturally; they are Christians supernaturally."

A supernatural act applied—should imply not only the gripping of soul but the effecting of life, in its entirety. "Christianity is revealed in Scripture but it lives in Christians." To substantiate the above we quote, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify the Father which is in Heaven." "A face without a smile is like a lantern with a dirty globe." The light is there, but the benefit is greatly hampered.

If we were suddenly smitten dumb so that we could not express our inner feeling and experience and if we were paralyzed so that we could not walk, neither use our hands—would there be any means at our disposal that would relinquish a man from his fear and agony of soul and point him "Heavenward"? Should not our "countenance" give wake to our experience that we have been with Christ? To do thus we must:

1A. Exalt the Power of God in our lives:

To see this exemplified in a life, we turn our attention to the character Moses:

1B. Unmindful of himself, "Wist not that the skin of his face did shine.' The secret of his radiant countenance is found in verse eight in that he had entered the presence of God in absolute humiliation realizing that he was nothing, "his head was bowed to the ground." He had learned: "Not to seek for employment fitted for his powers, but for power equal to his opportunity. The need is not for easier lives but to be stronger men."

2B. They were afraid to come nigh unto him. Does the scoffer of God get next to our life before he finds our spiritual position? Does he have to break through the crust of our timidness and thereby get under the surface, before we will openly testify to the power of God? It was self evident in the life of Moses.

3B. Moses stood before the people with a veil before his face. We can deduct two facts from the picture that is before us:

1C. That his radiant face was bringing conviction upon the life of those who stood in his presence.

2C. That there was a veil between the interests of Moses and the interests of the Israelites.

4B. Moses stood unveiled before God:

1C. His speech had become a sacred entrustment.

2C. He had become teachable before God.

3C. He had openly confessed his life before God.

4C. He had come to the experience where he worshiped (idolized) God.

Conclusion: It is only as we idolize God that we place ourselves in God's position that He can exalt Himself through us. We believe, but do we idolize Him—no room for anything or anyone else?

"The puddle does not contain the heavens, but it reflects them. Can we not reflect the same image of God?"

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

CHRIST AND RICEFIELDS

Some of you have heard of Jageshwar of Basna. Brother Moyer has had many blessed conversations about Christ with this Brahman teacher. This Brahman non-Christian has prayed to Christ for a number of years. Once, upon Brother Moyer's instigation, Jageshwar went to a large interchurch convention. There Rev. George Lapp led a men's meeting. At the start of the meeting Rev. Lapp wished prayer from someone in the group. Jageshwar, the non-Christian, sat in the front row and showed interest in what was going on. Rev. Lapp, not knowing the man, was attracted to him and said, pointing to him, "You brother, pray." Jageshwar, the non-Christian, rose to his feet and prayed such a fine, devoted prayer that many in that interchurch group thought that he was a leading evangelist in the Christian church.

A few days ago he came to me and said, "I have had a remarkable experience with Christ." Of course, I asked him what that was.

He said, "Several weeks ago my neighbor whose rice fields are lower than mine stole my water during the night (growing rice must stand in water). At first, I was very angry, because this would mean crop failure and suffering in my family, because the rains are very scarce this year. I was about to let loose on my neighbor. But, I prayed, 'Lord if you want me to follow you, please, help me control my anger! And the Lord did. I only told my neighbor that it hurt me that he had stolen the water. Soon thereafter a little rain shower came. Not enough for rice. Yet my higher fields are moist, and they will bring me a little rice. My neighbor's fields are dry as dust even though they are lower than mine. Christ's hand must be in that." Thus runs the story of Jageshwar, the heathen—outwardly. Does our heavenly Father prepare and use as a witness even the non-Christian?

CYCLING IN INDIA

The time to make the crooked straight and the rough places even has not yet arrived in our mission field in India as far as the physical road is concerned. The automobile can go on up a long stretch of country road, but it is well to have a bicycle on the running board for "the rest of the way." This "rest of the way" is over stone, through rice fields, through mud ditches, over stumps, and what not. Usually this lasts for several miles. A desire for pleasure does not take us over such roads. But at the end of such roads are our brothers and sisters in Christ. There are their wistful children, eager to learn, often bubbling over with questions. There at the end of such a road are the hungry, Christless people to whom the good news of salvation must be brought. There is the field for seed sowing, and in our days for harvesting too. Yes, cycling in India is a "perspiring" job, resulting in painful backaches, but most rewarding in Christ.

EVENING SONG

Hear me, O Father, I pray,
Hear me at close of this day;
Softly the shadows of night have crept low,
Down from Thy heaven the starlight's pure glow
Falls on the slumbering earth,
Falls on the slumbering earth.

Bless me, O Father, I pray.
Weary from toil of this day
Nestles my soul in Thy tender embrace,
Finding Thy pardon, Thy mercy, Thy grace;
Resting in Thy loving arms,
Resting in Thy loving arms.

Grant me, O Father, I pray,
Joy for the battle of day;
Pour through my weakness the strength of Thy Son,
Fasten my hand in the Crucified One;
In Him shall victory be,
In Him shall victory be.

Keep me, O Father, I pray,
A light in earth's darkening day,
Keep me until like a dove in its flight
My soul shall ascend through the portals of night
To be forever with Thee,
To be forever with Thee.

The Soldier's Inventory

By Rev. A. P. Waltner

Before we attempt to speak on this subject we probably should define our topic. This topic asks for an exposition on The Soldier's Inventory. The text that is to be used as the basis of this exposition is recorded in Psalms 139:23-24: "Search me O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." This Bible passage does not speak directly about a soldier, but it speaks about an "inventory," even if that word is not mentioned.

Let us first of all see "who" or "what" a soldier is. Webster defines a soldier as, "One who is engaged in military service, as an officer or a private; one who serves in an army; one of an organized body of combatants." This is Webster's definition of a soldier. According to this definition all those that are engaged in military service—captains, officers, and privates—are soldiers. Not all soldiers are captains and officers; but all captains and officers are soldiers.

Now let us see what the Bible has to say about soldiers. Who are soldiers? If I understand the Word of God correctly, each person who accepts Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour becomes by virtue of this act "a soldier of the cross." As each believer is a living stone in the spiritual temple, or a member of Christ's body, so is each believer a soldier in Christ's army. It seems to me that our poets have understood the Bible in the same way. I am thinking of the beautiful song everybody likes to sing, "Onward Christian soldiers, marching as to war; with the cross of Jesus going on before." Of whom was the author thinking when he composed this song? Surely of all believers. Or the song, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus; ye soldiers of the cross." Who were his soldiers that he challenged to battle? I believe all Christians; all those who are born again. A number of other songs could be mentioned that express the same thought, as the hymn: "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" etc. Poets may err, however, so I shall quote a Bible passage that I believe teaches the same thought. It is Ephesians 6: 10-11, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." To whom does the apostle Paul give this admonition? Whom does he have in mind when he says, "Finally, my brethren?" No doubt he was thinking of all who had accepted Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and Lord. Through the new birth or faith in Christ, they had become his brethren. These he challenges to put on the whole armour of God—so he likens them to soldiers. Some other passages might be quoted, but this will suffice to show that each Christian is or should be a soldier in the spiritual sense. I believe the committee, when it prepared this program, very likely had in mind the ministers, missionaries and other Christian workers. Since captains and officers of an army are soldiers, ministers, missionaries and other Christian workers may also be classified as such. The word of God really does so. However, we might also think of them as officers and captains, so today when we speak about the "Soldier's Inventory," we shall confine our thoughts chiefly to ministers, missionaries and other Christian workers.

Now let us define the word "inventory." This word is not found in the Bible. It really is a business term or expression, but makes a very striking application when spiritualized. It is defined thus: "A detailed written schedule or list of chattels, goods, merchandise, debts, credits, lands, tenements, etc., made either for commercial purposes, or for legal proceedings." We know that nearly all businessmen make or take such an inventory annually in order to find out what they have in stock, and to determine whether their business was operated at a profit or loss. Should a minister of the gospel make such an inventory? If so, how and when is such an inventory to be made?

I believe that a minister (also other Christian workers) should make an inventory from time to time. In order to make an inventory that is to be profitable the minister should know what an ideal minister is to be like. He should know something about the standard. In Washington, D. C., we have standard weights and standard measures. When a question arises as to the correctness of some weights or measures, all that is necessary is to apply the standard test. So God has given to us standard measures and weights for a soldier of Christ—captains and privates—in His Word. The standard for captains—ministers and missionaries—are specifically recorded in Leviticus, I and II Timothy and Titus. The latter three are commonly called the "pastoral books." They should be read often by all ministers and missionaries. When doing so we should always apply the standard first of all to ourselves. It is always a sad case when a minister has a high standard for others, but a low standard for himself. In these books we have an ideal description of what a minister is to be—his character, his work, his equipment, his efficiency. Some other passages in the Bible also point out some of these requisites very beautifully. A good example is Ephesians 6:10-18. Besides these Bible passages God has given us a living Standard in Jesus Christ. Christ does not change. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. When we have taken an inventory of ourselves, let us compare this inventory with the character and life of Jesus Christ and with the standard set forth in the pastoral books and other Bible passages. If we do this I am sure we will never have cause to be puffed up or to become phlegmatic in our ministry. The taking of such an inventory will always humble us deeply.

We all know that a soldier needs some equipment. It would be folly to send a soldier to war without any equipment against an enemy that is well trained and well equipped. The government supplies all soldiers with the needed equipment and trains them in the use of this equipment. A good soldier is one who is efficient in the use of his equipment. God also supplies his soldiers—captains and privates—with the necessary equipment. He is anxious to make them efficient in the use of this equipment. This efficiency comes by much practice and effort. This equipment meets all needs and occasions. We have a beautiful description of it in Ephesians 6:10-18. Let us examine it briefly. In verse 11 Paul says, "Put on the whole armour of God." We want to emphasize the word "whole." Paul had observed that some of the soldiers went forth to the battlefield without having put on the whole armour of God. Some things were left behind. They were looked upon as unnecessary, and the result was always deplorable. So it is today. Without the whole armour of God we are bound to fail. God has not too many articles in His equipment. We need them all, for our enemy, the devil, is not easily overcome. Many a battle was lost because some one had failed to put on the whole armour of God. Let us see what this whole armour of God comprises.

In verse 14 we read, "stand therefore having your loins girt about with truth." This shows us that the first article in the whole armour of God is truth. If applied to a minister we see that he must be a man of truth. Jesus says, "I am the truth," (John 14:6). A soldier of the cross must have his loins girt about with the truth of Jesus Christ, the truth that Jesus taught, the truth that is so beautifully revealed in the word of God. The loins must be girt about with this truth. This is a figure of speech that the minister must always stand in readiness to carry out the commands of his Commander-in-Chief, Jesus Christ. He must always be ready to carry this truth to the places where it is needed. I believe that there is also another thought in this expression. If applied to a minister, it means that he must be true, he must be genuine. If he is not he will fail sooner or later. We have too many sad examples recorded in the history of ministers where they have made shipwreck because they were not true, because they were not genuine. Do we possess this article? Are our loins girt about with truth? Can we list this article as number one in our inventory?

Also in verse 14 Paul adds, "and having on the breastplate of righteousness." This shows us that the second article in the whole armour of God is righteousness. This article protects our most vital organs—the heart and lungs. At Paul's time it would have been very foolish to go to war without that breastplate in its proper place. So, a minister of the gospel shall never go to the battlefield without having first put on the breastplate of righteousness. The righteousness of Christ imputed to us is our breastplate against the arrows of divine wrath; and protects our heart against the fiery darts that Satan shoots against us. We all know that little German prayer that is so full of meaning, "Christi Blut and Gerechtigkeit, Das its mein Schmuck und Ehrenkleid. Damit will ich vor Gott bestehn, Wenn ich zum Himmel werd' eingehn." We can call this the breastplate of righteousness. A minister must also strive to be righteous and just in all of his acts. If he fails to do this a fiery dart of the devil may strike his heart. Many a minister has been knocked off the battlefield because he was not clad about with righteousness. His words and deeds were not in harmony. Therefore, let us see to it that this part of the whole armour of God may not lack in our ministry. Can we list the "breastplate of righteousness" as article number two in our inventory? Do we possess it? Can God call us righteous? Will men have to call us so if our lives are justly examined?

—"Rev. R. Weinbrenner will discontinue his position as pastor of the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, on November 1, 1942, in order that he may devote his full time to his newly accepted duties with the Education and Publication Boards of our conference.

His withdrawal has been accepted with deep regrets. Brother Weinbrenner has faithfully ministered to the spiritual needs of our congregation for nearly three years; his work with our young people is especially helpful at the present time. Both he and Mrs. Weinbrenner have made many intimate friends, and we hope and pray that God may continue to bless them richly in their new and larger field of service." —W. C. A. Corr.

—A pastorial footnote: It pains me deeply to think of leaving our beloved congregation. We have been overwhelmed with kindness. Better cooperation could not have been asked for. We would like to serve God longer in this church, but it is our conviction that it is God's will that we take up different work, that He has at this time entrusted to us, namely, work for the publication and education boards of our conference. We would follow the gleam and do our Father's will.—R. Weinbrenner

—Dr. J. H. Langenwalter in the bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, says, "Patience. Whether mothers know it or not, they live the double meaning which Jesus gave to patience. These meanings are to keep one's balance and to keep up one's courage greatly and for a long time. What spirit excels in this virtue if not the spirit of motherhood?"

—Rev. H. E. Nunemaker says in the Church Messenger of the Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa, "This organization (Women's Missionary Society), which also performs the functions of Ladies' Aid, is proverbially the standby of the church. It is one of the most active of the organizations of the church, yet its work is not of such nature as to keep it in the limelight. It does its work quietly, a stitch at a time, and makes its contribution where it is needed. One of the very worthwhile projects of the General Conference Women's Missionary Societies, a project in which our society is cooperating wholeheartedly, is the Retired Missionaries' Pension Fund." —"In accordance with the decision of the church council, two offerings will be received for Bluffton College during this year. May 3 is the date for the first of these offerings. Bluffton is our school. It depends for its life on the good will of our people. It is worthy of our support. May 31 is also the date for our quarterly offerings for relief work and for the Civilian Public Service Camps of the church."

—The Retreat of the Eastern District will be held in July. Two week-ends will be used as in other years. Possibly one session may be lengthened a day. Rev. Walter Dyck of Beatrice, Nebraska, will be one of the speakers.

—Ordained in the Eastern District recently were, Elmer D. Hess as elder at the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Denver, Lancaster County, Pa. (This church became a member of the General Conference at the last session.) and Ward Shelly of Springfield, Pa., as a minister of the gospel.

—Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel, President of the Eastern District recently attended the sessions of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches at Harrisburg.

—The Grace Church Messenger

—The Sunday School of the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa., paid the lumber necessary to erect cabin "Wilhelmina" at Mennolan. Eighteen workers put up the cabin on two Saturdays.

—First Mennonite Church, Ransom, Kansas, May 1: "Eight young people were recently received into the church through baptism . . . We are looking forward to having Rev. Lester Hostetler and Dr. A. J. Regier with us next week, and we expect great blessings from their stay with us. Church and Sunday School attendance this spring has been affected by the sickness prevalent in this community. We have received ample rainfall this spring, so that the prospects for a good crop are very promising. (Ransom lies in the Dust Bowl).

—Abraham Albrecht, Corr.

—The Annual Conference of the Pacific Ditsrict will be held at Colfax, Washington, June 18-21.

—From bulletins of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Pratum, Oregon: The bulletin of this church describes it as "The Neighborly Rural Church." That is a beautiful description. May God bless the members in carrying out the meaning of this inspiring phrase. In the bulletin of March 8, the pastor says, "There was a fine spirit of Christian tolerance shown at our congregational meeting on Wednesday evening, and even though there was a wide divergence of opinion as to the Christian's place in time of war, we recognized that above everything else we need the guidance of the Holy Spirit in meeting the important personal issues that confront us." . . . "Among some of the things that were decided was this: Resolved that we take an offering for the Civilian Public Service Camps each month on the fourth Sunday of the month, at the morning worship service."—A recent offering for the building fund amounted to $339.39.

—The Gospel Team from the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, California, recently gave a program in the First Mennonite Church, Upland, California.

—Lest we forget! We Mennonites have been accused of passing resolutions at conferences and conventions and then forgetting about them. So let us know that the delegates at the last General Conference session "RESOLVED, That we heartily recommend to our people the following books recently produced by Mennonites, and strongly urge their use and study: a) The thorough and readable Story of the Mennonites by Dr. C. H. Smith. b) The valuable study Introduction to Child Care by Miss Ella Wiebe. We further appreciate it highly that these manuscripts have been turned over to the General Conference. c) The inspiring story of pioneer missionary work With Christ on the Edge of the Jungles by S. T. Moyer. d) The Mennonite Hymnary which makes such a rich contribution to our worship services. We further express our appreciation of the splendid work of the Women's Missionary Society in making available literature." (Res. 74)

—Sunday School Attendance: According to the April issue of The Church School Promoter the Sunday School attendance among the Northern Baptists and Northern Methodists decreased from 1926 to 1936 as follows: 1,052,794 to 892,972 and 3,796,561 to 2,515,181. While at the same time there was an increase among the Church of the Nazarene and among the Mennonites as follows: 109,237 to 136,227 and 87,897 to 113,136. "Is this a matter for us to be proud? We should humbly thank God for the increase and pray for spiritual insight and power to be able to continue in this growth." —Figures and quotation from the bulletin of the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska.

—European nations are reported to have been at war 323 years out of the last 500 years. Twenty-six years of the last century are regarded as having been years of peace. How can it be otherwise as long as some of the most fundamental teachings of Christ are ignored? We reap as we sow.

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: "Sunday, April 26, we had Holy Communion, and as is our custom after it was served we remembered those of our denomination who have given their life in the service of Christ, by giving an offering to the Ministers' and Missionaries' Pension Fund. On Sunday May 10 Rev. J. N. Smucker will begin a week's series of services.

—O. K. Galle, Sec. Expansion Com.

—A new church has been organized by the Mennonites living at Walton, which is about eight miles northeast of Newton, Kansas. Ronald von Riesen, a senior at Bethel College, has been preaching regularly for them.

—Bethel College recently observed the second annual Labor Day. Over 150 students take part in Bethel's work program. The Bethel College Bulletin relates that Dr. Cecil Hinshaw of Friends University, Wichita, "suggested the need in our day for a new type of college in which both faculty members and students engage in some practical manual labor, both as a means of sustaining the college and for the wholesome effect that it has upon the individuals themselves." (If cheerleaders have their place, why not have some cheering for student work well done? Certainly, the students who work need a lot of "morale" support from fellow-students, parents, professors, and friends.)

—Rev. A. S. Bechtel writes, "I think the series of articles by Dr. Fretz of Bethel are good and timely for our Mennonite people. Something to think about. He is a good Pennsylvania Dutchman come out to the Middle West to imbibe of this western spirit and also bring some of the eastern spirit with him. Good thing to mix East and West up a little. I believe it is helping both." Brother Bechtel is scheduled to give the baccalaureate sermon for the Hanston, Kansas, High School this year.

—Dr. Henry N. Wieman has said, "Whatever we may think of Russian Communism the Russian people are today with utmost heroism and sacrifice putting all their mighty strength in an effort that will shove the course of history a little farther toward God's way than it would otherwise follow. —Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Friesen, 1621 15th Avenue, Oakland, California, write "Enclosed find $3.00 for our subscription to The Mennonite. My wife and I read every page of it. That's the only way we can keep in touch with our people and the principles that we still hold dear. There is no Mennonite church here, and as much as we know only a few Mennonite families."

—God willing, the Northern District Conference will meet in the Salem-Zion Church near Freeman, South Dakota, from June 6th to 10th inclusive. Delegates and others who plan to attend this conference, to which all are cordially invited, will kindly inform Mr. Edw. P. Waltner, R. F. D. 2, Marion, South Dakota, of the time of their arrival either by train or auto. Please, do this in good time in order that accomodation may be reserved.

—The Mennonite Song Festival will be held in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, May 31, 1942. The program will follow the general pattern of last year, using individual choirs for the afternoon program and mass singing for the evening program. For the evening group choruses from the "Elijah" and selections from the Mennonite Hymnary will be used, Prof. W. H. Hohmann directing. Extra copies of the "Elijah" are available for use from Mr. Baumgartner. There will be two general rehearsals for the massed group: one May 24, in the afternoon, and another May 30, in the evening, on the campus at North Newton.

All people interested in singing are welcome and urged to come out. We have a splendid new hall to sing in this year, so let us take advantage of this great opportunity. Officers are: Paul Baumgartner, North Newton, president; Herbert Stucky, Moundridge, vice president; David C. Wedel, Halstead, treasurer; and Esther Ratzlaff, Hillsboro, secretary. Direct any inquiries to any of these officers.

—Dear pastor, are you one of the pastors who regularly mail their church bulletin to the editor If, not, might it not be well to do so? Doing it regularly keeps one from forgetting to send in the one which was especially important. Doing it regularly makes the news fresher.

—Bluffton College: Faculty and students have put the finishing touches to an outdoor oven on the campus. Thirty-five seniors took comprehensive examinations.

—Dr. George W. Carver, the Negro chemist, has developed a new drug for the treatment of pyorrhoea. The drug is prepared from the persimmon. . . . 4-H delegates at the twentieth annual congress assembled, voted 74 per cent for life on the farm; only 3 percent expressed a desire for lif in a big city. . . . A valuable grass has been discovered by Dr. Edward Morgan of Venezuela. In pastures where it has been sown no mosquitoes are found. Cattle suffering from blood-sucking ticks have been freed from them a few days after being turned into such a pasture, and large and destructive ants do not like it. The grass is especially suitable for dry soils.

—Gertrude K. Dyck, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Dyck of Elbing, Kansas, passed away on May 4. May God be near unto those from whom she has been taken. Before coming to the Mennonite Sanatorium at La Junta, Colorado, for treatment of tuberculosis, Sister Dyck was a student nurse at the Bethel Hospital, Newton, Kansas. While at the sanitorium she penned the beautiful poem, "His Will," which is found in another part of this paper.

—Dr. H. A. Fast, Paul French, Execute Secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, directors of middle-west and western C.P.S. camps and campees from these camps met in Newton, Kansas, for a conference on May 10.

—Rev. Albert Gaeddert, director of the Colorado Springs, C.P.S. camp, gave two inspiring addre at the Nebraska All-Mennonite Sunday School Beatrice, Nebraska, on May 10. The Men's Ch vention, held in the First Mennonite Chur of the Denison, Iowa camp sang in the evening.

WAR BONDS

By Melvin Gingerich

The writer of this article has been urged to report to The Mennonite a few items of information concerning war bond sales that have been called to his attention recently. Interesting reports are coming in concerning the drive for the sale of war bonds in our Mennonite communities. In one community the leader of the church went to the township chairman of the bond drive and explained why the Mennonites cannot consistently help finance the war but suggested that if and when civilian bonds became available his church would go "over the top." It was then agreed that blanks would be furnished to the solicitors which they could use when calling upon those conscientiously opposed to war. The blanks stated "If and when the government makes civilian bonds available, I, the undersigned, agree to purchase $______ worth each month." This plan was used without any friction in this particular community.

In another large Mennonite community of over 1500 members, the church leaders went to the county board for bond sales several weeks ago and offered to solicit their own members for civilian bonds which were to be purchased if and when the government made them available. Again the county officers willingly cooperated, and a week before the regular drive this solicitation had been completed, and the county paper carried favorable publicity upon the large amount of money these people had pledged to loan the government.

The pastor of the church in another large Mennonite community some time ago went to the county leaders and explained that the Mennonites would gladly buy government civilian bonds if and when they were made available. This official replied that he could see nothing inconsistent in that position but that he wished to talk to the state board about it. He at once telephoned the state officers of the state committee and they replied that this position of the Mennonites would be respected and would be considered a nsistent one.

Stories like this could be duplicated many times over. When our church leaders take the initiative and present their position to the proper officials, the response is one of tolerance and understanding. We have reasons to be happy that in so many communities our position is respected, and that tolerance characterizes those who do not agree with us. This is proof that democracy is working in America.

The state of Pennsylvania has agreed to accept proofs of gifts to the civilian public service camps in lieu of the purchase of war bonds. President Roosevelt has said recently that the conservation of our natural resources dare not be neglected during the emergency and the government has declared that the work being done in the civilian public service camps is of "national importance." Gifts for work of "national importance" should be just as acceptable as loans to the government Pennsylvania believes. In fact, the plan has been presented to a large number of states, and they are being urged to take action similar to that of Pennsylvania.

In the meantime the National Service Board for Religious Objectors continues to work on plans for a civilian bond. This week eastern Friends, Brethren, and Mennonite bankers and lawyers are meeting to see what types of bonds other than those used to finance the war might be made available. Plans up to the present for a civilian bond have not gone through, not because the Treasury Department has been hostile, but because there have been technicalities that have interfered with the working of the plans. In Canada, however, civilian bonds have been made available, and the money derived from this source is used for purposes other than war financing.

MEMORIAL DAY

On Memorial Day many graves will be decorated. Grass which has healed the once-open wound of the earth will be trimmed evenly. Grave after grave will shew forth the colors of beautiful flowers, tenderly placed there by loving hands, some of thtm thin and toil-worn, some of them firm and youthful. The fragrance of flowers will hover over the graves like a great benediction. Decoration is the name of this placed there by loving hands, some of them thin and the flowers are placed, there is an inner working which we call remembering.

Memories make up the greater part of Memorial Day. Thoughts turn back to the lives of loved ones, especially, to that which was best and most beautiful in their lives. So it should be. For the good that men do should be given a chance to live after them.

How can we best honor those who have departed from this world? Is it not by embodying in our living the very highest ideals which those departed once cherished? The gentleness of a departed mother reflected in a daughter's life, the honesty of a departed father revealed in the dealings of his son, the purity and innocence of a departed child hallowing the lives of a mother and father, the all-out loyalty of a saint of our faith as revealed anew in those who dare for conscience sake, are not these the followers, which best honor those who are no longer with us?

May we engage in some quiet meditation on Memorial Day. Let us go down the road of memory and observe the Christlike qualities of those who have gone on before. Then when the evening comes we shall be better children of God, for we shall have seen Christ revealed in the lives of the departed. When the darkness of night falls we shall feel less lonely, for we shall have communed with loved ones in spirit. And in spirit they will walk and talk with us on the morrow and the next day, and the next. —rw.

COMMUNION SERMONS

*By Lloyd L. Ramseyer

Scripture—John 6:47-59.
Text—John 6:56, "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him."

We approach this common table with a sense of humility and consecration. This is an event of deep spiritual significance, to be taken with great seriousness and in a spirit of love and reverence.

Let us think together for a few minutes this morning about the meaning of this memorial of which we are about to partake. There is danger that we may go through this service merely as a matter of routine or habit. A service such as this must go much deeper than that. I have nothing new or startling to say to you. My only hope is that we may take this service seriously, with a realization of what it means to us.

This supper, as originally instituted, was a real historical event. It is not shrouded in mystery; there is nothing mythical about it. Jesus met with His disciples shortly before His cruicifixion, and in the solemnness of that hour, shortly before His agony in the garden, in the full realization of what was about to occur, He instituted this rite with His closest followers. The early church kept this memorial. In the eleventh chapter of I Corinthians, written just a few decades after the death of Christ, we read that the church of that day was observing this practice and was exhorted to do it with a deeper realization of its meaning.

The Lord's supper is a memorial. It is a memorial of the sacrificial death of our Lord upon the cross. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till He come." We are not commemorating the death of an ordinary martyr. Christ's death was af much greater significance. The martyrdom of James is told in a single sentence, that of Stephen in a few brief verses. Hundreds of martyrs died for what they believed. We keep this memorial because Jesus Christ had a heritage such as no other man had, He lived as no other man lived, in His death He accomplished what no other man's death could accomplish, and He arose as no other man arose. In partaking of these simple elements in the proper spirit, we are commemorating that death.

Memorials of this type are not new. The Jews kept the passover feast as a memorial of the time when their first born sons were saved, but those of the Egyptians were taken. We have a greater memorial than that to keep. We eat and drink in commemoration of the time when God's son was taken that all sons of men might have life.

Not only does this rite signify our memory of our Lord's death. We do not keep memorials for those in whom we have had no faith or whom we do not love. In keeping this feast we demonstrate, in a physical way, the faith which we have in our living Lord, and our ever-increasing love for Him.

In the partaking of this bread and wine we show our oneness with our Lord in mind and spirit. The elements themselves were well chosen. Bread is used throughout the New Testament, and in common parlance as well, as signifying the food of man. Bread is the staff of life. So Christ is the spiritual food of the Christian. He is the staff of our spiritual lives. Wine is symbolic of the life blood of the vine. The vine itself was used to typify the Christian family. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." So the vine is used as symbolic of the blood of Christ. As the physical body cannot live without the natural blood, neither can the spiritual life continue without the spiritual blood of Christ flowing through our veins. In accepting Christ as our Lord, we in reality secure a spiritual blood transfusion, His spirit dominating our spirits, His life blood becoming ours, and thus bringing us a new life in Christ Jesus.

If His body has become the source of our spiritual

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AND THE FARM

In the Civilian Public Service Camps maintained by Mennonites an overwhelming majority of the boys come from the rural communities. In the case of one camp 100 out of the 125 men came from the country. This means eighty per cent of the total. In most of the other camps the ratio of farm boys to the total number of men in camp would be equally high and in a few cases even higher. This same situation held true in the First World War. Practically all of the Mennonite young men who were persecuted for their conscience sake in that war were rural boys. Many of our college students and city boys took regular or non-combatant service rather than the absolute position. The same thing held generally true in the matter of adults buying liberty bonds, at least if one judges by the records of those who were punished for not buying them. Will the same situation pertain in the matter of buying defense bonds in the present war?

The adherence of our Mennonite people to this major tenet of their faith is reflected in still another way. Looking at individual churches one is impressed with the fact that churches located in cities or in areas directly under the influence of cities have comparatively few boys in C. P. S. camps. One church in an industrial city of about ten thousand population has thirteen boys drafted. One of the thirteen is in C. P. S. camp and he lives on a farm, but his parents attend the city church. In another city of much larger size the minister in the Mennonite church reports that all nine of his drafted boys have taken regular service in the army or navy. In contrast to these two city churches is a country church which has twenty-four boys of draft age and all but one have taken or are planning to take the position of conscientious objectors.

In trying to explain this situation many people attribute the failure of city boys to take the position of conscientious objectors to lack of guidance by the ministers. It is true that many of our General Conference ministers have neglected to teach and to preach the religious principles on which the Mennonite Church stands. If they have not done that over the years no amount of emphasis on the subject can suddenly convert to, or acquaint our young people with, this position. But I do not believe our city ministers can be held responsible for the failure of their men to take the position of conscientious objectors. The problem is much larger than can be handled by our ministers. There are forces at work and influences playing upon the lives of our people that are beyond the control of individual men or even particular religious denominations. An analysis of some of these disrupting forces will be made at a future date. It is sufficient for the present to recognize that conscientious objectors are identified with rural churches and rural communities. It is not impossible for city people to be conscientious objectors to war, but it is much more difficult. If refusing to fight or becoming a part of a military system is a part of our Christian testimony and a way of preserving our faith it is well to meditate upon the factors and forces that influence our people to uphold, compromise, or renounce our Christian testimony.

IN MEMORIAM

GUSTAV A. LINSCHEID was born on November 4, 1875, in Ehrenfeld, province of Galicia, Austria, the youngest son of Peter and Elizabeth (Miller) Linscheid. At the age of eight years he came to America with them, arriving at Halstead, Kansas, April 28, 1883. For a time the family lived near the Alta Mill, but in 1887 they moved to Reno County and settled near Arlington.

He was baptized by the Rev. Valentin Krehbiel and received into the First Mennonite Church of Christian on April 17, 1892. He attended Halstead Seminary the last year that it existed (1892-93) and was one of the first group of students when Bethel College opened its doors the next year. In 1894-95 he attended Arlington High School, being graduated with high honors that spring.

When all doors of entering the teaching profession were closed he came in his travels, while selling Rev. C. H. van der Smissen's History of the Mennonites, to the home of Rev. Chr. Krehbiel, then President of the Board of Foreign Missions. Here he was asked to enter the mission school at Cantonment in the Indian Territory as teacher. He took this call to be the hand of God directing him into his field of service. So, in the fall of 1895, he went to Cantonment and served as teacher in the mission school for three years. To further prepare himself as missionary he re-entered Bethel College in 1898 and was graduated two years later with the academy class of 1900.

June 10, 1900, was the date of his ordination into the ministry at the Alexanderwohl Church by the Rev. P. Balzer, then President of the Board of Foreign Missions. Immediately he began work as missionary at the Havenaom, now the Clinton, Oklahoma, Station, where he served till the spring of 1904, studying the Cheyenne language in his spare time.

He was united in marriage with Anna S. Hirschler at Hillsboro, Kansas, September 16, 1903, the Rev. J. S. Hirschler, father of the bride, officiating. After working together during that winter in Oklahoma, the young missionary couple was selected to go to Montana to begin mission work on the Tongue River Reservation of the northern Cheyennes. Just before their departure for the new field of labor, Rev. Linscheid was ordained an elder on April 24, 1904, at Hillsboro, Kansas, by the Rev. J. S. Hirschler.

On the Montana field they were the pioneers and encountered many hardships. Sixteen years of faithful service was rendered here, and they saw the work grow and expand from the very beginning to four stations and two outstations, from no Christian to more than two hundred of them. But because of the need of the family, which had been blessed by two sons, for a change of climate and high school facilities for the boys, the family was transferred to the Cantonment station in Oklahoma in 1920 to fill a vacancy there, where he served for eighteen more years, this being the same station where he started in mission work in 1895. He had charge of the Cantonment station, also of the religious work in the government boarding school till it was discontinued in 1927, and most of these years also of the Fonda station and the last few years also of the Arapaho station near Canton.

In 1938 he, however, felt that he must leave the work dear to him, mostly on account of the health of his wife. So after forty-three years since entering mission work, he and Mrs. Linscheid came to Newton, Kansas, that fall. Here he found opportunities for service in various churches of the community, particularly the Johannesthal Church whose supply pastor he was for three months.

In the summer of 1939 he was privileged to return to Montana, to substitute for a few months and so had the joy of being present at the thirty-fifth anniversary celebration, since he had started the mission work there. Again in the summer of 1940 the mission board asked him to help out in Oklahoma, which he willingly did, till the new workers, Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen, could come to take up the work.

Returning to Newton that fall it was now his wish to retire from regular service but after much persuasion he accepted the pastorate of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church north of Moundridge in November of 1940 and was privileged to serve there for almost a year, his efforts being greatly blessed.

On September 11, 1941, while teaching a Bible class in the First Mennonite Church of Newton he was taken ill suddenly with nervous convulsions due to hardening of the arteries. This affliction slowly but gradually developed into a complete paralysis of the left side. His physical and mental suffering was intense, particularly after the power of speech was gone and he was quite helpless. Still the Lord strengthened him to bear even this heaviest trial patiently and with resignation. After seven months and three days of suffering he was released and received into the heavenly home at 12:34 on the morning of April 14. He attained the age of sixty-six years, five months, and ten days. The duration of his married life was thirty-eight years and seven months, less two days.

He is survived by his sorrowing wife, two sons, Harold W. and Chester H., with their wives, and one grandson. One sister Katherina, Mrs. J. H. Linscheid, and one brother Edward Linscheid, both of Arlington, Kansas, also survive, as well as many nephews, nieces, other relatives and friends.

In a family circle that was always closely knit together he was loved and honored. Among his people in the communities, as well, there were many who valued his counsel and who were comforted in times of sorrow by his abiding faith in God's providential guidance of every human life.

The funeral service was held on the afternoon of April 17th at the First Mennonite Church. At the home Rev. P. H. Richert, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, led a brief service basing a few appropriate remarks on Luke 12:42 and offered prayer. Mrs. E. J. Linscheid sang. At the church Rev. J. E. Entz read portions of Revelation, chapters twenty-one and twenty-two and led in prayer. Rev. C. E. Krehbiel then read the obituary. This was followed by a musical selection, "Be Still My Soul," by the Bethel College A Cappella Choir, directed by Prof. Walter Hohmann. Rev. P. P. Wedel, President of the Board of Foreign Missions, delivered the sermon based on II Tim. 4:6-8. The second selection rendered by the A Cappella choir was "My God and I." Then Rev. A. E. Kreider, also a member of the Mission Board, made fitting closing remarks using as a text I Cor. 15:53-58 and led in a closing prayer. At the Greenwood cemetery a double quartette from the Emmanuel church, his last charge, sang a number and Rev. J. E. Entz had charge of the committal service.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." He will be sadly missed—may his memory be a blessing to many!

The Soldier's Inventory

By Rev. A. P. Waltner

In verse 15 we read, "and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Here we see that the third article mentioned in the soldier's equipment is his footgear. This was and still is a very important part in a soldier's equipment. Without good shoes no soldier is prepared to go forth in battle. These shoes are a picture of God's peace that He has promised to His own. Jesus said, "My peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you." John 14:27. Those who have their feet shod with the gospel of peace need not be terrified by the enemy. They can march forward boldly. Knowing this peace, we are in God's hands, knowing that we are Christ's and Christ is God's; knowing that all things are ours, we can stand and withstand the wiles of the devil. He cannot touch one who rests in the peace of God and who trusts in the God of peace. But nobody is ready or prepared to make an attack and expect a victory who does not possess that peace. How about us? Can we list this article as number three in our inventory? Do we possess it? Is it ours? Without possessing this peace that passeth all understanding, no minister of the gospel is prepared to lead his soldiers from victory unto victory.

Verse 16 reads, "Above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Here the fourth article in the soldier's equipment is mentioned. This is "faith." The Apostle Paul puts this article above all other articles. He says. "above all put on the shield of faith." Some translators read this, "Over all put on the shield of faith." The breastplate protects the vitals; but the shield is to protect the whole body. It is to be put over all. It is to protect the head, vitals and feet. By it the fiery darts of the devil are to be quenched from any side we may be attacked. The shield of faith means unwavering faith in God and His promises. This faith must reveal itself not only in times of success and victories, but also in times of difficulties and seeming defeats. Woe unto the minister who loses faith in God and His promises as soon as difficulties and obstacles make their appearance. Such a minister can never expect to go from victory unto victory; but he will go from defeat unto defeat. Paul said that he had done more than all of the apostles. Why? I believe because he was a man of faith as none other of the apostles had been. This faith revealed itself in all of his mission-journeys, imprisonments, persecutions, letter writings and his defenses before magistrates and kings. No wonder that Paul was, so to say, unconquerable. Ministers and missionaries with much faith are the ones who have passed from victory unto victory, quenching the fiery darts of the wicked. How about us? Do we have faith in God; faith in His promises; faith in His word; faith

By Donovan E. Smucker, Wadsworth, Ohio

JUNE 1—"Return ye backsliding children and I will heal your backsliding. Behold, we come unto thee: for thou art the Lord our God." Jer. 3:22

God is at work despite man's obvious denial! Our religious life may be a crazy zig-zag between the mountain tops of revelation and the valley of darkness. Our weak, insipid modern Christianity has occasional flashes of strength. The valley of darkness momentarily sparkles. But, our Lord in His boundless grace broods over this backsliding constantly and unceasingly, waiting with infinite patience for the moment of full healing. Try this sobering "invoice" of General Conference backsliding: take the statement on peace, war, military service and patriotism as approved at Souderton last August; check the spirit and letter of this pronouncement with the actions of your community, your local church and yourself. Then read the above text from Jeremiah as you sink to your knees in a prayer of confession.

JUNE 2—"gods many, and lords many, But to us there is but one God." I Cor. 8:5,6.

H. G. Wells once said that man was incurably religious. That statement gives no comfort whatsoever when it is squared with this text, reminding us that man always worships a god but seldom the God —our Lord and Savior, Christ Jesus. Furthermore, there is little question who is the most popular modern god: it is that severe taskmaster the god of Community! Today there are countless folks in every type of church, national and local, who would rather face the fury of hell than resist the false-god of Community. Apparently, the original sin of mankind laid the basis for this colossal desire to have status, to belong, to go along with the popular tide of opinion. Hence, prior to all questions, yea, the beginning and end of wisdom, is the discovery of the one, true God.

JUNE 3—"Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: anr hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost which is given to us." Rom. 5:3-5.

How contrary this appears to be with the facts of life. So frequently tribulation worketh impatience and bitterness by geometrical progression. What is more important, hope is seldom multiplied by the experience of tribulation. Hopelessness and defeat are virtually the passwords of modern life. Yet, Paul boldly proclaims one of the many paradoxes of the gospel; one of those nuggets of wisdom which are foolishness to those who do not live with Christ. One writer dealing with this fact declared that a paradox is a truth standing on its head to attract attention. Even this dramatic and vivid figure is inadequate to explain the "winning losers" who find by losing, who save by spending, who live by dying. Only by experience, therefore, can one climb the stairsteps from tribulation to the love of God through the Holy Ghost.

JUNE 4—"In those days came John the Baptist preaching and saying: Repent ye: for the Kingdom of God is at hand." Matthew 3:1, 2.

The utterly repentant declaration of a humble Chinese Christian has provided a modern translation of this text: "O God," he said, "save the church beginning with myself." The admission of guilt before God is a terribly painful process; it is easy, however, when you admit the sins of your neighbor. But stand for a moment in what an early mystic called "the gaze of God." Stand in this awesome scrutiny of the Divine Heart. Then the purgation begins. The pus of a sick generation begins to drain off. Unfortunately however, repentance for the approaching Kingdom appears to be gaining very little headway among people as a whole. Thus, we must answer John's clarion call like the Chinese Christian who started with his own soul.

JUNE 5—"The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away; But, the word of the Lord endureth forever." I Peter 1:24, 25.

If anyone doubts the facts of this text consider the mere statistical proof: The American Bible Society alone sold 7,695,607 copies of Holy Writ last year; the total across the world was 25,000,000 copies published in 1051 languages and dialects. Continuing this almost unbelievable summary, the A.B.S. estimates that 1,091,000,000 Bibles have been printed since the famous Gutenberg volume of 1450. Yet, how frequently one enters homes where this text is made to imply that the Scriptures have withered with the flower thereof falling away; But, the local newspaper endureth forever! Would that we were as loyal to God's word as to the withering grass of the daily gazette.

JUNE 6—"Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God." Matt. 22:29.

There is no more dramatic struggle in all history than the struggle to release the Bible unto the common man. In these tragic days one should get supreme comfort from the unfailing spiritual armament provided by one billion Scriptures in one thousand languages. What an amazing triumph this is in contrast to the darkness of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries when the pioneers determined to release the Bible from its chains. William Tyndale suffered martyrdom (a horrible death by strangling and public burning!) to bring us the English Bible. His last words were, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes." Today we can translate this to mean, "Lord, open the eyes of our statesmen, wherever they may be, to the scriptural weapons of the Spirit."

JUNE 7—"Unto the church of God which is at Corinth." I Cor. 1:2.

Thank God the New Testament is written in a form so common and understandable. This is a letter to the church of Corinth, and how often we find our own congregational problems of today mirrored in these timeless notes of Paul. One can almost see the great Apostle as he dictates, perhaps to the faithful Timothy. The latter writes on the papyrus, a roll about three feet long and a foot wide; there are small columns of two or three inches in width. During the dictation Paul's hands were probably busy with the constant rubbing of black haircloth which he used in his trade of tentmaking. Then flowing freely are these magnificent words of first and second Corinthians, climaxed, of course, with the famous thirteenth chapter in praise of love. Divine words in the language of us all.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

JUNE 7, 1942

Friday: The Day of Suffering
Topic: Christ's Words on the Cross

Mark 15:33, 34; Luke 23:33-46 (Cf. John 19:25-30

Introduction: .In today's lesson the emphasis suggested by the lesson committee is upon the words Jesus spoke while He was on the cross. Only four of the seven recorded sayings are included in our lesson. Only one of these, the fourth one, is recorded in more than one gospel (Matt. and Mark). Three of these sayings are recorded in John's Gospel (19:25-30). Last words uttered by friends before their death are often especially treasured. We do well to give thought to these last words of our Lord.

Forgiveness and Promise

The first word was one of forgiveness, uttered, perhaps, while the nails were being driven. These words were in extreme contrast with the jeering and scoffing words of the priests and people. This prayer was in perfect harmony with all we know of Jesus' spirit of grace and love. Jesus did not merely tell others how they should forgive; He set the supreme example himself. He forgave his murderers even though they did not ask for forgiveness. This prayer sets forth Jesus as the all-merciful and patient friend of sinners. In spite of this, many of those around the cross derided, scoffed at, and mocked Him. Truly these and the executioners failed to know the full extent of their wickedness and hardness of heart.

The second word was Jesus' promise to the penitent, dying robber. He acknowledged Jesus as the Messiah. Perhaps he had listened to Jesus speaking about His kingdom. Jesus granted more to the thief than he had asked for or even dared to hope for. As soon as death came, he was promised a place of bliss with Jesus. Jesus opened the gates of the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

The third word, spoken to His mother and to John (John 19:26,27), reveals the tender sympathy and thoughtfulness of Jesus. The hostile and curious crowd had now dispersed itself, and Jesus' loved ones drew near to the cross. He speaks lovingly and comfortingly to His mother. He entrusts her to John's tender care. Jesus knew that she now needed the sympathetic support of His bosom friend, John.

The fourth word, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me," reveals the depth of feeling which we can not understand. The sun had veiled its face. God did not wish human eyes to see His Son in these hours of agony. For three hours now He was alone in a super-natural darkness. Jesus expresses His sense of being utterly alone in the words of Ps. 22:1. They reveal an awful loneliness of spirit. In that hour of great physical exhaustion and pain and mental distress, it seemed to Him as though God had forsaken Him. The fifth word, "I thirst" (John 19:28) is the only one which indicates physical suffering. It is the only plea for relief.

Words of Triumph

The sixth word, "It is finished" (John 19:30) and the seventh, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit," are words of glorious victory. Jesus could say, "It is finished," the great work of redemption is finished. He had provided a sufficient atonement for the sins of the world. Jesus yielded up His life with complete faith in the Father. He cried "with a loud voice," not with the weak gasp of a dying man. His was a voluntary giving up of His life. All the evangelists use a term denoting this fact. Jesus' death was the act of a man who had control of both His body and His spirit. When He yielded His spirit into the Father's hands, He was completing the greatest work God ever undertook, that of providing redemption for a lost race. Jesus' last words show that He was still confident, yea certain, that He was in the Father's care. We, too, can with entire safety entrust ourselves into our heavenly Father's hands when the hour of death comes. Happy are they who believe. The kingdom of heaven is open for them.

Why do we find it difficult to pray sincerely for our enemies?

What does the fact that the veil of the temple was rent in two, signify?

How is Christ being crucified afresh in our day?

"Act well at the moment, and you have performed a good action to all eternity." —Lavater

Graduation and the Future

Hundreds of Mennonite young men and women are now graduating from high school and college. The future may seem dark to many. However, is it as dark as it may seem? Darkness helps to bring out more clearly the light that does exist. When it becomes dark, the stars come out.

In this dark time stars have come out which can help greatly in determining the course of life of many Mennonite young people. The lights accentuated by the present darkness may be as great a blessing as the stars are to ship-wrecked men on a wild, wide ocean.

In times past Mennonite young men and women have felt the lure of the city. Now there is a crying need for labor on the farm, especially during the summer months. Young people can feel that they are fulfilling a great need as they work on the farm. Many may come to realize the possibilities of farm life. Might that not be a blessing come out of darkness? Job seeking and holding in the city have many dangerous aspects. The editor of a Mennonite youth paper says, "the editor's conviction is growing stronger every day that, unless the Lord lead definitely otherwise, large cities better be avoided as places for seeking permanent employment and for vocational investment by Mennonite young people."

A guiding star beckons the older young men who will go to C. P. S. camps. There is a blessing in hard, healthful work and regular hours. Great benefit can be derived from the Bible and church history courses and from the others which make up the camp educational program. Association with earnest young men from the other branches of the Mennonite denomination presents a great opportunity for edification. The Christian family life of the camp, as expressed in work, worship, study, and play, cannot easily be duplicated. Young men who serve in the mental hospitals receive excellent training and do very worthwhile work. (Read Clifford Beer's book, The Mind that Found Itself.) The art of conserving the soil is learned and practiced here. This is important, for the good earth is as essential for the physical life of man as is the Bible for his spiritual life. In light of the fact that our forests are being used up very much faster than they are being regrown, forestry service stands as constructive Christian work. The boys on dairy farms have great opportunity for individual witnessing. Or again one may receive the opportunity of meeting the health needs of people by fighting hookworm disease. Truly, for him who seeks first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, life in a C. P. S. camp should be a great opportunity.

Jesus healed the sick, for He considered it important. People still become sick and broken in body. Skillful and loving hands are needed to work for and with the Great Physician today. The present situation tends to deplete hospitals of skilled workers. Our own Mennonite hospitals are looking for capable, consecrated girls to take up nursing and deaconess work. Our hospitals at Newton, Kansas, and Beatrice, Nebr., offer training courses, which are great opportunities. Two Bluffton College students will soon take up training in one of the hospitals. They are to be congratulated on their choice of one of our institutions. The door to nursing stands open.

Perhaps, young men here and there are feeling the call of the ministry. Since a large number of our churches are without pastors, they can have the assurance that they are needed among our own people. Bethel College offers one year of advanced (above college) training for the ministry. A senior of this college has ben serving a group of Mennonites which recently organized themselves into a church. Pastors are needed.

Our colleges, with more work jobs open, beckon young men and women to come to their doors next fall. Due to a scarcity of teachers, Mennonite teachers should find greater opportunities to teach in Mennonite communities.

Present conditions are such that we as Mennonites can and should become more firmly knitted together. Present conditions are very definitely a sign for us to put the Kingdom of God first. Let us do this and be blessed.—rw.

Bible Conference

The young people of the East Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa., will sponsor their fifth Bible conference from June 18-21. Dr. A. C. Schultz, head of the Bible department at Bluffton College, will be the speaker. He will bring illustrated lectures on "Archeology and the Bible."

In the past such speakers as Dr. L. Sale Harrison, Dr. H. Framer Smith, Dr. Donald Gray Barnhouse, and Dr. E. Schuyler English, Bible teachers of note, appeared at the conferences. The young people of East Swamp are glad to invite such a man of God as Dr. A. C. Schultz as their fifth conference speaker.

Through this young people's page of The Mennonite they extend an invitation to the people of the Eastern District Conference. In spite of the gas and tire rationing it is possible to come within a few rods of the church by means of the trolley.

We invite you to pray that this conference, perhaps, the last one for the duration of the war, might bring much blessing and inspiration to all who can and will attend.

Love in Courtship

By John R. Mumaw

Use Common Sense

Love needs common sense to be beautiful. Love is beautiful. Even when love is becoming specialized between two people, it does not necessarily need to exclude all other friends. Exclusive friendships are not conducive to social development. Courtship love is most beautiful when it knows how to enjoy group fellowships, too.

Love is beautiful when it is colored with shades of modesty and reserve. Some people seem to think they have to display their courtship. I do not believe in secret courtship. On the other hand I think it is just as improper to be too bold with courtship. Love is beautiful when it is held within those extremes. We need to bear the marks of good propriety. It is beautiful when it is ready to meet disappointment bravely. One time a certain young man was "all torn up" about his love affair being broken. He had an awful expression of heart distress. He had plenty of time to get another girl friend as far as his age was concerned. I tried to console him and told him there were other girls who were interested in getting married, but to him this was the only girl. My advice to him was to let God work out His plan for their lives. I watched the case. Some months later he came back with a smile and said, "We have decided that we couldn't get along without each other." They are married now and have a small family. There is no use to get excited about this matter. God is interested in our affairs, and, in fact, there is no other activity of youth in which God desires to have a larger hand than this very case. It leads up to the most important institution God has in the world—the home. The home was the first institution and preceded the church by thousands of years.

Make Use of Mature Counsel

Love needs counsel to be safe. Secret courtship is usually uncalled for. A certain young girl of my acquaintance came home from college. Her mother found her in tears one day. She asked, "What is the matter?" "I'm married," was the reply. "There is nothing wrong with being married, if it's honorable," said the mother. "Yes, but it isn't honorable," was the answer. She carries the sting of the secret courtship today. When I met her with congratulations upon her marriage she had a sense of shame about her. Her approach to making a home of her own happy was blurred by a failure to counsel with her Christian mother. Thoughtful parents will counsel youth to avoid long engagements. They will counsel them to take note of the spiritual life of the parties involved. Parents are usually the best counsellors. One needs to remember that courtship needs to include the prospective in-laws, too. You had better get acquainted with the family that you expect to call in-laws. You will be marrying into another family life. If the flavor of that family life isn't what you want in your own home, you had better take a second thought.

No. 2 of Series of Three Studies on Missions

GREAT TORCHBEARERS: Heb. 11:1-26

I. Worship Service: 1. Songs: "Ye Servants of God," No. 6, "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life" No. 222. 2. Reading of scripture passage, prayer, and leader's remarks. 3. Period of prayer. Offering for any special mission project which the society may have.

II. Leader's Introduction:

In 1810 some students of Andover Theological Seminary declared their desire to become missionaries. Among these was Adoniram Judson. The result of this appeal was the formation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Later various denominations established missionary societies. Since 1850 all major denominations have engaged in this work with an energy and persistence that have no parallel in any age of Christian history. Wonders have been accomplished by the grace of God. The number of missionaries has increased to several thousand, the converts can be found in every continent.

The growth of the Student Volunteer Movement, since its beginning in 1886, has greatly stimulated interest in foreign missions. Study classes have been established in many educational institutions and many workers have been won for the field. "One of the most promising developments of recent years is that nearly every denomination is engaged in devising some system for the instruction of its members in the history and principles of Christian missions and for their training in systematic giving."

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The missionary work of Adoniram Judson. 2. China's beloved missionary, John Clayton Morrison. 3. John Williams and his work in the South Sea Islands. 4. Livingstone and dark Africa. 5.

Stanley, the friend of the black man. 6. Mary Slessor, her life and work. 7. John Paton and the New Hebrides.

IV. For Discussion:

1. How large a number in each church is obligated to carry out Christ's great commission? How?
2. How can we develop mission interest?

V. Facts for Study:

Alternatives

"There are two ways one may live," says E. Stanley Jones. "One is to take it for yourself. The other is to take it on yourself." Undoubtedly the latter is more costly, but it is also more productive. One kind of life makes everything costly for others. The other kind helps to pay the cost for others.

"No Wasted Years"

"A maker of missionaries" was the title unofficially conferred on Henrietta Soltau, who for many years was in charge of the Women Candidates Department of the China Inland Mission. She was greatly influenced by Hudson Taylor, and about five hundred of her young women went to China, to be influenced by him, too, while others found their places elsewhere. During her only long furlough in 1897, she visited the Far East, traveled for thirteen consecutive months, covered six thousand miles and visited forty-four mission stations. She has been characterized as "a woman who laughed at impossibilities," and who received many remarkable answers to prayer. She lived to be almost ninety. In her last hours a friend said to her:

"There have been no wasted years for you to lament, Miss Soltau."

"No, my dear," she said strongly, "no wasted years, no wasted years."

VI. Illustration:

True Missionary Spirit

How unlike the spirit of the hour is the story of Chinese Gordon. For his services in China the government sought to reward him, but he declined all honors. Money and titles he scorned, but he accepted a medal, inscribed with his name and his thirty-three engagements, because it could not well be refused. After his tragic death the medal could not be traced. What a revelation of the great soldier's unselfishness unfolds when we learn of Manchester during the famine, with an anonymous letter requesting the ore be melted down and used to buy food for the hungry children of the city. Then in his diary he wrote these words: "The last and only thing I have in this world that I value I have given over to the Lord Jesus."

The Bible: Still the World's Best Seller

Call to Worship: Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. II Tim. 2:15

Hymn: "Holy Bible, Book Divine"

Responsive Reading: From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

Response: All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. II Tim. 3:15-17

Leader: Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only. James 1:22a

Response: Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee. Ps. 119:11

Hymn: "Wonderful Words of Life"

Scripture Reading: Matt. 7:24-28

Talk: The Bible

The Bible is still the world's best seller. More Bibles are sold than any other book, and it is distributed all over the world. Other books have appealed to a generation, or at best to a civilization; but when that race has been destroyed the books held no interest for other peoples. The Bible is the only book which has been able to live through the ages and keep its popularity. It is the most outstanding of all books, because its message is of the greatest importance to mankind. It is indeed THE Book.

Just as on the Day of Pentecost every man heard his own tongue, so either all or part of the Bible is now reprinted in one thousand and eighteen languages and dialects.

To untold millions the Bible has come to be the one book which above all others gives to its readers the comfort and spiritual strength for which they long. We should treat our Bible with reverence, because it is God's only written revelation to mankind. It is the inspired Word of God, in which we place our trust and hope.

Our scripture lesson told the parable of a man who built his house upon the sand. Those who find no room in their lives to study God's Word are building their lives upon an unsteady foundation. On the other hand, he who builds his life on the laws of God's Book has built his soul on the 'Rock of Ages,' which will stand forever.

The Bible is the Book of books. None other can compare with it, for it was dictated by God Himself. It is the only permanent thing in this changing world of ours.

Duet: "I know the Bible is True"

Silent Prayer:

Hymn: "Thy Word Is Like a Garden, Lord"

Benediction: Dear Father of all, may "thy word ever be a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path," through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen

Intermediate Worship Services

—J. Winfield Fretz and Lester Hostetler recently visited churches in Western Kansas in the interest of Bethel College (someone suggest a better way of putting it, for such visits are really for the ultimate welfare of all). Brother Fretz writes, "There are fine people everywhere."

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

A WORD ABOUT THE FOREIGNERS IN MANILA

Word has come that the American and British residents in Manila were rounded up and confined in the spacious St. Thomas University which has accommodations for three thousand students. Radiograms state that missionaries are now at liberty and live in their own houses. Sister Fast read this in the Moody Monthly. Whether this last information about missionaries refers only to those in Manila, or also to those elsewhere, is not expressly stated. But it is likely that all missionaries are treated alike.

The Red Cross, to which our State Department has directed us, is now trying hard to persuade the Tokyo government to place one representative in Manila and one in Shanghai, through whom missionaries can be contacted. So far this has not been possible. The news, that have come through, has come through irregular channels, such as fugitives and radiograms, etc. The news that comes through shows that the Lord answers very largely the prayers for the missionaries. Thanks be to Him! —P. H. Richert, Sec

STATISTICAL REPORTS FOR 1941 CHAMPA CHURCH

Membership at end of 1941—275. Increase over year ago—17. Baptisms: Christian community 17, Hindu 4, Korba Christian 1. Readmitted 9; Died 4; Excommunicated 7; Transferred by letter 2. Collections: Champa S. S., Rs. 81-0-0; hospital, Rs. 18-9-9; church dues, Rs. 773-9-9; Sunday-church expense, Rs. 182-5-0; Thanksgiving and sale Christmas 1940, Rs. 82-0-0; wedding fees, Rs. 15-0-0; Christmas, Rs. 21-4-9; new church, Rs. 72-0-0; special help, Rs. 47-4-9; Bible school students, Rs. 18-0-0; library, Rs. 30-10-0; Bible and tract societies, Rs. 17-8-0; special donation, Rs. 1-0-0; field committee returns, Rs. 210-0-. Total: Rs. 1570-4-0.

Records broken: 1. June 1, 1941, a class of fifteen baptized, the largest in the history of the church. 2. December 28, 1941, 168 members partook of Holy Communion; tops previous record by 41. These are items for rejoicing, but, nevertheless, we very much need a revival in our church. Pray that it may come soon.

CHRISTIAN HOSPITAL, CHAMPA

Income from patients and medicines sold, Rs. 7800 0-0 ($2,600). Number in-patients, 746; out-patients, 8,530; total: 9;276. Number return patients of treatments, 4,251; laboratory examinations, 3,728; major operations, 34; minor operations, 395; cataracts, 12; bladder stone, 5; appendix, 1; ovarian cyst, 2.

If the salaries of the missionary staff are included the hospital is one-third self supporting. If these are omitted, then it is over half self-supporting. The income continues fairly steady in spite of poor crops and war conditions. Many, of course, cannot afford to come in to the hospital even if the treatments are free due to the extra involved in keeping two fires or looting if all leave.

RELIEF

French Workers Hold Conference

On March 30 and 31 the Mennonite relief workers in France, Brethren Joseph N. Byler and Henry Buller together with Sisters Lois Gunden and Helen Penner met in a two-day conference at Vernet-les-Bains.

Writing about this conference, Sister Gunden says: "Our Mennonite conference at Vernet was quiet profitable to all of us... During our sessions of Monday evening, Tuesday morning, and afternoon we went over our whole program, considered the possibilities of our future work and spent time together in devotional periods."

Latest Word from France

On May 10 Brother O. O. Miller received a cable from Brother Joseph N. Byler in Lyon, France. The cable indicates that the main features of the Mennonite relief program are continuing. The cable also mentions the prospect of expanding that part of the work which is being carried on at present through colonies that take care of homeless children.

The cable also states that Brother Byler will send details on relief work in France with Brother M. C. Lehman who it is hoped can soon be returning to America.

Churches Continue to Send Clothing

Clothing of all descriptions continue to reach the clothing depot of the Mennonite Central Committee, te Akron, Pa. Sister M. C. Lehman, with the occasional help of women from nearby sewing circles, has during the first four months of 1942 prepared over 10,000 lbs. of clothing for shipment.

The clothing, according to Sister Lehman, comes from over twenty states and consists of new or nearly new garments. The committee appreciates this generosity of the churches as they continue to meet a need which is to increase in the months ahead.

COMMUNION SERMON

sustenance, and if His blood is the vitalizing factor in our spirits, then we must if necessary have given ourselves completely to Him. It is said that years ago a Saxon regiment agreed to be baptized provided they could keep their right arms out of the water. These right arms, then, not being consecrated to Christ, could be used to carry on the slaughter. Too many try to make reservations in their commitments to Christ. We cannot be one with the flesh and blood of Christ unless we are one completely. His body cannot be the food or His blood the blood of only a part of our spirit, the possession must be complete and without reservation. Whatever that consecration may cost, Christ will not be satisfied with less.

If Christ's body and blood have become a part of me and also a part of you, then a kinship exists between us as well. All believers then become brothers, for we have become partakers of the body of Christ and we have His blood in our veins. We have thus become one family under the fatherhood of God. There are no boundary lines of creed, color, race, nationalities, or social or economic position. There is not one Christ for the German and another for the Russian, not one Christ for the Jap and another for the American, not one Christ for the negro and another for the white, not one Christ for the employer and another for the laborer. If they are to be a part of this Christian family, all must accept the same Christ, all must partake of His body and accept of His blood. This essential oneness of all believers is a serious matter to consider in a day like this.

If we are one great family in Christ, then our attitudes and conduct one toward another should be characterized by the best that we know of family life. The ideal family is not held together by physical laws. It is maintained through love, loyalty, loving obedience, mutual service, and if necessary mutual sacrifice. In the ideal human family we look for the best rather than for the worst in the other members of the group. We are charitable toward weaknesses, we forgive them when they wrong us, we magnify their successes and minimize their failures. Love stands at the very foundation of the teachings of Jesus, not a sentimental love, but a love which expresses itself in lives of service and sacrifice. It is the type of love which will forgive wrongs and insults, not until seven times, but until seventy times seven. To forgive once or twice is only human, to forgive increasingly requires the indwelling of the spirit of Christ. Let us enter into this service in this spirit of forgiving love, forgetting any slights or misunderstandings taking the attitude which one would toward a brother in an ideal family. Thus this service will serve not only as a memorial, but also to increase the spirit of Christian fellowship among us.

The Lord's Supper gives an opportunity for rededication of ourselves to Christ and to His service. Paul stressed the point that the feast was to be entered into seriously or not at all. There is no place this morning for casual or light hearted eating and drinking of this sacred sacrament. It is to be approached only with complete consecration and dedication of our lives to Him and to His service. It is to be taken only with a realization of what it means, in memory of the founder of the feast, and His sacrificial death.

In Corinthians Paul stresses the point of self-examination and reconsecration in preparation for this supper, as well as the danger of eating and drinking without first being right with God. "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." Paul does not tell us to examine others to see whether they are worthy to partake, he rather tells each to examine himself. The responsibility is upon the individual. "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." To examine others is easy, in fact some seem to enjoy it. But to examine ourselves before God may be a painful process, which too many refuse to undertake. As we approach this table, we should examine our innermost souls and seek to purge them of unrighteousness. There are things in our innermost beings which others do not know, things which only we and God recognize; secret faults, unworthy ambitions, secret reservations which we have made, or perhaps a grudge, secret or open, against another. In the quietness of this morning hour let us pledge anew our complete surrender as a matter now between each individual and God alone. In another situation Jesus said, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." This implies complete forgiveness of real or imagined wrongs. Sometimes we think the highest order of forgiveness is to forgive the Japanese or the Germans and hold no ill will against them. A far more difficult feat is to repeatedly forgive the one who mistreats and tantalizes us day after day, perhaps our boss, or someone working under us, or a fellow worker. To forgive such a one who continually tries to undermine what we do, or works against us, takes Christian grace. Certainly the least that could be expected in such a situation would be to confess quietly our faults to God now, surrender completely to Him, and resolve and promise God to immediately make right with others what may not now be wholly right.

Being worthy to eat of the bread and drink of the wine does not mean perfection. If it did, then none could partake. It does mean complete surrender to His will. Without complete surrender to partake of. these symbols can mean little to us. To have Him as our food and to have His blood coursing through our spiritual veins implies complete surrender of our lives to Him. If that has not taken place in fact, the symbol can have little meaning. Being worthy means a sincere attempt to find through self-examination the faults that are in us, and through His grace to remedy those evils in our lives.

The Lord's Supper also implies a prophecy. By eating and drinking, we find in Corinthians, "ye do shew the Lord's death till he comes." We are not just looking backward this morning, but we are looking forward. This is not just a commemoration of a past event, as are our earthly memorials, but the looking forward to a coming event, the return of our Lord. When that time comes, He will establish complete Lordship, and He shall rule forever and ever. Of the certainty of that event we are assured; of its exact time we are not told.

Let us partake of these elements reverently, in the spirit of Christ, in loving commemoration of His life and sacrificial death, in recognition that His body and blood are our spiritual food and drink, and that we are one with Him and brothers in Christ. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him." Partaking of these symbols this morning will not of itself give us life. If these do not signify that we have really partaken of His body and blood, the symbols at best are meaningless. These are but outward symbols of an inner consecration, a commemoration of what He has done for us, with a forward look toward His coming again.

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Berne, Indiana

On a recent Sunday we were privileged to have with us Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wenger, returned missionaries from India. Mr. Wenger preached in the morning and Mrs. Wenger gave an address in the evening on the experiences of their hazardous trip home. She also spoke to two of the classes at the Mid-week Prayer and Bible Study Meeting.

We are again joining with the churches of the other denominations in Berne in making preparations for another term of Summer Bible School of five weeks, forenoons only. We always consider this one of the most important phases of our church activities, realizing how necessary it is to saturate the minds and hearts of our young people with the Word of God. There is always hearty cooperation on the part of the parents and attendance is good.

Our pastor, Dr. C. H. Suckau is planning to leave shortly for a week of Bible Conference work in the Oklahoma Bible Academy where he will also deliver the commencement address. He expects to be absent two Sundays.

On a recent Friday evening the teachers of our Sunday School met in a meeting for fellowship and inspiration, and to consider certain standards which the Sunday School Committee had drawn up that teachers should live up to. This was unanimously adopted. At this meeting we were privileged to have some of our teachers present who have taught steadily for long number of years, the one who taught longest taught over fifty years. What do you think of such a record?

The long finger of war is reaching into our congregation, just as in all others, and is taking out one after another of our fine young men leaving vacant places and saddening mothers' hearts. If any of you young men read this, we want you to know that we are thinking of you and praying for you in our private devotions and in church groups. May God bless you all. —Martha Gilliom, Corr.

The Soldier's Inventory

in prayer; faith in ourselves (to some extent this is also necessary); faith in our fellowmen? "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Can we list this article as number four in our inventory?

In verse 17 we read, "and take the helmet of salvation." The helmet rests upon the head. It covers the head, the seat of intelligence. Assurance of salvation—past, present and future—is this helmet. As we wear it, and as it governs our minds and hearts as well, the blows of the devil cannot injure us. We are in possession of a salvation which is secure. We know that no power in earth or the heavenlies can rob us of it. This gives not only confidence, but boldness in the conflict. Sad it is to see thousands of believers without the helmet of salvation, and therefore the easy prey of the devil's wiles, driven about by every wind of doctrine. If this article is so important for each believer, how much more important is it for each minister of the gospel. Paul says, "take the helmet of salvation"—God furnishes it, but we must take it, and wear it. The seat of our intelligence must be continually under the protection of this helmet. How now? Can we put down assurance of salvation as number five on our "inventory sheet" as our possession?

In the same verse Paul mentions another article of armour that no soldier of the cross can overlook. He says, "and take the Sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." This is the sixth piece of armour mentioned by Paul. At that time the sword was used as an offensive and defensive weapon. No soldier would have thought of going to war without the sword. What is the sword of a soldier of Christ? Paul says, the word of God. This article is indispensable. With it we are to meet the devil and make him flee from us. Our blessed Lord used this weapon so successfully in the wilderness when He was attacked by the devil. There really is no other weapon by which the devil can be put to flight. Therefore, as ministers of the gospel we must search the Word—we must know what it contains; and we must have the word of God search us. We must have the word of God in our hearts, and we must have our hearts in the word of God; thus alone can we meet the enemy. But there is something else that must be mentioned in connection with the sword of the Spirit—the word of God. We must not only possess it, but we must learn how to use it. I believe here is our weakness. Our soldiers of today must commit themselves to a thorough training in order to learn to use their equipment efficiently before they are sent to the front. How about us? Are we exercising ourselves in the use of this weapon? I believe that many a battle is lost, not because we are minus the word of God, but because we do not know how to use it efficiently. Now let us examine ourselves for a moment. Do we possess the sword of the Spirit, and does the word of God possess us? Are we efficient in the use of this weapon? Can we list it as number six on our "inventory sheet"?

There is another article in "the whole armour of God" mentioned by Paul in verse 18 when he says, "Praying always." Certainly no one should overlook this article—the soldier's equipment is not complete without it. Praying always—with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit—is next to the "sword of the Spirit," the most powerful weapon against the devil and his wicked host. We must study the Word, and we must pray. Prayer and the Word cannot be separated. The searching of the Word must be done with prayer, and prayer will be more effectual through knowing the Word. Prayer is dependence on God—we lean on Him. Prayer is fellowship with God—we submit ourselves to Him. No minister, who does not lead a life of prayer, who does not pray for himself and his charge, can expect to bring those that are entrusted to him to a saving knowledge of Christ, and to lead them from truth to truth. How about this article in Paul's "whole armour of God?" Can we list it as the seventh article on our "inventory sheet?"

I believe that such an inventory be taken by each minister from time to time. If we find that we are lacking some of these articles, let us remember that they are gladly given to us by our heavenly Father. The governments furnish free equipment to all their soldiers. So also does our heavenly Father. All that we have to do is to make our needs known and have a sincere desire to use this equipment for the exaltation of God's holy name and the expansion of His Kingdom.

However, there is another angle to this inventory. We are prone to make mistakes in evaluating and listing these articles. Therefore the Psalmist prays, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Let us ask God to take this inventory and to reveal the results to us. By doing this an inventory will be more correct, and naturally lead to better results.

I have spoken about the soldier's inventory in behalf of his equipment. A similar inventory can and should be taken from time to time by each minister in behalf of the minister's character, the minister's work, etc. In making these inventories the "pastoral books" should be used, and these inventory sheets should be compared with Christ, our true Standard. The way of procedure should be similar to the plan we followed in making an inventory on "The Soldier's Equipment." Again let us remember that no inventory is complete unless this inventory has been turned over to God, so that He can search, evaluate and list the different items. Such a procedure will humble us; but it will also compel us to greater and more consecrated efforts. —Marion, South Dakota

Donovan E. Smucker, who is contributing the Daily Devotional Messages for the month of June, is the pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio.

—Rev. Earl Salzman is preaching a series of sermons centering around the home, the subject being: "The Father," "The Daughter," "The Son," "A Successful Marriage," "The Baby" (Children's Day). Mr. Jesse Hoover, former relief worker in France, was scheduled to speak in this church on May 24.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: "An all-day sewing for the war sufferers' relief of the Mennonite Central Committee take place at the parsonage next Thursday. . . . It is important to work and pray for the work of mercy being done by the Mennonite Central Committee on three continents."

—Miss Mary Becker, candidate for mission work in India and former editor of The Mennonite, is now studying at White Biblical Seminary, New York City. She plans to be home in Newton, Kansas, by June 29th.

—A pamphlet, showing pictures of our missionaries stranded in China and in the Phillipine Islands and giving quotations from their last letters or news about them, is the very valuable contribution for which Sister Aganetha Fast is responsible. She has paid for the printing of these pamphlets and has sent from ten to twenty-five of them to as many churches as possible. Any church or church organization which desires some more of these may write for them to Miss Aganetha Fast, Mountain Lake, Minnesota. The cost of the pamphlets is five cents each. "Any special donations will go toward the mission cause."

—Why some articles appear belatedly: A contribution was used on May 3. It was mailed to the editor on May 7, arriving on May 9. The material for the issue of May 19 had been mailed to the printer on May 7. Consequently, the article had to be kept for the May 26 issue. Long distance editing makes some of this delay inevitable. All news reports and such articles as must appear promptly should be mailed to the editor very promptly. Some articles sent in do not appear for months, because they are of such a nature that they can be used anytime. Certain regular material and necessary notices and articles have the right of way.

—Members and pastors of the Beatrice, Nebraska, Mennonite churches recently helped clean up at the Weeping Water, Nebraska, C.P.S. camp, preparatory to the arrival of a large number of men. The maximum capacity of this camp is put at 168. Ninety-eight Kansas boys were expected on May 15.

—Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Isaac and son Donald, returned missionaries from India, went to Minnesota at the beginning of this month to visit with relatives and friends.

—Bethel College recently was the recipient of $50,000 from the Hon. O. Jolliffe. The Mennonite constituency raised more than this in order that the college might become eligible for it. Nearly 1,500 people attended this year's Booster Banquet which was held in the spacious Memorial Hall. Dr. A. E. Henry will give the commencement address in this hall on May 27 at 10 a. m. The Bethel College summer session will last from May 28 to July 28. As in four previous years the session will be divided into three equal periods. Courses in each major field of study will be offered.

—Mennonites from Meade County, Kansas, recently spent a day in flood-clean-up work in Dodge City. Hundred people cleaned up fifty homes. The city treated "the welcome visitors to meals and coffee and doughnuts."

—Married: Elsie L. Smith and Walter Kot by Rev. John Plenert. They are at home at 2029 N. 5th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

—Mrs. Paul Wenger recently spoke at a meeting of the Ladies Missionary Society of the First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio.

—Brother Arthur Wenger was ordained to the ministry in the First Mennonite Church of Aberdeen, Idaho, on May 24. He has now returned to Reedley, California, to direct the Daily Vacation Bible School at the First Mennonite Church, where he has been assisting Dr. J. H. Langenwalter in the work of the church.

—Mrs. S. F. Sprunger, aged ninety-three and widow of the Rev. S. F. Sprunger, was Berne, Indiana's oldest mother on Mother's Day.

—Middle District Conference: The Executive Committee of the Middle District Conference has accepted on behalf of the conference an invitation from the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois, to hold the fifty-fourth annual session of the conference, the Lord willing, in their church August 16, 17, 18, 1942. All pastors are urged to send their statistical reports of the past year to the undersigned immediately for compilation.

—G. T. Soldner, Sec., Bluffton, Ohio.

—Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas: During Passion Week Rev. William Unruh of Moundridge, Kansas, brought to us that wonderful story of love, love that sent Jesus to the cross for you and me. On Easter Sunday evening our young people presented "The Challenge of the Cross." May we "take up the cross and follow Him." Jake H. Enz, Elmer Wiens, and Harry and Hugo Reimer have been called to camp. Last Sunday Rev. Kaufman brought a stirring message on "What Makes Life Worthwhile?" Above all he emphasized a right relationship with God. During the evening the moving picture, "Windlings of the West," dealing with migrant life in the west was shown. The program was sponsored by the Mission and Friendship circles of the church. —Corr.

—Dr. C. O. Lehman, formerly of Berne, Indiana, and a graduate of Bluffton College, has been made president of State College, Potsdam, New York.

—Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Miller, who have taught the Bible School at Beatrice, Nebraska, for five years are moving onto a farm near Hanston, Kansas.

CHURCH MEMBER AND CHURCH PAPER

Not only should a church member have been reborn and make the proper use of the Bible as a regenerate Christian, but he also should keep himself informed and inspired through his church paper (either the Christlicher Bundesbote or The Mennonite or both). Some pastor may object, "But I have some members who are not at all interested in reading our church papers." The question is not whether they like to read a church paper. A minister does not ask an individual whether he would like to give up sinning or a particular sin; he tells him that he ought to leave sin and do the right thing. Christianity is not a matter of like or dislike it is a matter of right or wrong. Every Mennonite ought to read a church paper.

No, the cost of a church paper is not so great that not everyone can have one. In the first place, there are very few people who cannot afford to spend $1.50 (or $1.00 for new subscribers and those in the 100 per cent plan.) Let him who insists that he cannot afford it, see whether he doesn't have a radio in the home, or a daily or weekly secular paper, or a personal, unprofitable habit which costs much more. He, who can investigate all his other expenditures and then still truly say that he can't afford a paper, should have one provided for him by others who can afford it just like Sunday School texts are provided for all.

There are words to the effect, "No vision and you perish." He who has not sufficient vision to read a church paper to find out about the work of our conference, will surely not get a greater vision by not reading such a paper. The only way for him to get a greater vision is by reading a church paper and like means. How can people give intelligently to the work of our conference if they don't know what it is all about? Can the minister take off time every Sunday morning to tell his congregation what he has read in the church papers? Should a man be sent to each home to tell people that there is a famine in India, so that they may give for relief? Or shall we use the church paper to arouse their interest? Johann Gutenberg, through the grace of God, gave us the printing press. Why not let it do some of the work which it can do so efficiently?

In our church papers are shared some of the best experiences and deepest insights of the spiritual leaders of our conference. In them is found the latest information in regard to our work in missions, peace, relief, publication, and education. In them problems are raised and possible solutions explored. In a sense, they are the continuation of one General Conference session to the next one. They, and not the daily newspaper or even other religious magazines, contain articles on Mennonite doctrine and history. Our two main papers, The Bundesbote and The Mennonite are our means for keeping in weekly touch with the whole General Conference and its work.

Man cannot live to himself, and neither can Mennonite churches very well live to themselves. When Mennonites Discovered that they banded together to carry on mission work, establish schools, do relief work, carry out peace projects, and publish literature. To keep that unity and to keep our Mennonite faith we need a weekly church paper to inform and inspire every member of the Mennonite Church. It is a sinful inconsistency for any Mennonite to have a paper in his home that tells him about the doings in the "kingdoms of this world" and not to have a church paper that tells him about the work in "God's Kingdom." Ministers whose duty and privilege it is to feed the flock must see their responsibility in regard to our church papers. Our aim must be "A Mennonite paper in every Mennonite home."—rw.

SAUL'S CONVERSION

"A lady once showed Ruskin a costly handkerchief on which a drop of ink had fallen. The handkerchief, she complained, was ruined; nothing was left but to throw it away. Ruskin said nothing, but took the handkerchief away with him. Shortly afterward the lady received it back, but so changed that she could hardly believe that it was the original. Using the blot as the basis, he had worked around it a beautiful and artistic design, changing what was valueless and ruined into a thing of beauty and joy. So Christ takes the blotted lives and transforms them. He uses even the blots and makes them yield enduring lessons. Sins which defiled and seemingly left the life in ruin, He makes to yield a ministry of regeneration. It was the memory of the blots that drew from Paul his praises of adoration and thanksgiving to Christ."

I Must Sing

ARE YOU FAMILIAR with the wild spring song of a bird in the dawn of the morning when the storm of the night is past?

This is such a song— wild with joy and freedom. I promised to sing it when the night was about me. Now, that it's dawn, I am as a bird is perched high on the swaying tip of a tree, that lifts its head to throw a stream of thrilling notes against the lighted heaven. It sings because it must.

I, too, must sing for the night has passed, the rain has ceased its lashing whip and the scolding voice of the thunder is still. I must sing.

There were songs in the night but they were different. They were like the low sounds of the mother-bird in her nest sheltering the young beneath her rain-drenched wings while the wind tears away at the branches. They seek in vain to protect her. She knows that it is futile to sing aloud for who would hear her voice above the noise of the storm except the Creator alone, and who would understand her utter distress except the One from whose eye nothing is hidden and by whose heart nothing is forgotten. Her song in the rain is Nature's hymn of trust.

So I have sung but there were discords and my hymn too often forked into a two-part melody. There were the upper smooth-flowing phrases of trust; there were the lower restless notes of impatience when the night seemed so long. There were also the brief staccato notes of pain when the storm beat hard and the soul called "Why?" to its Creator. My song of trust was much like the flow of a river; so smooth at times, that the stars could rock in its mirrored bed and then so rough, so wild that only a spill over a cataract could break its impatience.

The night has passed and I must sing as the bird of the morning sings. What shall I sing? I will throw back my head and shout my song beyond the blue of heaven—e'en to the heart of God:

"Hallelujah!
Hallelujah, what a Saviour!"

—Joanna S. Andres

(We hope that Mrs. Andres, who has known the dark night of sickness, will now be able to continue to "sing in words" to the glory of God and the edification of those who read. Ed.)

PEACE

From a Letter by Our Peace Secretary

"It has just come to my knowledge that the quota for the last six months of our year ending August 1, 1942, should be $1.25 per member instead of $1.00. Our camp program is expanding. More men are coming to them right along. At the present time we have about one thousand men in our Mennonite-administered camps. Most churches who have been responding with support to the C. P. S. program feel that the support has been well worth while. . .even now witness is being felt, for what we do in response to the teachings of our Saviour can not be hid under a bushel. It will bear fruit in due season.

"In churches where the Peace Certificates and Stamps are being used and made available to the people, the response has been good. Some of the smaller churches with the use of these aids have had donations of $1,000 to$1,500 within several months. Two goode xamples are the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, Rev. E. J. Miller, pastor and the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, Rev. Walter H. Dyck, pastor.

"As to civilian defense work, the Mennonite Central Committee feels that we should not become too much a part of the totalitarian war program. We would do more in winning the good will of the community if we voluntarily assumed service projects in the community. In the event any kind of calamity should come upon it, we would be prepared to render an efficient service for the benefit of our fellowmen. This service could then be rendered at the time of tornado as well as at a time when bombs may fall upon us. In Souderton, four hundred Mennonites—

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AND CITY LIFE

It is by no means an accident that approximately 80 per cent of the boys in our Public Service camps come from the farms and rural communities rather than from the cities. Nor is it a mere coincidence that our town and city people tend to tacitly support the war efforts by buying defense bonds and stamps more readily than do our rural people. There are exceptions in both cases, but in my observation the above statement holds generally true. There are definite factors and forces in operation that explain this situation. The causative factors are chiefly economic and psychological. Despite the great diversity of people and customs found in cities there is a tremendous force constantly playing upon the individual to conform to the behavior patterns and social ideals of the majority. In the language of a former day people would have called it being tempted to be like the "world." This pressure to conform in a time of crisis can become so severe as to be almost unbearable. Only the most stout-hearted and courageous of faith can long endure this unpopular uphill struggle against the current of public opinion.

Concrete Illustrations

This point need not to be argued from any theoretical grounds. There are any number of actual cases constantly demonstrating the point in all of our urban communities. This pressure to secure conformity is applied to the city school children as well as to their parents, to laboring men and office workers as well as to men in business and professional life. Here are a few instances that have come to my attention. A football coach in a certain city school asked his pupils if any of their parents were C. O.'s. Those boys and girls who confessed were told to go home and tell their parents and older brothers and sisters that they were "yellow cowards." In another city school a boy whose family was known to be conscientiously opposed to war had his possessions painted with a Nazi swastica. Then there was the popular high school athlete who took the position of a C. O. and invoked the displeasure of his team mates and school companions and caused his father's business to be boycotted. Our young people may want to be loyal to our religious ideals but few of them can stand long under the sneers, ridicule, and ostracism that befalls them as members of a non-conforming minority. I have heard of no similar cases occurring in any of our Mennonite rural communities. The reason is that in such communities Mennonites constitute a larger share of the population and can, in part, control public opinion and mass hysteria.

But adults do not like ridicule and social distain any better than children. In fact they may not endure it as long as children because they know more ways of rationalizing their behavior so as to compromise enough to escape social condemnation. In a number of cases teachers who had registered as C. O.'s changed their classification to non-combatant or regular military service under threat of losing their jobs. A school superintendent made the announcement that he would not hire a person to teach if he knew that he or she was a conscientious objector. A young Mennonite engaged in an official capacity of a large manufacturing firm in an eastern city writes that he finds himself in a dilemma because of the conflict between his conscience and his duty to his company. He says: "The Government wants the Defense Work to go on without delay; all other demands are very definitely secondary . . . I am safe in saying that if we did not do any of this work, we would soon be in the 'red' and perhaps out of business . . . Called by the O. P. A. we were given the option of voluntarily signing up and running our business as they wanted it run, or as an alternate, have the Government run it for us. We signed up, and now hope for the best."

This case makes clear that even if a man owns his own business he is not free to follow the convictions of his conscience. He must obey the state at the expense of his conscience or suffer the consequences of business failure. The individual factory or office worker too is besieged with pressure to support the war efforts. Many employees are asked to give a tenth of their pay for defense bonds. Those who refuse can easily be singled out for ostracism, ridicule, and social condemnation.

Not To Be Condemned

In cases such as these one cannot hold the individual entirely responsible for compromising or waiving his religious convictions temporarily. He is not free to make choices in line with his convictions. The city man, in contrast to the farmer or small town business man, does not own his own tools if he is a laborer, or his own business if he is in business. He is generally a member of a company in which there are many officials, and thus his convictions must be sacrificed to the will of the majority. Furthermore he has made many other com-promises in the past so one more is not so bad. He has long become accustomed to working on Sunday, to the impersonality of employee-employer relationships, and the numerous demands of business necessity so he cannot easily extract himself in this particular case. Furthermore, the loss of his job would probably mean the loss of his home and hardship for his family. Thus we have only the greatest sympathy for the individual Mennonite who is caught in the mesh of an urban industrial situation and yet longs to be loyal to his religious convictions and his church teachings. It is my feeling that the disorganizing and corrupting forces of modern city life are too powerful for an individual to withstand no matter how conscientious he may be. It is for this reason that I believe that the Mennonite future lies in the establishment of strong Christian rural communities where economic, moral, and religious life can be better understood and more nearly controlled.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

REPORT OF THE FUNK MEMORIAL GIRLS' SCHOOL AND PRIMARY SCHOOL OF JANJGIR

For October, November, and December, 1941

Since sending in my last quarter's report there have been no outstanding changes, but there has been daily uninterrupted instruction in the schools, and a fine spirit of cooperation and loyalty on the part of the teachers. In the Primary school the usual determined efforts have to be used to keep the attendance of the local outcaste Hindu boys satisfactory. In some cases the hard times have forced parents to defy all compulsory school acts, and they will keep out their small children. There is really no work, but also there often is not enough food, so the children, at least, are sent to herd cattle or to pick up cow dung to make fuel. So many have been coming to school absolutely barebacked that it seems very necessary to supply one piece of clothing to protect them from the chilly north winds these days. Our Christian people are also very hard pressed, and many a child prays earnestly with an understanding that we have, perhaps, never experienced ourselves, "Give us this day our daily bread."

The fact that a group of Hindu girls from Janjgir tashil para, the government employed officials, was attending our Middle School, was an advance we thought. Suddenly this attendance was cut short by the very gruesome and tragic murder of a ten-year-old girl in that section. Now the parents give the excuse that they do not wish to send their daughters so far, but we know from experience that the ideal to educate girls is still a very vacillating and meager one. In this our Christian people have made such advances; they push and plead for the education of their children, and in more cases than one we have noticed that there is considerable pressure from the home that children progress in school.

For the Primary teachers we could hold a helpful four-day retreat in November, at which time an outside supervisor of Primary Schools of the Evangelical Mission, made a fine contribution through his lectures and model lessons. Also in the afternoons valuable instruction in temperance education was given by the W.C.T.U. missionary, Miss Ferguson. This is a crying need, not only for the instruction of little children, but more, especially, also for adults, as the use of tobacco, and in rare cases liquor and some native drugs, binds and hampers the service and testimony of church members. Teaching through the Sunday School alone has not seemed vital or extensive enough.

Dr. Ella Bauman of Champa, in a two day visit, brought out some interesting observations in her examination of 140 school children. The children from Christian homes were in better health, better nourished and far more cleanly on the average than others. The daily rounds of the nurse (who is also a teacher) to do many minor preventive treatments has had a very beneficial result, and we can hardly afford to lapse in this service and emphasis in the schools. The changed Primary School curriculum which has incorporated active health education is also making an impression. Yet there are very great handicaps, both physical and mental, to which many children have fallen heir because of bad heredity and negative environment. The grace and power of God, alone, is able to help to overcome these. Our work as missionaries does not seem to be completed.

I was successful in adding a trained teacher to the staff to stay for the remainder of this school year, as we were under-staffed. There is often a great temptation to go out to get the most efficient teachers, but often a budget that will not stretch to these requirements makes us go back. And we need not run ahead of needs and appreciations; it has never yet made for permanence. We are deeply grateful to God and to our prayerful constituency at home for their ability to visualize the great needs in this land and in helping to meet them. That times are desperately hard financially, I feel sure that, you are hearing as one unanimous voice from all of our reports. Material improvements for the most part have to be put on the shelf to wait for the day when it will not be such an effort to pay daily running expenses of our inexpensive and simple system of Christian education.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Donovan E. Smucker, Wadsworth, Ohio

JUNE 8—"Ye shall receive power. . . " Acts 1:8.

Modern science and technology have created a false illusion of power. Symbols of this illusion are laboratories, push buttons, check books, steel furnaces and dynamite. After abolishing God, it appeared that man was placed on the throne as Master-over-all. Alas! Man has been dethroned and now, so it appears, the machine is anointed among men. Edna St. Vincent Millay even wrote a poem in which one of her characters declared: ". . . Man has never been the same since God died." What terrific stupidity and blindness! Jesus Christ, of course, is the same today, yesterday and forever. His Way is never broken; His power is never defied. All man can do is to illustrate what happens when the illusion of man-made power is created. Today's travail and anguish are precisely that illustration.

JUNE 9—". . . Lord, teach us to pray. . ." Luke 11:1.

Probe into the true disciples of our Lord and you will find two basic explanations of their power; and these two supports are available to the least and the lowest among us. First, there is the complete surrender to Christ and His holy purposes. This contrasts with our distractions, half-thoughts, half resolutions and indecisiveness. Second, there is the fixed habitual and permanent devotion to the practice of prayer. This contrasts with our total disregard of prayer or else our feeble and essentially routine practice. Prayer, like swimming or walking can only be learned by what Brother Lawrence called "practising the presence of God." While devotional reading is helpful nothing is greater than a receptive heart starting to pray as a regular experience.

JUNE 10—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15:7.

Douglas V. Steere, the great Quaker writer, tells the story of the Irish fathers with plans for a new jail. They were given three conditions to meet. First, it must be built on the site of the old jail; second, it must be built out of the materials in the old jail; third, the old jail must be kept in use until the new jail was completed. The stubborn resistance to surrender makes it impossible for the will and words of the Lord to abide in us. Without this the life of prayer is radically limited since what really matters is to be prayed in. The spirit of God must descend on us; the human will must be brought low, tendered, transformed and re-focused. Then, and only then, can God and man have that mutuality of wills suggested in this important text.

JUNE 11—"But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." Gal. 5:22.

Every fact points toward the conclusion that America is the most drunken nation on earth. Even before the war in 1938 the nation's drink bill averaged $84.88 for every family in the United States while the milk bill averaged $40.68 per family. The liquor bill in 1940 was $3,613,000,000, thus topping our educational expenditures of $2,800,000,000. It is little wonder that a wave of revolsion is sweeping across the country in general and the churches in particular. However, this concern must never get out of focus. The above text places temperance exactly where it belongs as one of eight important fruits of the spirit; that the weaknesses of the flesh are crucified through Christ. Thus, temperance must always live with its friends of the spirit; love joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, and meekness.

JUNE 12—". . . I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding." I Cor. 14:15.

There are three kinds of hymn-singers who do not sing with the spirit nor with understanding. First, the phonograph singer who utters mere words and mere notes, who sings "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken" as though it were a dull recipe for pancakes. Then, there is the athletic hymn singer who strives for muscular exercise via noise and volume; one gets the impression that the congregation must shout the words so vigorously that the communication with God is physical rather than spiritual. Finally, there is the jazz singer who always wants the hymn with a syncopated tune. Ira Sankey himself admits in his autobiography that Dwight L. Moody once requested him never to sing "What Shall the Harvest Be," because "if I keep on singing such hymns I would soon have them all dancing."

JUNE 13—"Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding that by my voice I might teach others also than 10,000 words in an unknown tongue." I Cor. 14:19.

In the entire fourteenth chapter of first Corinthians Paul is struggling with two great problems plaguing all our institutions these days. How can we have liberty with order? How can we maintain fervor with dignity? In the thirty-third verse of the chapter he clears the air as far as God Himself is concerned. Thus: ". . . God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." On a human level, the text of this meditation gives the answer: put your emotional enthusiasm to the practical test; understanding is the practical test. Therefore, it is better to have five words understood than ten thousand words of wild frenzy which no one comprehends. Preachers, particularly, should test themselves with this insight. A good sermon, according to Paul, would be a sermon understood.

RELIEF

Work in England Steadily Continues

Brother Peter J. Dyck says of March 6-9: "This week end I was at two Birmingham evacuation camp schools. Some of the four hundred children in these camp schools wear clothing provided by Mennonites and sleep under blankets made by our people. During my three days there I had many occasions to speak to children and also take Sunday services."

In his letter Brother Dyck mentions the absence of "blitzes" on the British Isles. Refering to the lull, he says, "We thank the Lord for comparative quiet. We cannot know what tonight or tomorrow may bring The air is heavy and charged."

Clothing in Paraguay

A news release from this office, dated May 6, 1942, mentioned Brother Vernon Schmidt's distribution of clothing to certain Mennonites in Paraguay. A later letter from him tells of clothing distribution to the Mennonites of the Chaco area, some four hundred miles from the Friesland and Primavera colonies.

Quoting Brother Schmidt: "I arrived here yesterday to help with the clothing distribution in the Chaco. I am sure that here also the clothing will be immensely appreciated."

Many Persons Benefitting from Mennonite Relief

A report from Brother Joseph N. Byler for the month of March shows that over twenty thousand persons received help through our Mennonite workers in some form or other during that month.

By far the greatest majority of this figure were school children in Lyon, France, who benefited by the school feeding program. Full time support was given to sixty children in a convalescent home. Others who received help were refugees and certain individuals whom our workers considered worthy of assistance.

CHRISTIAN NURTURE

By Erland Waltner

In a recent address on the subject of "War Consequences," a professor of history from a nearby state teacher's college ventured a number of thought-provoking predictions concerning the cultural, political, and economic changes which are taking place in our own time. In the cultural line he predicted a further breakdown of the home, a decline and possible regimentation of schools, and a restriction of the activities of the Christian church. In the political sphere he predicted nothing short of a complete revolutionary upheaval, resulting from increased corruption in government; and in the field of economics, the possibility of national bankruptcy.

Whether the professor was right or wrong in his prophetic utterances, no one can any longer doubt that our nation is moving into a new order, or perhaps we should say, into a "new disorder." Whatever the outcome of the war in which America is now engaged, life in our land will not be the same tomorrow as it was yesterday. For Christian education this is a fact of great importance, for the question of whether the organized Christian church, and more specifically, our Mennonite church, can survive this world revolution will depend, in part, at least, upon an intelligent adaptation on our part to the times in which we live.

These disturbing facts lead one to ask some searching questions concerning the religious training of our children: How can we best prepare our children for life in an America which may be vastly different from the land of prosperity and liberty which we have known? Is it possible for us to lead them to the faith in God which we hold so dear? Can we guide them to appreciate and accept the standards and ideals of Jesus Christ, our Saviour, in the molding of their lives? Can we succeed in building within them a resistance to the sinister forces of unChristian ideologies which have corrupted the thinkng of youth in other nations? If all of this can be done how can we do it?

All of this highlights the importance of "Christian Nurture," or more specifically, "Christian Nurture in a Time of World Revolution."

We would recognize at the very outset of this discussion our complete dependence upon God and upon His grace for the success of any means that we might suggest for Christian nurture. "Without me ye can do nothing," said Jesus to His disciples. This we humbly acknowledge, but "with Christ" we must do something if we would be true to God's Word.

The wise King Solomon once declared, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22:6) The apostle Paul admonishes the Ephesians to bring up their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." (Eph. 6:4) Here is the statement of a clear obligation for Christian parenthood with the encouragement that a child will never completely forget the teaching of his youth. When Paul was writing to Timothy the sky was also of foreboding storm clouds. Evil days were ahead, but to Timothy Paul wrote, "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (II Tim. 3:12-13) Paul considered Timothy's training in the scriptures as his best defense against the false teachings and the loose living of that day.

Menno Simons considered the education of children so important that he wrote a special treatise on the subject, in which by scripture and by cogent argument he declares this to be a major responsibility of Christian parenthood.

Now our question is: How can this sacred responsibility be carried out effectively in the midst of a world revolution? To attempt an answer, we must consider the possibilities for Christian nurture in the three basic institutions of society, the home, the church and the school. Tonight we shall deal mainly with the first two.

In The Home

What are the possibilities for effective Christian nurture IN THE HOME in time of world crisis?

Though, undoubtedly, home life in America will suffer serious hardships in the future because of the enforced breakup of families, I believe that the general pattern of home life will remain more nearly intact than the pattern of church and school life. The futility of Russia's attempt to stamp out normal home life is an evidence of the durability of this sacred institution.

Once the home played a leading role in both secular and the Christian education of children. Recently, however, the trend has been to neglect home training and to turn this function over almost entirely to the church and to the school. This neglect, I fear, has been a serious mistake. The church and school can supplement but they can never substitute for the home training of a child. Especially is this true in the field of Christian nurture. In the future, if our schools should be regimented and our church activities curtailed, the home may be the only place where Christian nurture may be promoted effectively according to our Christian ideals.

How can we make our homes a place for the spiritual nurture of our children? My plea is for the reestablishment and the development of a family altar in every Christian home in America. By the family altar I mean the daily gathering of the entire family for devotional Bible reading and for prayer to Almighty God. I say, I plead for its re-establishment because most Christian homes have had it at some time or other, but, I regret to say, not many have maintained it. Some years ago I heard Dr. Warkentin say that 54% of Mennonite homes have family devotions. This, I am sure, is far above the average for all Christians in America, but it is certainly far below what it ought to be. I plead for the development of the family altar, because I am confident that it has far greater educational possibilities than have ever been realized.

Let me offer a few simple suggestions to help make the family altar a more effective source of Christian nurture in the home:

(1) It must be regular. This is of greatest importance. Irregularity in the maintenance of a family altar has a detrimental influence on the religious attitudes of children. It teaches them that Christian worship is not as important as other things in the home, that prayers are to be conditioned upon convenience, and that the observance as a whole is a burden rather than a privilege. Regularity will impress on the child's mind the importance of "seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." He will come to realize that the neglect of daily Bible reading and prayer is not only an offense to God, but is the beginning of soul starvation.

(2) It should be a family altar, in that every member of the family should have opportunity and should be expected to participate. Too many family altars are monologues. Father reads the Bible to himself and then prays to himself while the rest of the family has neither interest nor concern in what is going on. Everyone knows that we learn more readily by doing than by hearing. Hence, let the family altar provide for the participation of every member from the time that children are old enough to utter their first innocent prayer and, especially, after they are old enough to read.

(3) It should be instructive as well as devotional. If the family altar is to nourish the souls of the children, it should provide regular time for instruction of the children in the things of God and in the interpretation of the scriptures. In the Jewish home, in the Old Testament, the father was instructed to discuss the spiritual traditions of the race with his children. He was to explain the why and wherefore of religious observances. If Christian parents are to do this, of course, it is important that they themselves know enough about God and His word to give instruction to their children, for how can the blind lead the blind?

But someone may say, "That is fine theory, but where can parents find time to maintain regularly such a family altar?" Listen, we can find time for anything we deem sufficiently important.

I heard Rev. Harry Yoder of Carlock, Illinois, recently tell a story on his seminary roommate. When his roommate came home from a late date one night Yoder reproved him about keeping such hours. The reply was something like this, "I tell you, if you want something good, you've got to put in some time for it." And that, dear friends, is true in more ways than one. Certainly, the family altar is worthwhile, and as I say, in the future it may be the most effective means by which we can promote Christian nurture in our children. Let us use this means to fulfill our sacred responsibilities:

In all the world there is no holier sight
Than families at prayer—mothers beside
Their children bowing down, and fathers, too;
The little ones who echo heaven here;
Whose joy is prayer; the tempted older ones
Who hear clear calls to honor God in all
Their ways.

What joy is His to hear their pleas
For guidance from home's quiet altar place!
All families are dear to Him who once
Knew mother-love and father-love, and joined,
As child and youth Himself, in family prayer
"Thy kingdom come! Thy will be done!" Where these Prayers made in all earth's homes, each desert place
Would blossom as the rose; all hate would cease;
And His true peace untie men's hearts and hands.
But peace He gives to every home on earth
Where families in humble reverence pray,
"Thy kingdom come! Thy will be done," each day.

Love in Courtship

By John R. Mumau

Love needs fidelity to be enduring. Courtship is not intended for the pleasure one gets from it. Too many people engage in carefree love for sport. Some will boast of their popularity among the opposite sex. Courtship is an adventure in which one seeks to find a life companion. Engage in it honorably. The wife should be sanctified to the husband and be true to that one husband. The husband has one wife and only one. The same is true of finding a companion. One who comes to the age of courtship should be given to fidelity. Friendships are by-products of the social life. Courtship is primarily a preparation for marriage. Some young men want to have a lot of "girls" and then marry only one. Such persons have lessened their capacity for fidelity in the marital relationship. One way in which you may test fidelity is to notice the attitude of persons to parents, to the church, to social groups, and to duty. That young man who discovers the girl in the home paying larger attentions to him when mother needs her help may well take notice that something is wrong. If that daughter cannot be loyal to her mother in the time of need, it is likely that she will be the same toward him as a husband after marriage. The same is true of a man. If he speaks disrespectfully of his mother, be very careful. He will likely speak the same way of his wife some day.

Guarantee Personal Honesty

Love needs honesty to be effective. In the first place be honest with yourself. In the second place be honest with your friend. Make sure that you leave no false impression. There are many heartaches, many wounded hearts through false impressions and misleading suggestions. I know of a number of instances where people were greatly disappointed because someone in whom they had large confidence misled them. You have no right as a young man to give any suggestion that your girl is the best girl in the world and that you love no one else, if you have no intention of marrying her. "I know of a broken heart in one who thought she was soon ready to marry a fine young man, but when he left home he became acquainted with another and disappointed his first fiancee. The matter of breaking an engagement is a serious one. You had better think two or three times before you become engaged so you don't disappoint someone. If there are personal deficiences that you know of you ought to be fair and give an explanation before you are engaged. There ought to be in courtship a frankness in telling each other what ideals you hold and the opinions you carry. Love needs to be honest.

EMPTY SEATS

"Are you going to church this morning, Susie?" asked Dr. Clark, lying back in his easy chair, with the morning paper. "A Doctor who is out day and night can't be expected."

"No, I made jelly yesterday, and I'm tired. I'm faithful enough to stay at home this cloudy morning," and Mrs. Clark curled upon the couch with the Bible she hadn't opened for a week, but it soon dropped from her hand. She was aroused by a strange voice saying:

"Now, my good imps, what have you done today to weaken the kingdom of God?"

The voice came from a suspicious looking person seated on a throne of human skulls. Around him was gathered a crowd of terrible beings, each with a crown of fire, in which gleamed some name, such as malice, envy, pride, hatred, and kindred passions:

"We have been busy today making empty seats in churches," said one.

"Nothing could please me better," answered their king.

"I persuaded one man that had a headache, and kept him from a sermon that might have changed his whole life," said one.

" I inducted one good man to slip into his store and fix up his books," said another, with a horrid grin.

"Good!" said the king, "He'll soon give up the Sabbath altogether."

"I was able to get one devoted young man to visit some old friends," said another imp.

"I worried a good sister about her bonnet until she decided to stay at home until she got a new one," spoke up the imp labeled Pride.

"And I made several women who were hungry for God's Word to stay home to repine over trials. I just said to them, 'Oh, these rich people don't care for you, you can't wear fine clothes, so I wouldn't go where I was looked down upon.' That way I kept many poor people whom the rich would have been glad to see."

"That is one of the best ways to cheat the poor people out of heaven that I know of," answered the king with approval.

"I induced a good many men and women to think they were not strong enough to get out," said one called "Indifference." "Of course, all these men will be at business tomorrow, even if they feel worse. But they could not go to church, where they would have no special mental or physical strain. And the ladies would have been able to go calling or clean house, but I made them think they couldn't walk to church unless they were perfectly well."

"Very good," said the king, with a sulphurous grin, "Sunday headaches might often be cured by getting out into the fresh air, and backaches forgotten by thoughts to higher things. But you lying imps must use every weakness of the flesh to help make empty seats."

They all smiled, for in their kingdom lying was a great compliment.

"To make ladies think that their servants need no Sunday privileges is good," suggested one. "Very true," said the superior, "as long as we can get Christian people to cause or allow men and women to work during church hours, we can keep many empty seats in the churches, and men and women away from God."

"I'm the weather imp," said one gloomy fellow. "I go around persuading people it is going to rain, or it is too cold, or too damp, or too hot to venture out to church. It is enough to make even your gloomy majesty laugh to see these people start out the next day in wind and weather. One would think it a sin to carry an umbrella and wear gum coats to church."

"Confidentially," said the king, "when I find a Christian who has no more concern about weather Sunday than Monday—determined to make as much effort for spiritual gain as we would do for worldly profit, I just give him up. It's no use to try to drag back the man or woman who goes to church in all kinds of weather."

"I am able to do a good deal with some of the ladies of the congregation," spoke up the imp labeled "Fashion of this world." "I can make some people stay at home because the new hat did not come, or because their clothes are out of style, or they have not gotten a new cloak."

"I have a better scheme than that," said another. "These people you keep away are indifferent—generally good-for-nothing folks, who are hardly worth getting into the kingdom of his satanic majesty, but I have a plan that empties seats of the workers in the church."

"That is just what we want," said the king.

"I make these people overwork on Saturdays. For instance, I induce some good man the preacher depends upon, or some devout Sunday School teacher, to make Saturday the busiest day of the week. I just keep him rushed with neglected things till late at night, and then he oversleeps or is sick the next day, and can't get out."

"Splendid plan," cried Satan.

"Yes, it works well with delicate women. If they clean house, or have Saturday company, they can be kept at home without knowing they have broken the Sabbath the day before. A church party late Saturday nights helps make empty seats."

"You are doing finely, my imps," his majesty said warmly—for his breath was a breath of fire! "Preachers may work and pray over their sermons all week, but there will be no results in preaching to empty seats. One of the most important things we have to consider is how to keep people away from church on Sunday. Your plans are excellent, but I may suggest another good point. All preachers have human imperfections—some fault or manner of speech. Get Christians to criticise their pastor, especially before their children, if you can stir up a spirit of faultfinding against the preacher, or among the members, it will help empty seats. People who get mad at each other do not care to go to church together. If the seats are empty, the preacher may be a saint, and preach like an angel, but to no purpose. See the result of your labor on High Street church today. Not only did the 200 people who stayed at home lose a blessing, but each empty seat did its work against the Lord's kingdom. The preacher made unusual preparation, and went with his heart on fire, but the empty seats chilled him, and he did poorly. There was a special collection, but the best givers were away, so it was a failure. It isn't a smart preacher nor a rich congregation, nor a good location, nor a paid choir, that makes a church successful. It is the church members always being there that draws in the unconverted, and makes an eloquent preacher. As soon as a Christian begins to stay at him, from one excuse or another, I have a mortgage on his soul, which, if he does not shake off, I will foreclose on the judgment day."

"You have none on mine!" cried Mrs. Clark, who had been listening with bated breath, "I'll go to church if only to defeat you."

"What's the matter, dear?" asked the doctor, "have you been dreaming?"

"Perhaps so, but I am going to church if I get there just in time for the benediction. I'll cheat Satan from this day out of one empty seat."

She has kept her word, and influenced many others to let nothing trifling keep them from God's house, and one "downtown" church has begun to grow, and will soon be a great power for God, because of no "empty seats." —Selected

No. 3 of Series of Three Studies on Missions

NEW PHASES OF MISSION WORK, I Cor. 1:2-31

I Worship Service:

1. Songs: "One is Kind Above All Others," No. 447; "Brightly Beams Our Father's Mercy," No. 448. 2. Reading of scripture, prayer, and leader's remarks. 3. Short talk by missionary. 4. Offering for peace work.

II. Leader's Introduction:

"As these lines are written war conditions have greatly affected the missionary enterprise. Some missionary boards have called missionaries home from areas where work has become especially difficult. In other fields, missionaries from belligerent nations have been stranded without support from their home bases. Many stranded missions have been taken over and kept going by American boards.

In the Orient, for example, certain aspects of the missionary enterprise have been greatly hindered. It appears, however, that the leaders of China have become so convinced of the power of the gospel to save a nation, and so responsive to the Christian appeal, that the door of a great opportunity has been opened to the Church.

In some fields, as in Japan and Chosen (Korea), large numbers of missionaries have had to be withdrawn, leaving the struggling churches in the hands of native leaders. The war is thus strengthening the indigenous movement in the mission field.

In areas overrun by war, missionaries have had to render emergency service of every conceivable kind, often at extreme risk. In instance after instance, the service they have thus rendered has done more to extend the faith than years of peacetime preaching.

In days of rebuilding, after war has done its worst, Christian missionaries are able to render a particular and necessary service. Periods of readjustment are periods of opportunity for the Christian missionary enterprise."

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Incentive to missions, I Chron. 16:23-26. 2. Demand for preachers, Rom. 10:14, 15. 3. The command to evangelize, Matt. 28:19, 20. 4. Beginning at home, Luke 24:47. 5. The gospel for all, Acts 10:34, 35.

IV For Discussion:

1. What are the greatest present needs in China? 2. In India? 3. What is our conference doing for the migrants? 4. Shall we start work of some kind among the negroes? 5. Since most Mennonites live on the farm, should we not do mission work in farm communities?

V. Facts for Study:

"Our Protestant churches maintain important missionary work among a great variety of depressed and underprivileged people in this country. Mountaineers, Negroes, Spanish-speaking Americans, Indians and foreign-born groups in our cities are among those to whom the churches minister.

The long-continued pre-war depression gave rise to many new needs which our mission boards are endeavoring to meet. Churches are rendering a vital service to migrant groups, to labor groups, to rooming-house populations in our large cities, to rural areas which have been stricken by the depression.

Local churches throughout the country are keeping in touch with their young men who have been called into service. This is a vital ministry and should be emphasized."

How to Win Others

When in Egypt some years ago, holding meetings among soldiers, the Rev. J. Stuart Holden states that he asked a sergeant in a Highland regiment how he was brought to Christ. His answer was this: "There is a private in the same company who was converted in Malta before the regiment came on to Egypt. We gave that fellow an awful time. The devil got possession of me, and I made that man's life a positive burden to him. Well, one night, a terrible wet night, he came in from sentry. He was very tired and very wet, but before lying down to rest he kneeled to pray. My boots were heavy with mud, and I let him have one on one side of the head and the other on the other side. Next morning I found those boots beautifully polished. That was his only reply to me; it broke my heart, and I was saved that day."

Program for June 14

ANSWERING OUR QUESTIONS ABOUT THE BIBLE

(Put the following questions about the Bible into a question-box. Also ask members to bring questions of their own and put them into a box. Ask your pastor to be present and help you conduct a question-bee.)

1. In what language was the Bible written? The language of the Old Testament is Hebrew. The New Testament was written in Greek.

2. What is the Septuagint version? In the third century B.C. there began to be made at Alexandria a Greek version of the Old Testament. It is called the Septuagint version from the traditional belief that seventy scribes were employed to write it.

3. Was the Bible originally divided into chapters and verses? No, that was an invention of the Middle Ages. The first printed Bible with chapters appeared in 1525, and the first Bible with verses in 1551.

4. Was the art of writing really known as early as the Old Testament was written? Tablets have been found which were written in the fifteenth century, B. C., by governors of cities in the south of Palestine to their masters, the kings of Egypt; while inscriptions in Egypt itself take us back, at least, five thousand years before the Christian era.

5. When were the scriptures first rendered in [illegible] end of the fourteenth century (1382) the complete version of Wyclif was made from the Latin vulgate.

6. What was the date of the Exodus? Probably not later than 1180 B.C.; it may have been as early as 1250 B.C.

7. What books are included in the Pentateuch? Pentateuch is a Greek word meaning 'Fivefold volume.' This includes the first five books of the Old Testament.

8. How many books and their authors can you name? Discuss the authorship of those of which you are not certain.

9. What is the difference between the Bible of the Catholic church and the Jewish scriptures?
10. Do the above differ from our Bible?

JESUS, THE HEALER—Mark 1:30:34

"A Remedy Meeting"

Tonite we begin four meetings to be given over to the selection of choice stories about Jesus. In the four gospels are many stories of the great physician at work. In our lesson tonight, the Lord Jesus meets a leper, a servant with palsy, blind men, and the man with the infirmity for thirty-eight years. He healed bodily, but best of all, he heals our sick bodies too, if we will let Him. As the Lord Jesus went about healing the sick and afflicted, he showed to the world God's love and power. No physician could help the leper, but the Lord Jesus could and did.

The following books will also be helpful. They are printed in the language of Juniors: Hurlburt's Life of Christ, Sherman and Kent's The Children's Bible.

A good idea in these programs is to have the Juniors retell these stories to the group, or illustrate them with color pictures. These can be ordered from your denominational publishing house.

Another thought to stress in our topic is the fact that we should joyfully spread the good news of what Jesus has done for us too, as did the blind and the lame.

The Question Bee

(1) Because the Lord Jesus is the Son of God, what powers does He have? (2) What lesson of faith is taught? (3) Where did Jesus often go to get away from the crowd? (4) In what things can our bodies be spiritually sick?

The Prayer List

(a) a closer walk with Jesus (b) freedom from petty sins (c) a greater love to tell others of Christ (d) consecrated bodies for God's temple.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

SUNDAY: THE RISEN CHRIST AND THE DISCIPLES

Luke 24:33-48

Topic: THE REALITY OF THE LIVING CHRIST

Introduction

Christ had told His disciples that He would arise from the dead on the third day, yet no one had expected to see Him alive again. He was seen at least five times on the day of His resurrection. He appeared to Mary Magdeline (John 20:14), to the women who came to the tomb (Matt. 28:9), to Peter, to the two on the way to Emmaus, and to the eleven and some friends in our today's lesson. The disciples needed repeated proof of His resurrection.

Christ Appears to the Disciples vss. 33-43

When the two who had gone to Emmaus, realized that the stranger who had met them, and walked, and talked with them, was the risen Christ, they hurried back to Jerusalem. It was late and night travel was dangerous. These two men evidently were not any of the eleven apostles. They found the eleven apostles and some others with them, gathered in a room in Jerusalem and were greeted with the news of the Lord's resurrection. Peter was telling them that the Lord had appeared to him on that day. The two then told their wonderful experience of that same afternoon; how Christ had joined them without their recognizing Him, and how He opened the scriptures to them, and how they recognized Him as He broke bread with them. They instantly recognized his customary blessing of the bread.

While they were speaking, Jesus Himself suddenly stood in their midst. This sudden and mysterious appearance of their crucified Lord was not what they had looked for. His sudden appearance in the dimly lighted room frightened them. His presence could not be accounted for in any ordinary, natural way. They still needed much to convince them. They had not at first understood the meaning of the empty tomb. The human mind and heart are always frightened in the presence of the supernatural. Jesus read their thoughts and quieted their troubled hearts and thoughts.

Jesus soon convinced them that He is indeed the same Lord whom they thought they had lost. They soon were fully convinced of the reality of His resurrection. They saw His body. They heard His voice. They handled Him. They saw Him eat a piece of broiled fish and honey comb (cf. John 20:25-27; 21:13). "The repeated appearances of Jesus to these men resulted in a burning zeal to bear witness to others concerning the glorious fact that their Master had risen indeed and thus proved his claims to be the Christ." (Arnold's Commentary)

Christ's Teachings Concerning Himself vss. 44-48

Christ had some very important things to say to His disciples. What He is telling them now is but a review of things He had frequently told them. Whatever was written concerning the Messiah in the Old Testament, must be fulfilled in Him. He opened their understanding to the meaning of the scriptures and to the significance of His own death. The disciples received a new spiritual insight and perception of Christ's true greatness and of the plan of redemption. The great Bible truths are understood well only by those who have a God-given spiritual insight. The Old Testament proclaims a suffering Redeemer as much as a victorious Messiah. Jesus helped the disciples to see this. His sufferings and death were a part of His work of redemption. They were the price of man's redemption. They now understood that His laying down of His life was to atone for the sins of the world. The preaching of repentance and remission of sins was to be their work. It is our work now. The Church is responsible for the preaching of the gospel among all nations.

Christ's appearances reveal that He was seeking His disciples even more eagerly than they were seeking for Him. He met them where they were. He came to them, even when hidden behind closed doors. God finds us, and we recognize Him. The risen Christ meets us. He responds to our loving heart. We must yield our heart to Him.

How does the Living Christ become real to us?

In what sense did the witnessing of the apostles differ from the witnessing we can do?

Why do we fail so readily in understanding the scriptures?

C. P. S. CAMP NEWS

New Camp at North Fork, California

Plans are under way for a Mennonite camp to be established at North Fork, California, before the end of May. Thirty-eight boys from each of three mid-western camps (Medaryville, Henry and Denison) will be transformed to the new camp. The camp project, under the Forestry Service, calls for immediate help because of fire hazards.

Medaryville boys will entrain for North Fork on May 22, Henry boys on May 24, and Denison boys on May 25. Mr. and Mrs. Leland Bachman of the Henry Staff are accompanying the group and will serve as director and matron of the new camp.

Detached Service on Farms

For some time negotiations have been in progress for placing C. P. S. men on dairy farms on detached farm furlough service. Present information at the Akron, Pennsylvania, office indicates that on May 20 ten men from the Denison, Iowa, Camp were scheduled to leave for a dairy county in Wisconsin. It is hoped that this program of detached service may rapidly expand. (Compiled by Grant M. Stoltzfus, released, May 20, 1942)

LETTER FROM PARAGUAY

Philadelphia, Colonia Fernheim
Gran-Chaco, Paraguay
South America
March, 1942

Dear Mission Friends:

Three months of the new year are almost finished. The period that is past has been a difficult one. It has been a period of drought as we have never experienced it before! The drought was not only manifest in nature, but in the spiritual realm as well. It appears as though mankind is being dragged into the whirlpool of war, hunger, revolution, pestilence, and all that goes with it, until there seems to be no room for any spiritual truth from God's Word. There appears to be no room for the teachings of Jesus, that all His followers should be in unity and harmony; as a result love and devotion disappear and everyone wants to follow his own way.

In spite of all the obstacles we are endeavoring in this place to build up the Kingdom of God, although it is difficult because of prevailing circumstances. Our weekly schedule of services includes the following: two worship services, catechetical instruction, regular Bible study and prayer hour. In addition we have special Bible studies in the different places of worship. For instance in Blumenort, John, the 15th chapter was carefully studied. The commandment to love was brought out so forcibly that many asked themselves the question: "Who is worthy of serving Christ?" In addition we arranged for a youth conference which was held. Two reports by such who attended will also be published.

Finally, we had a good rain and the fields appear green again. If the Lord sends a few more rains, much of the damage will be undone again, although we may not be able to get along without outside aid. Even so we cannot get along without the help of the Lord in our religious life, and it is a source of great comfort to be able to turn to Him again and again for help. "My help cometh from the Lord."

With sincere greetings from your brother in Christ,

—Abraam Harder, Elder

A LETTER FROM OUR PEACE SECRETARY

most of them Old Mennonites—have taken first aid instruction. They will act in the capacity of their own units if they should ever be needed. In the same way they have also received instruction in fire fighting, and will have their own fire fighting squads if their service should be needed. It would be well for us to find the means of rendering service for others which is consistent with the dictates of our conscience, rather than be pushed into it. These are only suggestions which may help us to serve in a more effective way for our faith.

"Contacts are being made in Washington during these days when bills are being introduced to draft women. We are making an effort to have C. O. women exempted from any service, if any of the bills advocating this measure should be passed.

"As to the men from 54 to 65, we will want to advocate alternate service of a civilian nature instead of direct defense work. These are all things about which we can not be sure until the time that they may be enforced.

"These are days in which we need to pray earnestly and fervently that we may act wisely and discreetly and that we be good citizens and yet stand firmly for the right. May the Lord bless you in your efforts in the Kingdom."

CORRESPONDENCE

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Albany, Oregon

Our congregation is steadily climbing spiritually and numerically. Last November sixteen new members were added to the church, and on Easter Sunday three more were accepted.

During the latter part of April Rev. P. A. Kliewer conducted meetings at Newport and Deerpark, Washington. Rev. J. M. Franz of Pratum, Oregon, supplied the home pulpit on the morning of April 26. In the evening Miss Etta Davis of Portland gave us the second very inspirational message of the day. On Sunday evening, April 19, Mrs. P. A. Kliewer talked about her experiences among the Cheyenne Indians.

This year our Women's Mission Society spent a day in sewing for the Orphan Home. The Berean S. S. Class is contributing five dollars a member toward repairing, painting, and redecorating the church, etc.

Two thousand men are working on Cantonment Adair, which is six miles from here. When completed thirty-five thousand soldiers will be stationed there for training. This will create a great responsibility for the ministers and Christians of Albany and will give ample opportunities for witnessing for our Lord and Saviour.—Church correspondent

BURRTON MENNONITE CHURCH

Burrton, Kansas

On March 8 the Halstead Christian Endeavor presented a program in our church on the topic "What Christ Does For The Individual." Rev. A. van der Smissen of the Hebron Church near Buhler, conducted pre-Easter services from March 29 to April 3. He presented a series of very inspiring messages. After Easter our church services were poorly attended because of an epidemic which swept the community. Nearly all the people are out of quarantine, so we hope to have better services again.

On May 3 Rev. J. J. Regier and Rev. Jake Dirks of the Garden Township Church exchanged pulpits. In the afternoon funeral services were held for Russell Leroy Nightengale, seven-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Nightengale.

On May 10 the Thiessen Brothers Quartet of Whitewater favored us with several numbers. We were also happy for the baptism of Abe Plett from Inman, who joined our church. Ernest Pankratz, who was at home on furlough from the C. P. S. Camp of Henry, Illinois, gave us an interesting talk on May 13. I am sure we have a better idea now of the work which the young men are doing. May we not forget to uphold them in our prayers.

FRIEDENSFIELD MENNONITE CHURCH

Turpin, Oklahoma

A shower of rain recently (written May 12) was a great help to the gardens and wheat fields. The wheat looks very promising, and farmers are busy getting ready for harvest.

Since Rev. Rudolph Schmidt left us last December this congregation has been without a pastor. Ministers from the Meno Bible School who have served us meanwhile are, Rev. J. R. Barkman, Rev. Paul Kuhlmann, Rev. Victor Graber, and Walter Regier who has served us the last few times. We have received deep, spiritual food from each one of them. Several times singers from O. B. A. accompanied them. In May Rev. J. R. Barkman and seven students rendered a spirit-filled program. In it they showed pictures of "The Life of Christ."

Rev. Fast, director of the Zoar Mission School, Inman, Kansas, and a few students gave us a program in February. It was very uplifting and enjoyable. Rev. J. J. Gerbrandt and a group of students from the Meade Bible School were here this spring. It was encouraging to see how glad the students were to testify for our Lord and Master.

On March 16 the following left for the Colorado Springs C. P. S. Camp: Harry Buller, Alvin Dirks, Arnold Wedel, John and Pete Epp, and Dave Regier. The boys were honored with a farewell program and a basket supper. John Epp was later discharged because of his health. The Frank Dick family from California have established their home here.

DEDICATION OF THE NEWLY ERECTED MEADOW MENNONITE CHURCH AT MINGO, KANSAS

We as members of the Meadow Mennonite Church wish to announce the dedication of our newly erected church building here in Mingo, Kansas, on the 31st of May 1942, and at the same time wish to extend a hearty invitation to all our sister churches of the Western District Conference to come and participate in this glad event, and to rejoice with us as we dedicate the building to the service of our Lord and Master.

The Dedication services are to take place on the above mentioned date at 10 a. m. Services will also be held in the afternoon and evening. Come if you can; you will be welcome. We solicit your prayers.

Free lunch will be served to all visitors at noon in the church basement.

THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN

By Menno Simon

"Be. . . particularly mindful, that you instruct them from their youth in the way of the Lord, that they fear and love God, walk in all modesty and submission; that they be genteel, well-disposed, discreet, honor and obey their father and mother, using reasonable language, not lying, nor clamorous, not stubborn, nor self-willed; for such is not becoming the children of the saints, Deut. 6; Eph. 6. The world desires for the children that which is earthly and perishable, such as money, honor, fame and wealth. From infancy they train them up to vice, pride, haughtiness and idolatry. But with you, who are born of God, this is not the case; for it behooves you to seek something else for your children, namely, that which is heavenly and eternal, and hence it is your duty to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, as Paul teaches, Eph. 6:1-4."

"My beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, who sincerely love the word of the Lord, thus instruct your children from youth up, and daily admonish them with the word of the Lord, setting a good example. Teach and admonish them, I say, in proportion to the development of their understanding; constrain and correct them with discretion and moderation, without anger or bitterness, Col. 3; lest they be discouraged; spare not the rod, if reason and necessity require it. . ."

"Pray to Almighty God for the gift of his grace, that in his great mercy, he may guide and preserve them in the right path, through the directing influence of his Holy Spirit. Watch over their salvation as for your own souls. Teach, instruct, admonish, threaten, correct and chastise them, as circumstances require. Keep them away from naughty, wicked children, among whom they hear and learn nothing but lying, cursing, swearing, fighting and knavery. Have them instructed in reading writing, bring them up to habits of industry, and let them learn such trades as are suitable, expedient and adapted to their age and constitution. If you do this, you shall live to see much honor and joy in your children. But if you do it not, heaviness of heart shall consume you at last. For a child left to himself, without reproof, is not only the shame of his father, but he bringeth his mother to shame, Prov. 29."

"This brief admonition I have written to my beloved, from motives of sincere love, and not without a reason; for in the course of my ministry, I have too frequently observed, how disorderly, improperly, nay, heathenlike, many persons conduct themselves towards their children. The absurd, senseless love of the flesh, has such an influence over some, and they are so blinded by the natural affection for their children, that they can neither perceive nor observe any evil, error or defect in them, notwithstanding they frequently abound in idle tricks and wantonness, are disobedient to father and mother, murmur at them, collect and carry abroad lies, quarrel and fight with other children. . ."

"And forasmuch, as we ought to be the salt of the earth, the light of the world, the holy nation, the chosen generation, yea, the bride of Christ, it by no means becomes us, to have, or to bear such sensual love or preposterous affection, in any circumstances, towards our children; but it is our duty, as far as in us lies, diligently and earnestly to instruct and govern our children and household, as well as ourselves, in conformity to the sincerity of Godliness, a life of virtue, and the word of God."

(The above are quoted excerpts from Menno Simon's treatise on "The Education of Children.")

THE WORK OF TODAY

"Do the work of today as it comes to hand
Though it seems only commonplace,
For the small things done with a lofty aim
Will lead you from grace to grace.
What matters to you where He bids you toil
Or the task which His love assigns?
It will seem all right when you reach the goal
And He shows you His great designs.
Then gather the roses while they bloom:
Rejoice while the sky is clear,
Trusting the God who cares for all
When the shadows of earth appear.
And send out the light of this holy trust
On the fields of the commonplace,
For there are no other fields, you know,
For most of the human race."

CHRISTIAN NURTURE

By Erland Waltner

In The Church

From Christian nurture in the home let us turn to the possibilities of Christian nurture IN THE CHURCH.

Here we naturally think first of the Sunday School. The Sunday School has grown from a mustard seed beginning to a mighty institution which provides spiritual nourishment to millions in the world. For many of these it provides the only Christian influence in their lives. Joining hands with the Sunday School and supplementing its work have come daily vacation Bible schools and in some places week-day religious education. Just what will be the fate of the educational program of the church in the shape of things to come, it is too early to predict. Because transportation is becoming more difficult, in the rural areas at least, some church activities will need to adjust themselves to the times.

But while we have our church schools, we should be concerned with the question, "Do they really provide spiritual nourishment for those who attend? Do they really feed the souls of the children?"

Too often, I fear, we take for granted that just because a child attends Sunday School his spiritual needs are adequately supplied. Since the day a policeman walked into a Sunday School in which I was teaching and put hand-cuffs on one of our pupils, I realize that enrollment in Sunday School is no sure guarantee of sprouting wings. Both John Dillinger and D. L. Moody were Sunday School pupils, but there must have been some vast difference in the way they were influenced, one turning to crime and becoming America's public enemy No. 1, the other turning to God and becoming one of the greatest influences for righteousness that America has ever produced.

If our church schools are really to nurture our children, what is essential?

(1) One primary essential is a clear concept of teaching goals. How can we get anywhere if we do not know where we are going? We cannot here even mention all the goals of Christian education, but all other goals are secondary to the one paramount goal, which is to establish and to nurture in the pupil a vital personal faith in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of their souls and as the Lord of their lives. If Christian education does not succeed in leading its pupils to place their highest trust in Jesus Christ and to pledge their love and loyalty to Him, it is failing in its highest responsibility. Christian education must produce growing Christians.

(2) To achieve this high goal a second basic essential is an intelligent and consecrated Christian leadership. A stream rises no higher than its source, neither is the spiritual life of pupils likely to be higher than that of their Christian teachers. If the teachers in our church schools expect to provide spiritual nourishment for their pupils, they must themselves maintain a high standard of Christian livnig and must themselves be in constant personal harmony with the God they are trying to make real to their pupils. Spiritual dwarfs can never expect to produce spiritual giants.

Rev. S. R. Hole, dean of Rochester, back in 1892 wrote a Book about Roses in which he said, "He who would have beautiful roses in his garden must have beautiful roses in his heart." No Christian teacher can hope to see the Rose of Sharon blossom in the life of a pupil if he pesonally does not know the beauty and fragrance of that Rose in his own heart.

(3) Furthermore, Christian education must provide proper food for spiritual growth. One of my young people came into the sacristy the other day complaining that she experienced no growth in her Christian life. I asked, "What have you been eating, spiritually speaking? Have you been studying your Bible faithfully?" When she admitted she had not I knew I had found at least one cause of her trouble. The Christian soul needs food, and its most nourishing food is the Bread of Life which is the Word of God.

Timothy was commended by St. Paul because from a child he had known the sacred scriptures which were able to make him wise unto salvation. This fact made Timothy a stable Christian who could stand firm against the tide of evil in his day. The Bible, today also, I believe, must remain the basic food in the diet of the Christian. When the Scotchman started to mix sawdust with the oats he fed his donkey, in order to save oats, he discovered that his donkey did not thrive and finally died. When we try to mix sawdust with God's word as we attempt to feed souls, we discover that nothing will substitute for the life-giving Word of God. It alone contains the vitamins which are essential to a normal growing spiritual life.

To teach our children how to recite Bible verses is good, but it is not enough. To keep on telling our children what the Bible says they can do and what it says they cannot do is acceptable only for a while. This kind of teaching may be compared to feeding a child with a spoon. Spoon-feeding is proper for infants, but it looks very ackward when the same method is applied in the case of adults. Still, it seems, some people never pass the spoon-feeding stage of Christian thinking and experience. In our churches there are many who still rely on the pastor's weekly morsel as the only spiritual nourishment in their lives. They have never learned to use the Bible to guide them in the solution of their problems, nor have they developed a vital prayer life. They stand perplexed and baffled in the presence of modern problems and don't know where to turn. Somewhere along the line their Christian nurture has been sadly neglected.

Most of the things our Christian education professor in seminary told us I have forgotten, but one thing he said stays with me. Speaking to us as prospective preachers and teachers he said, "Don't feed your pupils applesauce; plant apple trees." As Sunday Schools, as Christian educators, it should be our concern not simply to dish out spoonfuls of God's truth, but also plant the seed of God's Word so our pupils may become as "a tree, planted by the rivers of waters," standing firm and true, even when the storms of persecution rage. We need to teach our children how to stand on their own feet, how to read God's word for themselves and how to think through their own spiritual and moral problems in the light of the Holy Spirit. Instead of giving them crumbs, let us take them to the bread box. Instead of giving them drops of water, let us take them to the Fountain of living waters.

This emphasis upon Christian nurture as a function of the home and of the church does not minimize the importance of our church colleges. These are as necessary today as they ever were. However, my concern now is that we take advantage of our God-given privileges to nurture our children in the things of God in our own homes by a regular, devotional and instructive family altar, and that we make our church schools effective by maintaining in them an evangelistic purpose, a consecrated Christian leadership, and a Bible-centered curriculum.

All that I have said becomes very important to me as I recall a conversation with a dear old Mennonite pastor in Germany in the summer of 1938. I asked him, "How are things going with the Mennonite Church in Germany under the present government? What are the possibilities for the future?" Tears came to the eyes of this old man of faith. In substance he replied, "We who are grown and established, we will keep the faith by God's grace—but our children are being educated for the state, and I don't see how we can keep them true to the church."

Dear friends, let us appreciate our opportunities; let us redeem the time, for the days are evil; let us work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work. (This address was given in the new Memorial Hall of Bethel College on the day of dedication.)

THE LATEST WORD FROM CHINA

In Tamingfu, where our missionaries Browns and sister Kuyf are stationed, the Nazarenes have also a mission station, and are good neighbors of ours. Sister Fast has just received a letter from one of the Nazarene missionaries in America, who stated that their Mission Board had received a cable from Rev. Osborne, who is at Taming, Hopei, China, stating, "All well, needs provided, treated well."

We hope and pray that this includes also our workers there.

NEWS FROM TUBA CITY, ARIZONA

I wish to share with you of what God is doing for us in Tuba City. We have been asked by Presbyterian missionaries in Tuba City to start evangelistic meetings one week before Easter Sunday. This we gladly accepted. During our meetings, we have twenty-four young people who accepted the Lord as their Saviour. Some of these or five of them were baptized by the pastor Rev. Perry Bovee of the Presbyterian Church in Tuba City. We took communion together at the close of our meetings. There is also another encouraging news received this week. Two of our girls have written and tell us they have accepted the Lord, and one of them Alice Johnson who is now seventeen years of age is already baptized. Edith who will be fifteen years old in May, 1942, is also ready to be baptized soon. So we have been made happy for this Easter season with the blessings of God's salvation for our own children, and for those Indians in Tuba City who have accepted the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. We have also one young girl Miss Bertha Keyope, who has become a Christian while confined to a sick bed in Albuquerque, New Mexico. She was always a faithful Sunday School girl at our mission here ever since we took over this work. But she has to leave us on account of T. B. She has been in the government sanitorium for over three years now. She wrote us short time ago, telling us that she has accepted Jesus as her Saviour and was baptized into the Christian. Now she is praying to get well, that she may be able to come home and join us in this work for the Lord. I shall hope that you all pray for her full recovery from this present sickness if that is the will of the Lord. Pray for us also. We are your co-workers for Jesus.

WHO ARE THE WITNESS BEARERS?

Once upon a time Jesus said, "If these keep quiet, the stones will cry out." There is something supremely imperative about making Christ known.

Some time ago our neighbor, Jogeshwar, the Brahman teacher, about whom Rev. Moyer has told you from time to time in the past years, came to me and told me the following story:

One of the forest officials of this area had visited him a number of times and had told him that he yearned for religious satisfaction of mind. Jogeshwar, the Brahman teacher (who is not an open Christian) told the man that for years he had felt just that way: "until this Book came into my hands," and he took a Bible off his table and began to read to the official. After reading to him for about fifteen minutes out of the Gospels, about whom Jesus was and what He said, the official interrupted and replied, "Something within me tells me that this is what I need and want," so the forest official comes frequently to the non-Christian teacher, and they together find satisfaction in reading the words of the Lord of life. In Isaiah we read of "Cyrus my servant." One wonders how many in India, yes, all over the world, are servants of our Lord and we do not know it. Does the witness of a non-Christian Brahman teacher to a forest official count before the throne of grace?

Mr. Li An Ting, our Oldest Evangelist Living

Mr. Li An Ting, the oldest living member of our China Mission Worker is an evangelist, that is, an unordained preacher. He is well versed in the old Chinese classics which he delights to interpret in the light of Christian revelation. Before his conversion Brother Li was by trade a vendor of antiques, but became an opium addict. Through the "marvelous grace and power of Jesus Christ," as he often put it, he overcame this horrible opium bondage at the time of his conversion. He was baptized by Rev. P. J. Boehr about twenty-five years ago.

"Lao Li"—Venerable Li—as he was fondly called by the Chinese Christians, served as an evangelist for many years, first at Tung Ming and then at Hanchang, Nanlo, with the tent and other places in the Tamingfu district. Then he was pensioned by the Mission and asked to serve as gatekeeper at the Taming Mission compound. He, with his faithful colleague, remained at their posts in the trying days of 1937-38. The few months while the misionaries could not be there and the compound was filled with refugees, he was a help and a blessing to many of them. Especially since 1937 until last reports, time and time again, individuals testified that he led them to find new life in Christ.

The day after the city of Taming was taken by the invading army, Mr. Li came to see how the others had fared. Finding them all safe, also Miss Fast, his face shone with a radiant joy. With benevolence he looked at her, and with deep emotion said: "Now I know that God is my God and that He loves me and cares for me, not because you have told me, but now I have experienced it myself."

A WORD FROM WASHINGTON

Latest News from the State Department regarding the Philippines: Mr. Randall Gould has just had a telephone conversation with the State Department in Washington, and has learned that the State Department has furnished the Standard Oil Company a list of the names of approximately seventy employees of the Standard Oil Company in the Philippine Islands. This list came to the State Department through the Swiss Minister in Tokyo. It gave the place of residence and health condition of each. This information naturally raises a question as to whether the Japanese Government has at last consented for the Swiss authorities to represent the United States in the Philippine Islands, and brings promise of further news from the Philippines. However, the State Department is still slightly puzzled as to just how and why the information came to them through the Swiss. It is understood that they are trying to secure further information through the same source. However, in the meantime it was urged that no pressure be brought upon the State Department just now from other sources to obtain information, as the Department is doing everything possible and undoubtedly will make a public announcement in case a regular means of securing information from the Philippines is worked out. In addition to the above, information has also been secured regarding the welfare of 36 former employees in the office of the High Commissioner to the Philippines. The information stated that they were all well.

THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD

By John Milton Moore

This is the church of my dreams—
The church of the warm heart,
Of the open mind, of the adventurous spirit;
The church that cares,
That heals hurt lives,
That comforts old people,
That challenges youth—
A working church, a worshipping church,
A winsome church;
A church that interprets the truth
In the terms of its own times,
And challenges its own times
In terms of truth;
That inspires courage for this life
And hope for the life to come;
A church of all good men,
The Church of the Living God.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

A DAY OF BLESSING

It is Sunday morning. The morning sun gives promise of pleasant weather for the day, although one has a feeling that we will have to reckon with a hot day. It would, however, be much worse for our special program today if a rain-storm would break. Therefore, we are able to start the trip to Philadelphia with joy in our hearts.

No doubt, young people everywhere are the same, full of happy anticipation as was the case of all those traveling toward the Mennonite Church-Youth-Assembly. This is an event long hoped for by our Elder, Rev. Harder, for a period of intimate fellowship with all his young people. Sunday morning, February 15 8:00 a.m. saw many young people gather together for the assembly in many a horse and buggy outfit. Under the broad porch of Rev. Harder's home, tables have been prepared for the occasion, and we take our places in the form of a round table. Twenty-seven young people baptized Feb. 15, 1942 had been invited; eight found it impossible to be present; however, the nineteen present were glad to be a part of the first gathering of this type. A few ministers were also present.

The assembly was opened by singing one of our choral numbers. Rev. Harder outlined briefly the reason and purpose of the assembly. He pointed out that youth is greatly needed in the work of the church, and each one present felt a new responsibility and pledged his or her best efforts to help in the Lord's work.

The Program of the Day

Poems and songs were rendered, which had been carefully selected with the idea of directing our hearts to higher and nobler things. Nine-thirty in the morning refreshments were served; fine guavas from Rev. Harder's orchard were served.

"The Cross of Christ versus the Hooked-Cross (Swastika)" and "The Jewish Question" were two prepared articles that were read and discussed freely. Many points long to be remembered were impressed upon us. The session was so interesting that the noon recess came almost before we were ready. However (tables were set and a number of ladies had prepared a fine "Borschtsch" dinner, and, of course, everyone enjoyed the watermelons. We, the younger ones, enjoyed ourselves during the intermission.

The afternoon session opened at one-thirty. At this time Rev. Jacob Duerksen delivered an address "Church Discipline." After this the rules of our church were read. No doubt, everyone felt guilty of transgressions in the past and also the consciousness of a need to have such meetings where these things are explained and substantiated by scripture.

A group picture and a lunch of "Pluschki" and coffee bring the profitable day to a close, and as the sun is sinking the last of the guests leave for home, with the firm resolve "trusting in the Lord Jesus for help" we will seek to follow out the instruction of the day for His honor and glory.

Sincerely, Tina Friesen

NEWPORT MENNONITE CHURCH

Newport, Washington

The Easter season is gone and summer is near. The Sunday School gave a short Easter program after Sunday School; also the Christian Endeavor had an Easter program. Rev. P. A. Kliewer from Albany, Oregon, was with us from the 20th of April till the 29th. The services were well attended and much blessing was received. The book of Romans was discussed in the Bible study.

On Mother's Day the Junior Mission Circle gave a Mother's Day program, and Monday evening the young people of the church gave a Mother's Day banquet.

Several of our members have been or are in hospitals. Our oldest member, Sister John Bergen is in a Spokane hospital with a broken leg. She has been there for over a month. Brother Pete Hiebert is in the Veterans Hospital in Walla Walla with a rupture operation. Jean Wallace had an appendix operation three weeks ago. We wish them all God's blessing and a speedy recovery.

We are having a wet spring. The frost was quite late too. Crops are growing very well, and the Lord willing, all will be able to store for the winter.

The church is planning a two week vacation Bible school this year.

"All things work together for good to them that love God." Rom. 8:28. —Mrs. Henry Hiebert, Corr.

BERGFELDER MENNONITE CHURCH

Mountain Lake, Minnesota

We thank the Lord that we are still living in the day of grace and mercy and are glad to enjoy His salvation and freedom.

On Mother's Day we had an inspiring Christian Endeavor program together with the Bergfelder Church of Delft, Minnesota.

HISTORY OF THE BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH, FORTUNA, MISSOURI, 1867-1942

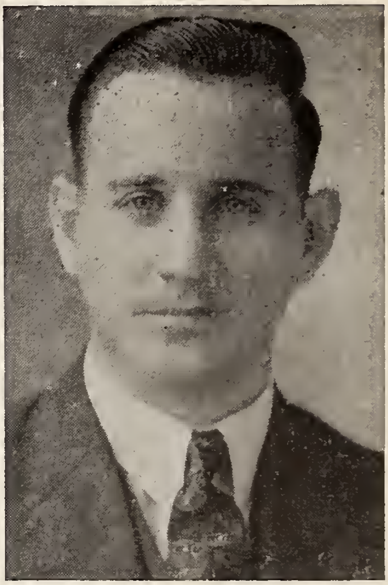
In April of the year 1866 the first five Mennonite families from Wayne county, Ohio, moved to Missouri and settled between Tipton and Versailles. In the fall of that same year two more families came, and in the spring of 1867 two more families came, bought land in the neighborhood where the first families lived and helped them to found the Mennonite colony known as Bethel.

All of these newcomers were of Swiss stock whose ancestors had helped to found the big settlement of their nationality in Wayne county, Ohio fifty years before. All were members of the Mennonite church of the above-named place.

It was a great day for these sturdy pioneers when in the spring of 1867 they were visited by two ministers of their faith, from Summerfield, Illinois. They were Rev. John Schmidt and Rev. John Fletcher. Seeing that these families had already started and maintained religious service among themselves as best they could in their homes, Rev. John Schmidt offered to administer communion to as many as were ready to participate and then organize them into a Christian church. This offer was gladly accepted by the group. In the service which was held on Sunday, April 21, 1867, nineteen persons took communion, and Bethel Church was then organized.

Barely had the new church been started when there was a great influx of members of the faith who came from various communities of Mennonite churches from other states. In two years their total number rose to thirty-five families. These all worshiped at Bethel, which seems to have been a sort of emigrant church. Of course, the members of the church differed in faith and practice. Minor differences were not stressed by the ministers for the sake of harmony, but as time went on these differences became more apparent and the peace of the church was threatened. Efforts were made on the part of the ministers to restore order and harmony, but in this they failed. It was then agreed that it would be to the best interest of the cause that there should be a division of the church. When in 1871 the division came, fifty-one members remained with Bethel and the remainder withdrew to organize Mt. Zion Church. The two churches have since been good neighbors and cooperate whenever they stand on common ground. According to the terms of agreement, Bethel Church was to pay the debt incurred in building the first church, which stood not far to the west of our present church.

The names of the ministers of the first church were Rev. Daniel Brundage and Rev. John Schneider, who were members of the church. Several other ministers from different states served the church on special occasions.



Rev. H. L. Metzker, Present Pastor

Harvey Leonard Metzker, son of Harvey L. and Susaan Metzker, was born October 27, 1917, at Roaring Spring, Pennsylvania. In 1937 he graduated from Roaring Spring High School and in 1941 from Bluffton College, where he had taken an active part in the religious activities of the campus. He became pastor of the Bethel Mennonite Church in June, 1941.

Before this time, but especially now, there was a need for spiritual leadership in our church. Rev. Peter S. Lehman of Elkton, Missouri, Rev. Christian Krehbiel from Summerfield, Illinois, and other church leaders came at various times to counsel and to serve the church. Rev. John Moser of Bluffton, Ohio, ordained P. P. Lehman, a son of the church to preach. Brother Lehman felt the need of a better training for the work to which he had been called and entered the Mennonite Seminary at Wadsworth, Ohio.

In the year 1878 Bethel Church gave a call to Rev. M. S. Moyer of Wadsworth, Ohio to assist Rev. Lehman in the work. The call was accepted and in the following year both men were ordained into the ministry. Now our church had two duly ordained ministers and they were in a position now to take care of all the work that comes up in the life of a church. Rev. Moyer became the teacher of the church school and taught the same during the summer months for many years. This work was signally blessed.

The Sunday School was organized in the same year the church organized. It was a new venture, but it had many warm supporters, and has long since come into its own. Prayer meeting and Christian Endeavor were started twenty years later than the church. With the exception of the period from 1903-1905 the Christian Endeavor has always carried on.

In the early seventies mission work was hardly known yet, but the spirit of good will and helpfulness functioned nevertheless. Storm victims of the community were given substantial sums, helpless families were taken in and sheltered, and the hungry were fed.

As early as 1878 a church resolution calls for a quarterly mission collection.

In March of 1901 Rev. Moyer and family moved to Oklahoma, and in 1903 Rev. P. P. Lehman retired from the ministry. In 1904 Rev. D. D. King from Ohio accepted a call from the church to preach and teach the church school.

From 1908-1909 the new church was built at a cost of $7000.00 and was paid for by 1913. In 1913 Rev. King and family moved to Washington and in 1915 returned from that state to continue as pastor of our church. During his absence Rev. J. M. Regier ably served the church.

The Meeting House—Dedicated August 27, 1909

On April 22, 1917 it was fifty years since our church was organized and carried on. Seven of the charter members were then still living and were duly honored. Rev. J. B. Baer and Rev. J. W. Kliewer were the anniversary speakers. At that time our church made a favorable showing giving credit to all its supporters and laborers, but especially to Rev. King who was then the pastor in charge.

In the spring of 1919 Rev. King resigned as pastor of the church and moved to Ohio. At that time the trustees of the church bought ten acres of his forty-acre farm just north of the church. The land was well improved with a new house, a barn and the necessary outbuildings, and the land was well fruited. $3700 was paid for the property which was to be the parsonage of the church.

In the spring of 1919 Rev. P. P. Hilty accepted a call from the church to become its pastor and in August of that year he and his family moved into the parsonage of the church. He took up this new work with the hope and prayer that the Lord might bless his humble efforts.

In 1926 he and his family moved on a farm in the community, but the family retained its membership in the church. His period of service was from 1919-1926.

From 1927-1942 is a period of time when our church was served by four young pastors. They were all consecrated and good men. Their service reflected their talents, their experiences, and their training, as is always the case.

From 1927-1932 Rev. J. D. Warkentin was the pastor of our church, having been a former teacher both in public as well as in church school, he gave us a teaching ministry. During his time the choir was organized and much was done to definitely lead and direct the members in the Christian life.

The Parsonage

From 1932-1936 Rev. C. H. Dirks was the pastor of our church. He did much to promote young people's work in the church and lead them into new fields of endeavor.

From 1936-1942 Rev. Jacob Unruh was the pastor of our church. He emphasized the definite religious experience. Courses in Bible study were offered.

Since June 1941 Rev. Leonard Metzker has been our pastor. He was ordained in our church March 1, 1942, Rev. William Penner and Rev. Harvey Nunmaker officiating. We are glad to have Rev. Metzker with us to minister to our many needs.

During the last twenty-five years of the life of our church, revival services and Bible lectures were held which were largely attended. Decisions for Christ were made, and the spiritual life of the church membership was quickened. The Lord has used these services for the good among us.

We must here record the depression which started in 1929 and the severe drouths of 1934 and 1936. We praise the Lord for His sustaining grace during those trying years.

We gladly acknowledge the generous gift of $3500, which in 1936 Sister Salome Loganbill willed to the church to be used as follows. $2000 to be given for Foreign Missions. This money was sent to J. E. Regier, the Foreign Mission Treasurer, and $1500 was to be used as a revolving fund in the church.

One member of our church has answered the foreign missionary call. In the year 1925 Dr. Ella Garber Bauman with her husband Dr. Harvey Bauman entered the Medical Missionary Service at Champa, India.

Other religious workers who have gone out from our church are Rev. Harley King, minister of the Mennonite Church, Rev. Joe Aeschbacher, minister of the Congregational Church, Rev. Hiram Hilty, minister of the Friends Church.

The church records, as far as available, reveal the following transactions and contributions:

Persons baptized and received by letter	353
Couples married	94
Funerals conducted	77
Paid out for congregational purposes	$52,500
Paid out for Foreign and Home Missions	12,630
Paid out for Relief	2,310
Paid out for Education	3,480

Bless the Lord, O my soul and forget not all His benefits. We are certainly glad for the examples and labors of those who have gone before, for the messages of salvation that have been proclaimed from the pulpit and the work which we have through His grace been permitted to do, which the Lord has used for good.

CORRESPONDENCE

Sunday evening, May 17, Rev. August Ewert, returned missionary from China, showed his collection of pictures of the mission work in China.

On may 19 the church was "Spring-housecleaned." Many of the members came to help, and the work was quickly finished. The thought then rises in our minds that our lives need a thorough cleaning occasionally from sins and faults that have crept in unawares like dust and grime and spiders.

Nine young Christians, who had finished instruction in the catechism classes, were baptized and received into the church on Pentecost. Rev. August Ewert, who is now our pastor, performed the baptismal ceremony. He reminded us again of the promises we all had made on a similar occasion. We have all been heartily invited to partake of the Lord's Supper on the 14th of June.

The male chorus is planning to attend the Northern District Conference in Freeman, South Dakota on the 7th of June. —Mrs. Peter H. Heppner, Correspondent

FORGIVENESS

By Helen Hiebert Mueller

The nucleus of the religion of Jesus is forgiveness. These words, expressed recently by a friend, brought to me in a new way just what our religion ought really to consist in. We must forgive seventy times seven, yes. But it is imperative that we let the love of God work within our hearts to develop an impregnable power of forgiveness—a forgiveness so great that we are not even capable of taking offense! Love and tolerance toward our fellow men are integral parts of this kind of forgiveness. We must strive to love as Jesus loved. We must be tolerant as He was: not justifying the sins of people, but understanding them and trying to help them to overcome their sins.

For this forgiveness, this love, this tolerance we pray at such a time as this. May we not become "smug" or self-righteous because we believe we have found and are following the right way. The light to walk the narrow path comes from God. Our belief, our faith, is something we have come by through the grace of God. It is not for us to be proud; it is for us humbly to let our light shine and to do deeds of love that we may give glory to our Heavenly Father.

How We Got "America"

By George Stoneback

Our National Hymn has "Made in Germany" stamped on the bottom! We hear the British anthem with the same tune, and assume that we got the tune from our good ally, but that seems not to be the case. This tune was long used in Germany with these words: "Heil Dir Im Siegel Kranz," in Switzerland with the words "Rufst Du Mein Vaterland," by Von Weber in his "Jubel Overture," and by Beethoven in his C Major Piano Variations. They tell me that it was also used in Sweden and Russia (perhaps that will redeem it). William C. Woodbrodge of Boston brought a collection of German tunes to the United States in 1832. He gave them to Lowell Mason, who could not read German, so Mason gave the books to Samuel Frances Smith, a seminary student. One day Smith found this tune in connection with a German patriotic hymn and decided to write an American patriotic hymn to fit the tune. "My Country 'Tis of Thee" was the result. Smith gave the hymn to Mason, who used it first at the Independence Day celebration that year (1832). That is how we got "America."

LOVE IN COURTSHIP

By John R. Mumau

Pledge yourself to be Discreet

Love needs discression to be pure. The sex instinct is charged with strong impulses. One finds common intellectual interests in others and these may be engaged in freely. In the same way lovers find a spiritual affinity and this may be indulged in with great profit. There are few possibilities of excess in intellectual affinity. A spiritual unity constitutes the safest avenue of intercourse. It is physicial attraction that has the most dangers. Physical contacts often produce a short curcuit for the intellectual and spiritual delights. Adopt the policy of "hands off." Premature kisses often turn to sour grapes. You had better save them for the one who is to be your life companion. There is no room in Christian courtship for petting in cars and spooning. There is no time for darkened rooms or dimmed lights among Christians. There is no occasion for holding of hands. You had better wait until you know whom you shall have for a life companion for such intimacies. How then can you express love? I wonder if those who insist on making bodily contacts have actually explored the mysteries of love. There are expressions of love in physical contacts, but they are reserved for the engaged, and even to them a limited few. You can express your love to another in far better ways than these. Take an active interest in the life affairs of another. Regard the purity of another. Engage in the various forms of Christian fellowship. Many young couples have found great delight in sitting together to read the Scriptures and in prayer. Such experiences constitute the most precious memories of Christian courtship.

Seek Divine Guidance

Love needs guidance to be crowned with divine approval. It is not necessary for love to be blind. This is a matter that is of deep concern to our Father in heaven. A certain father who was ininterested in his son once spoke to me about his boy who was giving evidence of lack of judgment in his social life. He related some of his own personal experience. He said, "You don't know, but you'll find out that there will be some things after you're married, in which you will disagree with your wife. There is one thing that remains a great source of satisfaction to me when I have a disagreement with my wife. I can always come back to this: 'She is of the Lord.' I know she is my wife of the Lord's leading, and that paves the way for happiness and love and joy."

That sense of satisfaction can come to every Christian youth. God's greatest good is always revealed in His will. His will for your life is where you will be the happiest.

It may be that God has some form of service for you that will necessitate a single life. If that is His will, you will be happiest there.

I come back once more to the sentiment of Browning, "Love is best." It is best only, however, when it is pure and noble, and guided and protected by the unseen hand of God.

THE SPIRIT-FILLED LIFE

"O the Spirit-filled life; is it thine, is it thine?
Is thy soul wholly filled with the Spirit Divine?
O thou child of the King, has He fallen on thee?
Does He reign in thy soul, so that all men may see
The dear Saviours blest image reflected in thee?
"Has He swept through thy soul like the waves of the sea?
Does the Spirit of God daily rest upon thee?
Does He sweeten thy life, does He keep thee from care?
Does He guide thee and bless thee in answer to prayer?
Is it joy to be led of the Lord anywhere?
"Is He near thee each hour, does He stand by thy side?
Does He gird thee with strength, has He come to abide?
Does He give thee to know that all things may be done
Through the grace and the power of the crucified
One?
Does He witness to thee of the glorified Son?
"Has He purged thee of dross with the fire from above?
Is He first in thy thoughts, has He all of thy love?
Is His service thy choice, and is sacrifice sweet?
Is the doing His will both thy drink and thy meat?
Dost thou run at His bidding with glad eager feet?
"Has He freed thee from self and from all of thy greed?
Dost thou hasten to succor thy brother in need?
As a soldier of Christ dost thou hardness endure?
Is thy hope in the Lord everlasting and sure?
"O the Spirit-filled life may be thine, may be thine,
In thy soul evermore the Shekinah may shine;
It is thine to live with the tempests all stilled,
It is thine with the blessed Holy Ghost to be filled;
It is thine, even thine, for thy Lord has so willed."

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for June 21, 1942

No. 1 of Series of Three Studies on the Bible

OUR BIBLE—ITS WRITERS

II Peter 1:19-21

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Thy Word Is Like a Garden, Lord," No. 290; "Hushed Was the Evening Hymn," No. 416. 2. Reading of scripture passage, prayer, and leader's remarks. 3. Roll call, answered with favorite Bible verses. 4. Offering for C. E. project.

II. Leader's Introduction:

The original manuscripts of the Bible were written over a period of more than 1000 years. They reflect the conditions of the time and the countries in which they were written. They tell us something of the history and of current ideas of the people that we read about in the various books. Their purpose, however, is not to bring us the history of current ideas, but to bring us a revelation of God. They aim to bring God to man, and man to God.

The writers were men of God, men through whom God spoke. They were desirous of doing God's will, and listened to His voice. When they wrote they were unaware of the fact that their writings would be gathered together in the book which we call the Bible. The Bible is a library of books, really two: the Old Testament and the New. Genesis is a book; Ruth is a book; Isaiah is a book; John is a book. The material is most varied—it contains beautiful poems, excellent literary passages, historical happenings, fine biography—but its outstanding characteristic is that it is full of God and His dealings with man.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. The books that deal with origins—First six Books of the Bible. 2. The books that deal with heroes: Judges, Ruth, and I Samuel. 3. The historical books of the Old Testament. 4. The prophets and their writers. 5. The hymn book. 6. The gospels and their writers. 7. The writer of the Pauline Epistles. 8. The writer of the Hebrews.

IV. For Discussion:

1. Why is it valuable to have the gospels written by four different people? 2. What writers of the Old Testament had a deep understanding of the nature of God? Why do you think so? 3. What do we learn of Paul through his letters?

V. Facts for Study:

The writers lived far apart in regard to time: Isaiah, Amos, Hosea, Micah lived in the eighth century before Christ, and so wrote centuries earlier than the gospel writers. Other parts of the Bible were writen even much earlier.

They were widely different in the temperament and personalities: impetuous Peter; untiring Paul; Amos, the herdsman; Isaiah, the statesman; Job, the philosopher; David, the poet.

Sometimes they dealt with a personal problem as the letter to Philemon; sometimes they were directed to one church as most of Paul's letters; they were written to an individual as Luke and Acts, or to those scattered, as I Peter. Sometimes many writers are represented in one book, as in the book of Psalms.

VI. Illustration:

Were All the Bible Writers of this Kind

Recently a speaker recalled a story of Spurgeon's, concerning a class of boys who were having a Scripture lesson on Daniel. One of the boys was asked to read some verses aloud, and presently he came to verse three in chapter six, which reads " . . . because an excellent spirit was in him," but by mistake the boy rendered it " . . . because an excellent spine was in him." It was undoubtedly bad reading, but it was excellent theology, for Daniel was a man of real "backbone"—strong, courageous.

VII. Food for Thought:

The writers of the Bible fall into the background, their message will always be in the foreground.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

Program for June 21, 1942

HOW TO USE THE BIBLE

1. Get a good, well bound, fair print Bible of your own.
2. Get a few aids, such as a concordance, a Bible dictionary, a Bible text encyclopedia, topical text book.
3. Have a definite time set aside each day for Bible study.
4. Begin each time of study with prayer for God's guidance as you read.
5. Always have pencil and paper on hand to make notes of things which may impress you or questions you might want to ask your pastor or Sunday School teacher.
6. Have a definite system of study. It is not necessary to study the books of the Bible in their printed order but you might want to follow some definite line of thought.
7. Look up marginal references.
8. Continue your study daily and use holidays for special opportunities for further study.
9. Get the habit of carrying your Bible or at least the New Testament in your pocket or purse.
10. Study for your own benefit not only those references which are connected with the Sunday school lesson.
11. Get the interpretation of passages first then the applications.
12. Strive to get the Bible meaning of words and expressions.
13. Get into the habit of marking passages which especially impress you.
14. If you have the opportunity study Bible geography under some competent teacher.
15. Mark initials or dates opposite passages used in sermons or addresses and they will help you recall the content of same.

JESUS, THE WORKER

John 4:34:9:4

Two friends were talking. One told the other of a "good man" who died and left $30,000. "What a pity," said the other, "that he left it behind when he might have sent it on ahead. He is not likely now to even hear of it again!"

The following are a few verses from one of Edgar Guest's poems:

"Out of my life I shall never take Things of silver and gold I make.

All that I cherish and hoard away
After I leave, on the earth must stay.

And I wonder often what I shall own
In that other life, when I pass alone.

What shall they find, and what shall they see
In the soul that answers the call for me.

Shall the Great Judge learn when my task is through
That thy spirit had gathered some riches too."

This topic teaches the diligence of Jesus, and at the same time he treated the sick, raised the dead, cast out demons, and fed the hungry.

The Question Bee

(1) What is our memory verse? (2) Why could Jesus sleep during the tempest? (3) How did Jesus work differently than other people?

The Prayer List

(a) Find joy and pleasure in work. (b) Never be content to do the least, we are able to do. (c) Believe that work is a blessing.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE TASK COMMITTED TO THE DISCIPLES

TOPIC: Carrying on Christ's Work

Matt. 28:16-20, Mk. 16:14-20, Luke 24:49-53

Jesus Appears to the Disciples

Jesus had told his disciples to go into Galilee (Matt. 26:32 also 28:7). Probably a week after the resurrection they left Jerusalem. (vs. 16). Evidently Christ had appointed a place of meeting, possibly the Mount of Beatitudes. It is quite probable that the "over five hundred brethren" (I Cor. 15:6) were present here and saw and heard Christ. Many, perhaps the most of those present, genuinely worshipped Him as their divine Lord. There were some who still doubted His Diety and therefore did not worship Him.

The appearance in Mark 16:14 is the same which we had in last week's lesson. Jesus had his last meeting with his own on the Mount of Olives, near Bethany, (Luke 24:50, 51) and there while speaking to them and blessing them, He was carried into heaven.

Christ's Commission to His Own

The chief emphasis in our lesson lies in the commission which Jesus gave to his disciples. He declared that "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Every form of authority, command of all means needed for the advancement of the kingdom of God, are given to Him. This power this authority is His by right, conferred upon Him by the Father (Rev. 2:27). Nothing less than the divine government of the whole universe and of the kingdom of heaven has been given to the risen Lord. With this authority Christ now commissions his disciples to carry on his work after He is gone. He works here on earth in and through his followers. The good news of salvation in and through our victorious, risen and ascended Christ would avail but little unless it were made known to men. Therefore his disciples are to go in his power and tell others (vss. 19, 20, 15). Jesus had a great program for the future by which men could learn and know salvation. The charge of our Lord has been committed to us. The word "go" expresses continued activity throughout all times. The task given is a very large one. Beginning with the apostles in Jerusalem, they and Christ's followers are to go forth to all nations, into all the world, to preach, teach, make disciples and baptize the believers.

There are three steps in this program of the Church: 1. make disciples; 2. baptize them in the name of the Triune God; 3. teach, instruct them in the way of life. Christ tells his followers to go—keep going—and do this, and He pledges his unlimited power and help to enable them to do it(Vs. 20). The whole program of Christian work is literally left in our hands, in the hands of the Church. It is age-long in its application. Tell of the life and work of Christ. Present Him to people so they can learn to know Him. Bring to Christ, then build up in Christ. All men everywhere need the salvation from sin which the Christian religion alone proclaims. Christianity is THE RELIGION which sets forth standards proclaimed nowhere else. If effects transformations in human lives which no other faith can duplicate. Vital Christianity is deeply imbued with the missionary spirit. Christ's commisson is not limted to foreign missionary work. The large majority of the people in our own United States have no church relationship. The majority of the children receive no religious instruction. Many are but little above heathens in religious training.

Our Response

Christ's program can be effective in proportion as we respond in carrying it out. This has been and is progressing still. The response among the early Christians was whole-hearted (vs. 20). The secret of their success lay in "the Lord working with them." The living Christ was with them in the person of the Holy Spirit. They tarried in Jerusalem until "endued with power from on high" (vs. 9). The days spent in prayer were days of preparation. When we do our Christian work in the name of Christ, He will be working with us and noticable and good results will follow. Christ expects us to carry on the work which He began.

How much interest do we take in the non-Christians in our neighborhood?

In what sense is Christ with us always?

How may the lay-people in the Church preach the gospel to others?

IN HIS STEPS

By Max I. Reich

Midst change and fret and constant strife,
How calm and restful is my life—
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.
Give me the path the Master trod,
In cloudless fellowship with God;
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.

There shall I learn to trust and love,
The perfect will of God to prove;
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.
What though earth's briars wound my feet?
I find each bitter cup made sweet,
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.

Then shall I be resigned and meek,
No more earth's painted toys to seek;
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.
There shall I bear the daily cross,
Nor shrink from the reproach and loss;
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.

May I thus find from day to day,
What means "the straight and narrow way,"
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.
It is the path that leads us home;
Sweet foretastes there of joys to come;
  Walking in the footsteps of my Lord.

RELIEF

THE WOODLANDS

A Symbol of Love and Service to Aged War-Sufferers.

Eight months ago The Woodlands meant nothing to me. Today, . . . but let me not detain you by telling what it means to me. It is you that I am interested in now. So why not come along and visit The Woodlands to see for yourself what it is possible for the place to mean. Remember, all you need bring is an average-sized packet of imagination. Tea will be provided.

Eight months ago today I landed in England. How well I remember that first day in this country. I almost forgot that a foreigner's first duty here is to obtain an identification card, ration book, and gas mask; my thoughts were so preoccupied with other things. I wanted to discover the country's greatest need as it impressed itself on the mind of a newly arrived witness who could look upon the scene with an eye unprejudiced by personal participation in the events which had led up to it, with an eye not yet accustomed to the darkness by long experience of it. When, therefore, the clothing need presented itself, I remembered that Mennonite representatives had distributed American and Canadian clothing in this country almost since the outbreak of hostilities, and when I came up against the problem of food I was reminded of the fact that I had come with the intentions of working with our Mennonite mobile canteen which had already for some months catered for bombed-out civilians in times of crisis when normal supplies were cut off, both in the city of Birmingham and in Liverpool. Was the need among civilians then only for clothing and food?

I looked for the answer and it soon came with unmistakable clearness. No, not food and clothing alone, but evacuation too. It was to meet this need that The Woodlands came into being.

When you find that The Woodlands is used exclusively for old and semi-infirm folk you may want to ask the oft-repeated question, "but why not for children?" Most of us believe that the old people have had their day and that the children of today are the citizens of tomorrow. This sort of reasoning accounts for the fact that in England, as everywhere else, children get preference to old folks when it is a matter of helping one or the other. That in itself is one reason why we help old people at The Woodlands. A second reason is that it gives us in our particular relief work here a fine balance, offsetting the work in our residential nursery home near Seven Oaks, where every evacuee is under five years of age. Thirdly, let us remember that state assistance by way of pensions and homes for the aged is still very inadequate. Their plight has been increased by war conditions which have taken sons and daughters from home, leaving old parents and grandparents helpless and alone, often a bundle of nerves unable to do the simplest task. Lastly, we have chosen to use The Woodlands as a home for old folks because we cherish the hope that by doing so we are providing a real object lesson of what can and ought to be done for old people. We hope that the appropriate authorities will take note and that this project will pave the way for many more like it. Certainly there is need for them, both now and after the war. It is interesting to note that certain authorities are indeed watching our experiment closely, wondering only whether it will function smoothly over a long period of time. So far it has worked out extremely well, and we feel confident that it will continue to do so.

The Woodlands, once a beautiful country mansion and then a girl's school, lies eighteen miles north-west of Birmingham, directly in line with B'ham and Liverpool. The buildings—a twentyone-roomed house, stables, shed, garage, gardener's house and three green-houses—stand in nine acres of fertile and wooded land. While the ornamental garden is soothing medicine for distressed and war-weary minds, the kitchen-garden is an indispensable and economical green-grocer, supplying not only every vegetable need but some fruit as well. Mr. Clark, the old gardener, who in twenty-two years of service has become an integral part of the place, says that in all the days of The Woodlands glory both as a mansion and as a girl's school, the premises and buildings have never been put to better use. He has shown his readiness to make the existing project a success by taking on the extra work of caring for a flock of poultry, and also by throwing all flowers out of the green-houses and planting tomatoes instead.

We were most fortunate in finding a place as suitable as this one, and even more fortunate in finding the willing cooperation of the friends who supply all the staff. We had hoped that at least one member of the staff would be a Mennonite, but it has up to the present time been impossible for our Canadian nurses to obtain passage to England. Buying furniture and other equipment for the home was my first job soon after arrival here; in those days I still reckoned in dollars and cents paid in pounds sterling. The month of August saw a complete transformation of The Woodlands. Local friends lent a willing hand; a student party of ten came from Manchester University to help in the house and garden. Somehow we had obtained the free services of a College lecturer and his student-friend from Ceylon. It was a great occasion when at last everything was in shape and I was able to evacuate the first of our bombees from Birmingham and Coventry. Fortunately our utility van had been completed in time and stood us in good stead from then on.

As we drive up the shaded lane, approaching the buildings from the south, the wardens, a friendly Christian couple, meet us at the door and show us into the spacious main hall where richly pannelled walls and hardwood floors reveal the fact that the Home is well built. The ceiling is a mass of M's coiling and winding about each other like mad curls on a young girl's head. There is neither taste nor beauty in them, but there they are. Incidentally, you will find many more such M's on the premises both inside and out. The largest and by far the most pretentious one is hewn into brick directly over the main entrance door on the outside where it forms the centerpiece of a coat-of-arms. Although this "M" was originally designed and intended to mean "Manders," commemorating the first owner and landlord of the place, there is nothing to prevent us from interpreting it as "Mennonite" today.

While we have been standing with heads back, gazing at the ceiling and smiling at the curious coincidence, the cook, a strapping young man of six foot three respectfully waits to announce a cup of tea. Although he conscientiously objects to rendering service that will aid the war, he seems to have no scruples about making tea at all hours of the day and night. True to English tradition he must extend the offer of that national drink to us all. He really is a good lad, and, what's more, an excellent cook.

The first door to the right leads into a spacious sitting room, while the second one leads to the "office." To the left we enter the dining room where three long tables now stand in place of the green billiard tables that once were part of the old mansion. Directly opposite the dining room is the largest downstairs room, now transformed into a ward for those members of the "family" who are unable to climb stairs. The novel attraction on the first and second floors are the gay quilts which cover every bed. Occupants and visitors have often said that if these intriguing quilts and comforters are at all a reflection of the personality of the Mennonite women who have made them, they should like nothing better than to meet these charming people. Often I have seen some Englishwoman carefully taking down details and diagrams of a quilt; many people have suggested that we make a public display of them, and always I have the joy and satisfaction of seeing the rigid conservatism and typical English reservedness break down in front of a Mennonite-made patchwork quilt.

There being some thirty evacuees in the home at present—and this number will be increased as soon as winter with its colds and epidemics is past—it is impossible to acquaint you with all of them, but here are some of the typical ones:

Mrs. A of Boham is a diabetic war-widow from the last war, now seventy-one years of age. She has been in poor health for some time but had to leave her hospital in order to make room for a more deserving case. Unable to care for herself and very much upset by the air raids, she moved from her home in the target area to relatives. She was very anxious to get right outside of the city so we arranged for her accommodation. She often speaks of the day when I took her to The Woodlands as "the day life began again." Mrs. B, one of our more recent arrivals, comes from Coventry where she stayed with her married daughter. Daily when the daughter was out at work the old mother was left alone in a badly damaged house where all glass in the windows was replaced by transparent fabric. At eighty-two years of age and suffering from chest trouble, not to mention mental anxiety and loneliness, this existence was no fun. Now she is very happy with us and her health is improving. Sixty year old Mrs. D. is one of the many Londoners who evacuated from that city to Woverhampton more than a year ago. It is difficult to imagine how conditions in a "reception" area, such as W., must have been when people by the hundreds and thousands arrived there from "danger" and "target" areas such as London, B'ham, L'pool, Coventry, etc. Mrs. D. like the rest of the evacuees, had to be taken in by someone in her new location. She remained temporarily at the hospital, but eventually had to leave it. With no friends or relatives to whom she might turn, and being nearly blind, she was quite unable to find accommodation in the already overcrowded area. Since being with us she has on several occasions asked me to convey greetings and humble thanks to "the people who are doing so much for me."

The same mad wave that carried Mrs. D from London swept with it a blind couple who had lost all their property. Mr. and Mrs. H found themselves separated and sent to billets "somewhere" in the country. Eventually the Blind Association rediscovered them, but, able to help them only by way of pension they asked us to give them a home. The cheerfulness of this couple has been a real boon to the home. Wherever they go they are seen holding each other's hands, the husband leading by half a step. Both enjoy being talked to or having a book read to them, but out of consideration for others will never ask for such favours. During my visit with them only yesterday Mrs. H assured me that neither she nor her husband had been as happy as they are now for many years, which Mr. H supplimented by saying that "although we can't see where we are going, we know we shall get there. Everyone is so kind to us." Our other couple is Mr. and Mrs. T aged sixty-one and seventy-one. They came from B'ham last autum and have been very happy members of our "family" ever since. They had suffered much during the raids, never going to bed until one or two o'clock for months. Mr. T cheerfully but rheumatically hobbles about on a stick, enjoying nothing better than helping with some such task as doing dishes or sweeping floors, though in reality he is more of a hindrance than a help. Most of his time, however, he devotes to Mrs. T. who is completely blind. Our third and last couple are the N's who have brought their baby daughter aged sixty-five with them. Mr. N, bravely defying his ninety years, devotes all his time and energy to the care of his wife, a helpless cripple of eighty-eight. Having been bombed out of their home during the Coventry blitz, they are most grateful for this "haven of rest and peace" as they call The Woodlands. After many years of faithful service in the Methodist church they show a great deal of appreciation now that they are themselves being waited upon. They are able to understand and appreciate the motives and spirit of our work, and wish to send to all our readers and contributors hearty greetings and good wishes. But look who comes here! It is our "live-wire," our ninety-two year old Auntie without whom the home would not be what it is. Miss S is only small and thin, which, as she insists, is the result of a life-long practice of preferring quality to quantity. Recently a special visitors' day for anyone interested in The Woodlands witnessed the continual drone of coming and going feet, which was noisily punctuated by a slamming doors and loud conversations. Conducting a small party of visitors through the Home I suddenly felt myself being pulled by the sleeve, when, looking over my shoulder, I beheld Auntie, with finger on her lips and eyes turning all directions, beckoning me most mysteriously. "Hallo!" I exclaimed, "Why aren't you. . . " "She_____ . ." came the warning note, "nurse put me to bed because she thought the excitement would be too much for me." In a louder voice she continued: "But I'm not an invalid, I'm not yet old! I want to be up and enjoying myself like the rest of you!" With these words she hobbled away because nurse was coming. That is typical of Auntie. How long she will yet be with us no one knows. Three evacuees who came to stay at The Woodlands last autumn have passed away. When I realize how a few months at our Home had made them calm and quiet, had enabled them to find themselves again; and if nothing more than this peace and calm is taken into account, I feel that our efforts have already been amply repaid.

Of all investments, those in relief and missionary work must wait longest for gratifying results, and so we feel doubly grateful for these early encouragements. Unlike our nimble Auntie we have Mrs. W aged only seventy-six and always happiest when she can "stay put." When I evacuated her she was in a very bad condition. Her nerves, unable to withstand the prolonged raids which finally brought down her house over her head, broke down completely after this accident. She was very anxious to get out of the city but didn't know where to go. Hardly able to believe that I was really taking her to a quiet and peaceful place, she sighed in a tearful voice as we motored past a graveyard saying, "I wish I could go there and have a long, long sleep." A few months have elapsed since that day which she now recalls with amazement and a smile, so complete has her transformation been. Today she is a new person who herself contributes appreciably to making The Woodlands the quiet and pleasant place it is. The few typical cases considered in such brevity have, I trust, given a cross-section of the type of evacuee and kind of work found at The Woodlands. Most evacuees are without private income. They all receive, however, an equal billeting, allowance of five shillings from the government, and this, together with a pension, enables most of them to contribute from ten to twenty shillings towards their keep. Of this about nine shillings is spent for food. All other expenses such as light, gas, water, repair, etc., as well as the initial furnishing of the home, are met by our funds.

Whatever other work we are doing in England today and however important feeding and clothing schemes are, not underrating the value of work among children, this effort to help the helpless stands out as an experiment of applied Christianity in a cold and hard world. We cannot measure its success or failure by common standards because our criterion is above such; it is a way of life, the lofty ideal of Christ's perfect love through service. What we can and must do, however, is to "join the great company of those who make the barren places of life fruitful with kindness." Like the blind but dauntless Helen Keller we must "carry a vision of heaven in our hearts" until our home and the entire world correspond to that vision. Let us not forget that the great enduring realities are LOVE and SERVICE.

BECAUSE WE ARE DIFFERENT

According to the fable, the mountain said to the squirrel, "You cannot bear great forests on your back." The squirrel retorted, "Neither can you crack a nut!" Gifts have their advantages. But that is no reason why one person should call another hard names.

Every human being is different from every other human being. Each has some peculiar gift which makes him different from every other. What a queer world this would be if all were exactly alike!

Yet how uncharitable we are, how lacking in courtesy and respect, in our attitude toward the peculiarities of others! In a world where all are differently endowed we need more and more to live in the atmosphere of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.—Forward

The 58th Annual Kansas Mennonite State Sunday School Convention, which was held in Buhler, Kansas, First Mennonite Church or high school auditorium, took place June 7, one session began at 2:30 P. M. and the other at 8:00 P. M. Among the speakers were Dr. S. J. England, Dean of the Bible College of Phillips University, Enid, Oklahoma, Dr. Frank Richard, Chaplin of Kansas State Reformatory, Hutchinson, Kansas, and Dr. C. E. Krehbiel, President of the General Conference of Mennonites of North America.

A drive to raise $20,000 for necessary improvements and repairs on the buildings and grounds of Bluffton College was authorized by the Board of Trustees of the college.

The Gospel teams of Bluffton College held their last meeting of the year Thursday evening, May 14. During the coming year the Men's Gospel team is offering a scholarship of fifty dollars to be given to a worthy student planning for definite Christian service.

Fifth Draft Registration. President Roosevelt set June 30 as registration day for young men between 18 and 20 years of age.

"Miss Sarah Buller, Newton, Kansas, missionary to Africa, has been visiting with Alma Stauffer during the past two weeks and has brought us some interesting messages in the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and at the Women's Missionary Society. The Lord willing she plans to return to Africa this coming Fall," states the Pratum, Oregon Emmanuel Mennonite church bulletin.

The Rev. P. A. Penner, the veteran missionary to India, will be with the Pratum Emmanuel Church on July 22 and 23 and will show pictures of the work in India and of the Leper Mission at Champa, C. P. India.

The Pacific District Conference will meet at Colfax, Washington, June 18 to 21.

A total of 331 pupils enrolled in the Summer Bible School which opened at the Berne school building the morning of May 25, according to "The Berne Witness." The total is composed of 171 girls and 160 boys. This is a decrease of 38 over the opening day enrollment last year when 369 reported the first day.

Rev. and Mrs. R. Weinbrenner and young son, John, left May 25 to spend a vacation with relatives and friends in Minnesota. They plan to return about June 5.

—The bulletin of the East Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa., relates the following of the recent session of the Eastern District Conference: "All the churches were represented except Richfield. The budget for 1942-43 is the same as last year. East Swamp was one of the number that paid the budget in full. Our contributions to the Frederick Home were very high. Our offering for the C.P.S. camps was better than the average church of larger membership. In relief we failed to do very well. That work must be supported even if it requires sacrifice. Conference officers for 1942-43 are: President, Rev. Sylvan Lehman; Vice-President. Rev. Russel Mast; Secretary Rev. H. G. Nyce; Treasurer, Mr. Aldorfer."

—"Frankly, I admire the pacifists. I am glad that we have a group of them in camp in Iowa, and I hope that during the war there will be no persecution or intolerance. Pacificism, I believe, is the logical outcome of Christianity and democracy. It is based upon the concept of the sacredness of personality and the futility of brutality and killing as a means of achieving peace or any other ideal end. It believes that to resist evil with evil is destructive and that evil can only be overcome by good. It believes in the supremacy of spiritual power over brute force. And because of his faith the pacifist is willing to suffer; to be killed if need but not to kill."

—Bulletin, Second Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa., "Our New Mennonite Hymnaries have been ordered; however, we are advised by the Book Concern that their supply is entirely exhausted and we will have to wait until June 15 to have our order filled." —June 7th, Children's Day, our church will conduct the service at the Mennonite Home for the Aged at Frederick at 3 p. m. . . . Donations are in order to pay for a special treat for the old folks."

IMPRESSIONS FROM A MENNONITE COMMUNITY*

As one parks west of the post office in Mt. Lake, Minnesota, one can see the names of eight business establishments. Seven of these names are Mennonite ones. One who made a survey of Mt. Lake business places reported that 95 per cent of them were Mennonite-owned. This is significant. Where Mennonite business men constitute such an overwhelming majority, there is an opportunity for the preservation of Mennonite customs and principles that does not exist where one Mennonite business man is lost among sixty non-Mennonite ones. The business men of Mt. Lake are in a unique position to uphold the stand of church and conference.

In contrast to the business situation only one teacher, out of the twenty teachers in the school system of this Mennonite community, bears a Mennonite name. The school board has made a ruling not to hire individuals who come from the local community. Thus, they are dependent upon outside sources for Mennonite teachers (How different this is from the early days when the most desired teachers came from among themselves!) However, persons who get their education outside of Minnesota must take one year of work in the state of Minnesota before they can teach in it. As a result this Mennonite community offers a great challenge to Mennonite students in other states to complete their education in such a manner that they would be eligible to teach in Minnesota. If capable Mennonites would prepare themselves in such a manner, then the school board of this community would have a chance to hire a goodly number of Mennonite teachers to instruct the large number of Mennonite youth who attend.

On any day of the week one can enter into the beautiful, spacious new meeting house of the Bethel Church and slip into a quiet little "reading room." In it are books which edify the Christian, enlarge his spiritual horizon, and which make him a more useful member of God's kingdom. Rosanna of the Amish, one of the books in the library, is in nearly constant circulation. Over fifty more books have been ordered, and there is thought of placing periodicals in the room. What a wholesome contrast this reading room is to the display of demoralizing magazines in some business places. In the latter young people are urged to buy literary garbage in order that the proprietor may grab additional profits. Those who sell such magazines seem to go on the assumption that people are to be good, honest, respectable citizens in spite of the filth they devour. How different it is in this church reading room! The reader does not have to pay someone a profit. Instead of the reading material making it harder for him to live a Christian life, it rather makes it easier for him to live according to God's will. The Bethel Church reading room presents a unique opportunity.

Mt. Lake, like many other Mennonite communities, permits many of its most talented young men and women to go away into non-Mennonite communities. What an enrichment it would be to our Mennonite communities if talented young people would prepare themselves in the best possible manner and then make themselves a part of their home community.

Some other impressions were: Only a few people on the streets of Mt. Lake were seen smoking. Undoubtedly, there is a close relationship between this observation and the large number of Mennonite inhabitants of this community. Farmers and others in town seemed to be very well-dressed. Driving on country side-roads one finds that very many of them are well-elevated and graveled. Farm buildings repose in a splendor of red and white paint. Everywhere the luscious growth of trees, grass, and field crops seems to indicate a great fertility of soil and abundant rainfall. This section truly is an agricultural garden spot when compared with many other Mennonite communities. In fact, much of the soil of Iowa and of southern Minnesota can be equalled by but few areas in the world. The Mennonites of this community possess agricultural opportunities which should carry them far in maintaining a strong Mennonite community in the years to come. The names Dick and Fast predominate in the telephone directory. Each is listed twenty times. Considerable has been written about the history of the community. Ferdinand P. Schultz, a son of the community, wrote a master's thesis, which has resulted in the interesting book, The Settlement of German Mennonites From Russia at Mountain Lake Minnesota.

* Gathered on a recent visit to Mt. Lake, Minnesota.

Taking into consideration the agricultural opportunities, the dense Mennonite population, and the spiritual possibilities of this community, one is led to expect much from this Mennonite community in the future. From it should come conference leaders and strong conference support. May this community exemplify the faith of our fathers in a very real way.

THE SOLDIER'S QUALIFICATION

By A. W. Friesen *

In Life magazine of October 27, 1941, an article appeared entitled, "A Good Soldier." A Private First Class is named as the best soldier in company G. He is intelligent, clean, tough. He has a fierce pride in the traditions of his division. His equipment is new and plentiful. Taught by sergeants who fought in World War I, he has had eleven months of hard field service with maneuvering and sufficient target practice with live ammunition. His commissioned officers are excellent tacticians. Just as important, they also know who Bill is and call him by his first name. Bill's most important job is to shoot straight not only with a rifle, but with four other weapons—45 calibre pistol, new Grand rifle, and automatic rifle, 30 calibre machine gun and a light 60 mm. mortar.

He must also know how to emplace himself and his weapons so that they will be most effective. In addition, as a member of an infantry team, he knows how to help the engineers with bridges, how to lay smoke and take advantage of cover, to sleep whenever he can, to live on land, to help the Signal Corps, and to work with the anti-tank gunners. He must be a complete trained shock trooper, ready for anything.

Because he is over twenty-eight Bill may have an opportunity to leave the army next month, when his year is up. In fact, the army has not made him a corporal because it feared he might leave. But Bill intends to stay. Says he, "I want to see the end of all this mess, and the quickest way to do that is to help stop it."

We are now ready for our Scripture text and the applications. II Tim. 2:3, "Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. 4:5, But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." II Tim. 2:15, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The Soldier's Qualifications

It is not enough to have qualifications; there must also be the management of them. It is wrong to judge a man's merits by his qualifications, but by the use he makes of them. Paul's injunction to Timothy did not stop with soundness of views, of doctrine. He stressed soundness of life. It may be possible for one to be doctrinally, correct, to hold views that are Biblically right, and on the other hand live in a way wholly contrary to those truths. One's life may be wholly at variance with one's beliefs. In this epistle Paul emphasizes the need of combating error with a life that is the expression of truth revealed in the word of God. How true it is that the world only reads the Bible as it appears in the Christian life. It assumes a living form and is easily understood by those who know little of the Bible itself. It is easily understood by those who know little of the Bible and commends profoundly the truths of Christianity, and nothing is more convincing as to the validity of these truths. The way Timothy lives his life and renders a service as a true follower of Christ will establish the divine character of the truth he preaches and in which his life is grounded. These truths come to expression in, and are exemplified by his Christian character. Paul enjoins him to be a good soldier of Jesus Christ, but it is obvious that he will not fight very valiantly for the truth he is not willing to live. His wrong life would be constantly getting in his way and cause him to stumble. A true life is the vindication of that which makes it true. What Timothy will preach will be empowered and made mighty by what he is.

Training

Paul opens his second letter to Timothy with an expression of gratitude for the manner in which Timothy had been trained in the Scripture by his devout mother and grandmother. During those impressionable, plastic years of his childhood the seeds of divine truths were sown in his life. Such truths, understood and guided faithfully through training, worked upon the affections for the upbuilding of a true religious character.

Not only our acceptance of Jesus as our Lord and Master in life will qualify one to be a servant in the Master's vineyard. Paul's meeting of the Lord Jesus on his way to Damascus did not alone make him a chosen vessel unto the Lord. No one is fully qualified for a position unless he has faith in the work he is to undertake.

Recently I wrote to Dr. Petter on the mission field in Montana congratulating him on the fiftieth aniversary of his service to the Cheyenne Indians. Here is part of his reply: "As for me I am glad and thankful that God graciously let me hold my little candle in the Cheyenne night and kept the blasts

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

THE COST OF BROTHERHOOD

In order to do this our churches must become vigorous Christian fellowships in which common joys are shared and sorrows and disappointments borne by the entire group. The sins of the one must become the concern of all, and the blessings of the one must be shared by all. Only when there is a common interest and a feeling of mutual dependability can this be done. An instance which illustrates the point recently came to my attention. A faltering brother in a certain Mennonite church issued a bad check for $1000 and then left the community not to be found again. While he was not apprehended the debt was still paid. The church of which this man was a member assumed the full obligation incurred by the erring brother. No one compelled this Christian brotherhood to assume this debt. It was done voluntarily and out of a well established Christian principle of responsibility for the character and conduct of every member of that church. They paid the debt that the reputation and integrety of their church might not be marred. They paid the man who was cheated out of $1000, because he had trusted a Mennonite and now was betrayed.

What a demonstration of Christian responsibility! What a fine understanding of what it means to be a Mennonite Church! What a marvelous way for a church to take upon itself the sins of its erring members! A thousand dollars is a large sum of money. It must have been a real burden to this little Mennonite body. But a small price when compared to the loss of its integrity. The price was paid, and confidence in that community was restored. A Mennonite's "yea" and "nay" is still honored at full face value. What would it have profited that church if it had refused to spend the $1000 and lost its own soul? A marvelous present day testimony to the ancient proverb that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

"Yea" and "Nay"

In Matthew 5:36-37 Jesus instructs his followers not to take an oath but rather to secure all promises with a simple "yes" or "no". For this reason Mennonites have during the centuries preferred not to put their hands on a Bible and swear when making a pledge. The refusal to swear is a noble deed. Originally swearing was required of non-Christians, but today there is generally no distinction made between Christians and non-Christians. Swearing implies that a person might cheat or lie if he had not forsworn himself in the presence of the Holy Book. This is the thing Mennonites and other groups who have refused to swear have tried to get away from. They have assumed that being a Christian is bond enough; that to make a simple promise with "yes" and "no" is all that is needed. Mennonites for many generations have gotten along with each other and with non-Mennonites in this simple, straightforward way.

What About The Future

Today one frequently hears business men and others say that a Mennonite's word is no longer as good as his bond. His verbal promise alone is no longer acceptable in financial matters. Non-Mennonites as well as his own brothers in the faith now generally require legal security or a promise in writing. But why should Mennonites demand contracts that have standing before the law when it is contrary to Biblical teaching and to Mennonite principles for Mennonites to go to law? Both Jesus and Paul admonish Christians to settle their disputes within the fellowship of the church. It is a reflection on the degree Mennonites of today have departed from some of their most cherished principles. It is an indication that the brothers of a church do no longer completely trust each other. This is regrettable. These wholesome Christian principles ought to be reviewed in our Mennonite communities. They should be written on the door posts and on the gates of our homes; they should be taught to our children and talked about with our neighbors as is suggested to the Israelites concerning their laws in Deuteronomy 6:7-9.

TABLOID TITHING TRUTHS

When a man gets rich, God gets a partner or the man loses his soul.

Stewardship puts the Golden Rule in business in place of the rule of gold.

Not how much of my money must I give to God, but how much need I use for myself?

"I will place no value on anything I may have or may possess except in relation to the kingdom of Christ."

The kingdom of God can never be established by raising money, but it can never be extended without raising money.

He is no fool who parts with what he cannot keep, to get what he shall not lose.

The unconsecrated wealth of Christians is the greatest hindrance to the church's progress.

Jesus teaches that a man's attitude to the Kingdom of God is revealed by his attitude to his property.

Earning maketh an industrious man; spending, a well-furnished man; saving, a prepared man; giving, a blessed man. —Missionary News and Notes

CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY

Frequently the complaint is heard that our churches are in need of a revival. There is ground for the statement. Why is it so? We live in the latter times, according to Matt. 24:12 "the love of many shall wax cold." Times are so strenuous that many do not take time to think seriously of the Second Coming of the Lord. With the neglect of this teaching, other of Christ's injunctions are omitted, namely, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." How can we return to these fundamental principles? Christ's words. "Search the scriptures, and they are they that testify of me."

Who had been Invited

Those young people were invited who had been baptized by Elder Harder, February 15, 1942.

The Main Theme

Jesus Christ was the main thought around which the whole day's program clustered. The opening address by Elder Harder was on the subject: "Suggestions for Wholehearted Consecration to Jesus Christ." Hebrews 5:11-6:20 was the Scriptural basis for the message. Warnings were given against laziness and self-satisfaction, as well as hardening of the heart or neglect of one's salvation. Our Elder further gave us directions how to grow in grace by: regular Bible Study, obedience, to keep our conscience clean and sharp and not to be weary in our life of faith. A season of prayer followed this message.

The two papers, "The Cross of Christ versus the Hooked Cross (Swastika)" and "The Jewish Question," came to this significant conclusion: In the final analysis the cross of Christ is superior to all symbols and remains the mark, only begotten Jesus Christ. "The Jewish Question" was pointed out as one of the most important questions of the day, because this questioin points how far we have gone in the fulfillment of prophecy. Both papers were built soundly and squarely on Scripture.

A part of the afternoon was taken up when questions that had been written out and sent in were answered. Discussion centered also on the point of how we might follow better in the way we started when we were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ.

As the day came to a close we had the consciousness of having seen Christ clearer and also of having had a desire to follow Him closer. With thanks to Elder Harder for the inspiration given in the assembly, the new church members returned to their homes.

In the name of those that took part,

Peter Wiens, Schonwiese

THE TWO SIDES OF PRAYER LIFE

Breathing is a double process, a breathing in and a breathing out. Normally prayer is an outbreathing of our soul's desire to God— what we have to say to Him. Yet how important the inbreathing—what He has to say to us. Then let us not feel under necessity to fill the prayertime with our own talk; but rather, tarry for His much-to-be-prized speaking to us.

How well Ellen Gorch has expressed these two sides of the prayer life in her beautiful hymn:

"In the secret of His presence how my soul delights to hide!
Oh, how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low;
For when Satan comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.

"When my soul is faint and thirsty, 'neath the shadow of His wing
There is cool and pleasant shelter, and a fresh and crystal spring;
And my Saviour rests beside me, as we hold communion sweet;
If I tried, I could not utter what He says when thus we meet.

"Only this I know: I tell Him all my doubts, my griefs and fears;
Oh, how patiently He listens! and my drooping soul He cheers:
Do you think He ne'er reproves me? What a false friend He would be,
If He never, never told me of the sins which He must see.

"Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath His shadow: this shall then be your reward;
And whene'er you leave the silence of that happy meeting place,
You must mind and bear the image of the Master in your face."

TRUTH IS NEVER DEAD

He does not cease to speak
Who words of truth has said.
Lips do in time grow still
But truth is never dead.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Donovan E. Smucker, Wadsworth, Ohio

JUNE 14—"... our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." II Tim. 1:10.

Faith in the resurrection of Jesus Christ rests squarely upon solid historical evidence! For hundreds of years touch-minded scholars have tried to wiggle through every hole in the Bible: these men have subjected the Scriptures to a merciless blitzkreig of doubt. Not one—no! not a single one—has ever denied the certainty of the resurrection to the early Christians themselves. An utterly astonishing transformation took place based on the unquestioned fact that on the third day He arose from the dead. They did not say: "Since the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, if indeed he did rise again, and if the astonishing stories we believe are not untrue." No. After Christ had risen their faith had a fervent finality; with this fact in their hearts they were prepared to face humiliation, death or prison—and joyously so to do.

JUNE 15—"This is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." I John 2:25

Eternal life is not the mere continuance of life. As a matter of fact, it would be a ghastly bit of torture to extend the dull, dead lives of many folks. It was precisely this tragic fact on which Aldous Huxley based his novel, After Many a Summer Dies the Swan. The story ,in brief, is this: Joe Stoyte, a multi-millionaire of 60, is leading a crassly sinful life of drunkeness, immorality and greed. He hires a doctor to carry on research to discover what mysterious element permits the crocodile and some varieties of fish to live 300 years or more. During this research some curious papers are discovered regarding an English nobleman who was interested in the same problem. They go to England, finally reach the man who has lived for several hundred years—but on the level of terrific sin. It is a sight fit neither for God nor man. There was nothing between this man and eternity but his appetites; he had prolonged spiritual death with physical degradation. Each Christian must start his eternal living now.

JUNE 16—"Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels." Luke 20:36.

A leading historian recently declared that "the absence of any certainty that life has a permanent value is the canker sore at the heart of heathenism." Just so. And what could be more characteristic of this age than a fundamental skepticism regarding life's full meaning in terms of the Godly salvation which can raise man beyond death equal unto the angels. Contrast this lofty hope of salvation with one modern cynic who declares that "man is a sick fly taking a ride on a gigantic flywheel." The scourge of totalitarianism has arisen in the hearts of evil men who have taken modern doubt at its face value. All right, say these ruthless men, if man is a sick fly, without a soul, without the possibility of Christly salvation, we will build a society on that basis. Men will be treated like flies to be killed, animals to be slaughtered. No more revolutionary truth has ever been proclaimed than this exalted hope of salvation, making us equal unto the angels.

JUNE 17—"And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." Matt. 4:23

Note the three great needs of redemption which Jesus meets in this text: "teaching in their synagogues" —redemption of the mind; "preaching the gospel"—redemption of the soul; "healing all manner of sickness"— redemption of the body. Most sincere Christian people have been able to see the redemptive power of the gospel in reference to the mind and soul but seldom for the body. Have we permitted modern medicine to become completely naturalistic and materialistic? Do we have a thoroughly Biblical answer to the challenge of various religious healing cults? Has God stamped any laws of His being in our very nerves and tissues? Can one violate the law of love any more than the law of gravity without getting hurt. These questions must be answered. The alternative is a gospel which leaves out one-third of Christ's testimony.

JUNE 18—"He that hateth his brother is in darkness." I John 2:11

The disturbing questions raised in the previous meditation cannot be easily answered; for now we know in part and prophesy in part. But, this is crystal clear: hate is a dark sin which can make one physically ill. A woman once told Stanley Jones that she would not listen when "Thou shalt not hate" was written in the Bible, but took notice when it was written in her stomach. This woman found a close connection between stomach disorders and her all-consuming hatred of another person. The Massachusetts General Hospital made a study of patients suffering from such widely contrasted disorders as asthma, arthritis and colitis. They discovered that 96 per cent had strong feelings of hate and resentment; 70 per cent had expressed feelings of guilt and sin. Dr. Hunter, a famous physician who had a heart condition said that "my life is in the hands of any scoundrel who would make me angry." Indeed, the evidence is clear both spiritually and physically: "He that hateth his brother is in darkness."

JUNE 19—"Thanks be to God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ." II Cor. 2:14

Dorothy Canfield makes the remark that the thing which embitters life is the sense that unrighteousness is triumphant. Hence, the supreme importance in these difficult days of understanding Christ and His Cross. This sacrificial, non-resistant, non-military death for the sins of humanity may seem inadequate against the pagan violence of our day. Indeed, many Christians leave the impression that the triumph of Christ came something in this fashion: "And planting a crown of thorns they put it on him, and they began to salute him: 'Hail king of the Jews.' And they smote his head with a reed and spat upon him." (And Jesus struck back at the soldiers and knocked them to the ground and said, 'I must talk to these barbarians in the only language they can understand—the language of the club.') No! it does not work. The words of war sound like plasphemy in the mouth of Jesus. He gave us another Way. We will believe that true triumph comes that way or face the prospect of being destroyed by our unbelief.

JUNE 20—"When Jesus therefore saw his brother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his home." John 19: 26-27.

What infinite mercy and compassion! Search the remainder of the Scriptures, read Christian literature of subsequent ages, or review the dramas of Shakespeare. There is no story in all history as amazing as this. Christ was on the Cross suffering the most severe form of capital punishment fiendish men have ever devised. But, of course, more than mere torture He was literally bearing the oppressive burden of a fallen mankind. Yet, in the midst of all this come the Seven Last Words with the above text almost most touching of all. For here the Master revealed his boundless concern for the Christian home in a time of crisis: Mary was to adopt a new son and John was to adopt a new mother. As war and conscription shake the very foundations of the home, as one out of every six marriages flounder in divorce courts the example of the crucified Christ stands out as a Divine reminder of our sober responsibility.

JUNE 21—"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5:1

"Justification by Faith" was the key slogan of the Protestant Reformation as opposed to the Catholic stress on "Justification by Works." With Apostle Paul the Protestants' conception of faith went far beyond mere intellectual belief. Indeed, it was the exalted idea of an inner union with Christ and guidance through His Spirit; when this took place one had personal salvation. The Catholics meant by works not so much the moral and ethical activity of a pure-hearted Christian, but rather the complicated apparatus of salvation via candles, incense, mass, pilgrimages to holy places, confession, fasting, beads and holy water. Briefly, it was—and is!—the conflict between inner light and outer authority. The Mennonites, needless to say, were among the first to reject these long detours from the main road of salvation.

JUNE 22—". . . shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." James 2:18

Suppose one has found true peace through Him who "is our peace". (Eph. 2:14) What then? Precisely at this point the individual Christian carries the burden of proof. Around the corner are the sneers and guffaws of the skeptics who think the followers of Jesus seldom know anything about redemption, that is, "that which delivers, saves or releases." (Winston Dictionary). Delivers, saves or releases from what? The world and all its sin, of course. Modern warfare is the incarnation and integration of all sin. And, later on, James declares that wars and fightings come from the lusts which war within us. Hence, who stress personal salvation plus fighting have obviously surrendered only a part of themselves to Christ.

JUNE 23—"And have put on the new man. . ." Col. 3:10

In the next verse one gets the amazing group of community sins transcended by the "new man" wearing the robe of righteousness and the garment of salvation: "where there is neither Greek nor Jew" (racial distinction); "circumcision or uncircumcision" (denominational or religious distinction); "Barbarian or Scythian (cultural or geographical distinction); "slave or free" (economic distinction). And, if one adds a line from the parallel verse in Galatians 3:28, there is a final barrier overcome: "male or female" (sexual distinction). Hence, the new man of Christ will surrender all of himself to the Master: first sins of the flesh; then sins of the disposition; finally the group sins enumerated above. Then, behind this witness will be the holy union of faith and works.

JUNE 24—"Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." Matt. 23:24

In the midst of bomb-scarred London is a Methodist preacher whose sermons have given much hope. In one of his discourses he dared to point out that one of the friends of faith is a sound sense of humor. Then he went on to raise the question regarding the use of humor in any of the great sermons of our Lord. Reading the perfectly terrific denunciations by Christ of the scribes, pharisees and hypocrites, the English Methodist came to the conclusion that a ripple of laughter went over the audience when Jesus made the comment cited above. Consider it for a moment. Here is a fat, greedy, pharisee noisily eating a bowl of soup. He is bothered by gnats, and, quite suddenly, he lunges forward to kill the insect. In the process he gets the camel.

THE SOLDIER'S QUALIFICATION

of Satan from extinguishing it. One thing I know, I am not a star of whom Daniel 12:3 speaks, just an instrument used by God to place his light in the Cheyenne Candlestick."

Never have the mighty men of God been crown seekers. As soldiers of Jesus Christ we must ask ourselves often whether we are modest enough and give credit to whom credit is due. Looking back on the centuries we can discern progress. Again here, a victory there for the church of Christ. How slow the advance often seems. Around us we see vice organized for gain; selfishness joins hands with ignorance; truth seems always on the scaffold; purity and beauty are sacrificed for lust and greed. How hard for many to keep faith after the desolations of 1914 to 1919 and after the same panorama in 1941. In such times as these we are challenged more than ever as lovers of peace to preach and practice the principles for which our Master laid down His very life.

Zeal

Often we find that success is due less to ability than to zeal. Paul's zeal as a Pharisee was genuine as far as it went. Interest and zeal may go hand in hand. It is next to impossible to persuade a man to reason his interests, even though he is convinced that equity is against him. Our modern time has ways and means of getting people interested. It seems we are not always aware of our needs. Walking down the street a while ago I passed a boot-black. "Man O'livin yo shoes am dirty; they all needs a shine," he shouted. I was startled; had I stepped into something awful? Upon investigation I saw that my shoes were somewhat dusty, but far from unsanitary. The boot-black's interests was in other people's shoes, not his own, for he was bare-footed. He was looking where his interests were and was ready to apply the remedy. How true that our virtues as well as our vices are put in motion by our interests.

In James 3:1, we read, "Be not many masters." And in Cor. 12:28-30, Paul writes, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? Have all the same gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?"

In our first Scripture text Paul admonishes Timothy to be a good soldier and in the second to do the work of an evangelist. Does Paul wish to differentiate between an evangelist (soldier) and a bishop or any of the other offices mentioned? To me there is a difference between an evangelist and a bishop as much as there is a difference between a soldier and a statesman. The qualifications of the one may be found duplicated in the other. Washington was a good soldier also a good statesman. Lincoln was a good statesman, but we do not find that he was a good soldier also.

The members of a church belong to many other associations, in all of which as Christian citizens they profess to serve God in serving their fellowmen. The minister's special function is to keep men conscious of God. Intimacy with God involves mutuality among men, and that not alone with a select, congenial group, but among all men. It is next to impossible to think of God as an exclusive advantage without further thought of our fellowmen.

As a soldier the minister has voice in the history of the people. Achieved results should not be regarded as final. Moses, leader of Israel, and lawgiver, accomplished his task, and God laid him to rest. The cause of Israel was by no means finished. Joshua led the people over the Jordan into the promised land. The church of Jesus must be ever forward looking and onward moving in fellowship with the Determiner of Destiny.

In some churches the beauty of ritual and in others the bustle of organization seem to be the main reasons for their existence, and the weightier matters, such as salvation, justice, and righteousness are crowded out, or even ignored and treated as superfluous and old-fashioned. On the other hand, how easy it is for a minister to encourage sentimental enthusiasm and thereby lead the people to the opposite swing of the pendulum. Jesus met such a character in the woman (Luke 11:27) who cried out, "Blessed is the mother that bore thee." Jesus' reply was, "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it." Pious sentiments and religious thrills divorced from creative actions are of little value.

There are, and should be, essential basic doctrines that we as ministers should agree upon and be guided by. Let me refer you to an article in The Mennonite of November 11, written by Rev. J. M. Regier. I shall only give the summary as he gives it. "I believe in God as my heavenly Father and in Jesus Christ as my Saviour. I believe that I am saved by faith in Jesus Christ and that upon my repentance he has forgiven my sins. But I believe very definitely that I, too, must forgive my fellowmen. I believe in communion with God through prayer, and that I must prove that I am Christ's disciple by loving my brethren. I must zealously seek the Kingdom of God, I believe that I have no right to take that from anybody." There are other basic tenets that may be included such as the Holy Spirit, the Church and Divine Revelation, to which the writer of the above article also refers.

Coming back to the soldier we find that he is not only drafted but also selected. This may refer more to the individual congregations than to the ministers, but still the minister plays an important part in what I wish to bring out. On what other basis should a church select a minister? Let me refer you again to an article in the Bethel College Bulletin of November 1, "Securing a Minister." First of all, the ideal candidate will never be found. A minister should be selected on the basis of his record. "The worst of all methods in selecting a minister is to ask a procession of candidates to preach trial sermons, and then ask the congregation to vote on the likeable candidate. Charles Jefferson, in Quiet Talks with Earnest People calls this the devil's method of humiliating a minister and dividing a church. The trial sermon is a farce (ridiculous play). The congregation is not thinking of God, but of the candidate's voice, his gestures, necktie, theology, his hair or lack of it.... A shallow man with a lot of self-confidence may leave a fine impression. A better man, self-effacing and realizing the terrible artificiality of the situation, may make a poor showing. Every layman should remember that the work of the ministry is far reaching, and that a man cannot be judged by the trial sermon."

Jesus calls upon men to give up all for the cause of the kingdom of God. It must be made the dominating object of life. If riches conflict with that aim, we must, like the rich young man, give our wealth to the poor. If love of family interferes, then it is necessary to disregard them, yes, even be willing to lose hand, foot, and eye. It is all or nothing. Consecration of part of life is of little value. We must lose our life in order to find it. The reward of the minister is not so much something valuable or something he could not do without. It is rather a reward which is found in the very center of life, enriching and blessing every phase of its activity.

Material things often seem to retard the work of the minister. It is true the average minister in our Mennonite churches is paid less than the average high school teacher. In many places the minister has a teaching position, and on the side also serves a church. This proves satisfactory in the small churches, but in larger ones this method does not seem recommendable.

One thing we must not forget. Jesus never promised wealth to those that followed Him. His followers must put other things before money. On the other hand we need not fear that a worker of God will or must be a parasite upon others. When Jesus sent out the seventy he said to them: "The laborer is worthy of his hire," (Luke 10:7), and in I Tim. 5:18, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." Our whole wage and salary system is theoretically based on the premise of proportionate reward to him who serves society best or most, or in other words, the survival of the fittest. We need thrift, prudence, and industry, but without worries and fears that undermine our health and tear our spirits. Often we dream of a sense of security and still slave feverishly at our tasks. In perfect trust and confidence Jesus taught us to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

The things accomplished by the word of God cannot be measured with a rod or human calculations. Where the human eye sees nothing, naked faith produces great results. Let us therefore as men of God be faithful, honest, humble, and spiritfilled. God has promised that His Word shall not return unto Him void, but be as the fruit producing rain, a melting fire, a crushing hammer and a dividing sword.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

LETTER FROM EVA PAULS

This year our missionary conference was held in Champa, October 10-16. We used Dr. Bauman's bungalow, and we all ate together at my home.

On November 5 a boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Waltner. It was a shock and disappointment to them that the baby was not living, but God's grace was sufficient. On November 26 Dorothy Ann Thiessen was born to Mr. and Mrs. Thiessen. It was my privilege to take care of these patients while they were in the hospital with me. During this time my work at the Leper and General Hospital was quite interrupted. At present I am teaching and attending to my work again as usual.

December 10-13 two compounders, one nurse, and I attended the nurses' conference at Itarsi. The lectures given were inspiring and helpful.

The hospital work being light most of the nurses and compounders had the privilege of attending the retreat at Mauhaudhi. Two of the compounders, together with evangelistic works, are now out in the villages giving out the gospel and medical aid.

The condition of the sixty to seventy lepers outside the Leper home is pathetic. It is heart-breaking to have them fall at your feet again and again and beg for a little something to eat. One day I was surrounded by them and they began to tell me their troubles. I heard statements like this: "If we could only die and be buried; that is all that is left for us." "If we go begging for food, they spit on us and throw dust at us, saying, 'You are a leper; get out!'" "Have mercy on us, have mercy on us, we are hungry and cold." This happened a few days before Christmas, and I did show mercy. What would you have done? Champa, January 15, 1942.

THE DAYS OF YOUTH

A heaped ice cream cone being licked from all sides by a youngster whose eyes return to the cone after every lick gives us a picture that denotes supreme enjoyment and utilization. Should not life be for us a giant ice cream cone which we treat in much the same way, every day corresponding to each delectable lick, and the opportunities of every day eagerly anticipated in the morning?

That which is precious to us often becomes exceedingly so just before we must give it up. That's why the last few days of the senior year in high school and college fill us with sadness. As a precious visit draws to an end we crowd the last days much fuller than we did the first. Many do tremendously much more in the last few minutes before Sunday School than they do in the first moments after rising. The days preceding an examination seem to have a value for students that the first few days of the semester simply do not have. In the beginning time seems exhaustless, and we easily drift into squandering it. In the end time seems so limited that we deem it exceeding precious. So it is with the beginning and end of life.

When we are young and look at the many, many years stretching into the future, we very often are so overwhelmed with the seeming length of life, that we are led to be careless about the use of days, a day, or half a day. When life draws to a close men and women treasure each hour that remains. From the end of life one can see that it flits past all too quickly and that it is so precious that not a bit of it should be wasted. Therefore, we need to project ourselves into the future and get that view of life which shows how precious all of it is.

However, we need to do more than that. We need to know that a day in youth is longer than a day in middle-age or a day in the later part of life. Why? Towards the end of life the physical and mental resources of man dwindle. Men and women cannot do far as much in twelve hours as they could in their youth. The period of middle age is one of great activity in making a living, rearing children, etc. How different from these two is the period of youth. Young people at home need not be concerned about making a living. Father and mother shoulder that responsibility. Youth is not responsible for the training of others as are father and mother. In home life youth finds a comparatively sheltered and carefree existence with no great demands upon its time by the harsh realities of life. There is time for growth and development. In youth the day stretches long with opportunity.

How shall we use the time of youth? Shall we fritter it away by doing little or shall we fritter it away by being very much absorbed in unimportant activities? How tremendously important it is that we use the time of youth and that we use it for the right end.

That end is Jesus Christ. O happy day that fixes our choice on Him, our Saviour and our God. With our eyes on Him, every day becomes a happy day full of great living for His sake. As Jesus determines the choice of our activities we find the kind of life which satisfies most completely. When Jesus determines the use of our time then we live rejoicing every day, for then our days are used in the best manner possible.

The Forty-Seventh Annual Eastern Disirict Convention

The forty-seventh Annual Convention of the Eastern District Mennonite Young People's Union was held on Memorial Day, Saturday, May 30, at the West Swamp Mennonite Church, Stunsburg, Pennsylvania. The theme of the convention was "Christ for the Crisis," taken from Philippians 4:13.

The morning session was devoted to business with two conference periods following. Mr. John Fretz led a discussion group on "Our Heritage" and Miss Huldah Myers led a discussion group on "Our Witness." Both of these periods proved beneficial to all attending. Special music was given by Mrs. Paul Mohr and the Wismer children.

The outstanding feature of the day was an address given by Mr. Ernest Bennett, relief worker in France. He spoke on conditions as he found them and also of the work that the Mennonite Central Committee was doing in the war zones. Rev. Lehman, Conference president, installed the newly-elected officers during the afternoon program. A special musical number was given by the East Swamp Society. Walton Nyce and Stanley Fretz led the group in song services during the morning and afternoon sessions.

Look around thee! How the spring advances!
New life is playing through the gay, green trees;
See how, in yonder bower, the light leaf dances
To the bird's tread, and the quivering breeze;
How every blossom in the sunlight glances;
The winter-frost in his dark cavern flees,
And earth, warm-wakened, feels through every vein
The kindling influence of the vernal rain.
How silvery streamlets, from the mountain stealing,
Dance joyously the verdant vales along;
Cold fear no more the songster tongue is stealing,
Down in the thick, dark grove is heard his song;
And all their bright and lovely hues revealing,
A thousand plants the field and forest throng;
Light comes upon the earth in radiant showers,
And mingling rainbows play among the flowers.

THE TEACHER'S TEST OF EFFICIENCY

"The greatest thing in the world is human life. The greatest work in the world is the helpful touch upon that life.... the look, the word, the invisible atmosphere of the home and the church, the sights and sounds of all the busy days enter the supersensitive and retentive soul of the child, and are woven into life tissue." —Lamoreaux

1. What is my work as teacher?
2. To whom am I responsible for this work?
3. Does it have a rightful place in my life?
4. Am I growing in efficiency through the study of the books in the training course for the Sunday School workers?
5. Do I heartily cooperate in all the plans of my superintendent?
6. Do I notify the superintendent a day in advance when compelled to be absent?
7. Do I keep correct records?
8. Do I communicate with absentees each week?
9. Do I send birthday cards and letters?
10. Do I give at least an hour's study to my lesson each week?
11. Am I so familiar with my lesson that I can leave my teacher's textbook at home on Sunday morning?
12. Do I visit in the homes and keep the parents informed about the work?
13. Do I set a fine example of Christian living and faithful performance of all obligations of my church?
14. Do I spend much time in prayer for my work and for the pupils entrusted to my care?
15. Do I plan and pray for the conversion of my pupils?
16. Do I radiate the Spirit of Jesus Christ?

"May God help me to know that I may teach; and help me to live that what I teach shall count."

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

Program for June 28, 1942

No. 2 of Series of Three Studies on the Bible

WHO'S WHO IN THE BIBLE

Hebrews 11:4-34

I. Worship Service:

1. General singing: "There Is a Name I Love to Hear," No. 496; "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," No. 495.
2. Reading of scripture passage, prayer, and leader's remarks.
3. Question box on life of outstanding Bible characters.
4. Offering for Home Missions.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Among the outstanding people of the Old Testament are Moses, Abraham, Joseph, David, Solomon, Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra. In the New Testament, with the exception of Jesus Christ, leading characters are men like Paul, Peter, John, Matthew, Luke, Titus, Timothy. But we also like to think of people less spoken of, yet very remarkable; of the little Israelite maid in captivity who was concerned about Naaman's leprosy, the faithful servant of Abraham who was sent to find a wife for Isaac, the daughter of Jeptha who bravely met death in the days of her youth, of Ebedmelek, the courageous, big-hearted negro, who faced the king in Jeremiah's behalf, and of the Shunammite who provided a place of rest and shelter for Elisha. In the New Testament are fine noble souls whom we meet, often only through one story that has come to us out of their lives: there is Mary of whom Jesus said, "She has anointed me for my burial;" Cleopas, who was one of those with whom Jesus walked on the road to Emmaus; Aquilla and Priscilla, who offered Paul help and hospitality; Dorcas, the needlewoman with the sympathetic heart; Cornelius, the staunch, stalwart captain. All of these are fine people whose lives present a challenge to us to use our talents and opportunities faithfully.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. A fearless woman judge, Judges 4:4-9. 2. A converted slave, Phil. 10-12. 3. A Christ-defender, John 7:50-52. 4. A dependable prophetess, II Chron. 34:22. 5. A legalistic Jew, Phil. 3:5, 6. 6. Faithful co-workers, Acts 18:1-3.

IV. For Discussion:

1. What are some of Moses' outstanding traits of character? 2. What made Paul such a good worker? 3. Name some of the outstanding Christians of today.

V. Facts for Study:

The chapter in Hebrews which presents us with a list of Bible heroes is well worth studying. Their faith is lauded, their willingness to sacrifice, their trust in God, their confidential expectance of God's promises to come true despite appearances to the contrary, their endurance of suffering, their unflinching hope in the reality of the unseen. Neither discouragement, nor ill treatment, nor temptation swayed them from their course. Their love and loyalty was deep and true.

Paul says, "The love of Christ constraineth us," and our Lord and Master calls those His brothers who do His Father's will. The writer of Revelations exhorts, "Be ye faithful unto death . . . ." Those who belong to the Who's Who of the Bible have qualified.

VI. Illustration:

Will Men and Women Be Willing to Meet The Test to be Rated as Children of God?

The story of Demosthenes, the Greek philosopher, is familiar to all. Demosthenes, a stutterer, longed to speak like other men. He even wished to become an orator. So Demosthenes added to his handicap by putting pebbles in his mouth and practiced talking to the waves until he could speak clearly even with this obstruction in his mouth.

VII. Food for Thought:

"God was the wonder-worker; Paul the instrument. Without the electric current the radio is silent."

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

Program for June 28, 1942

WHAT THE BIBLE CAN DO FOR US

Gives Comfort—Rom. 15:4

Of all created comforts, God is the leader; you are the borrower, not the owner. —Rutherford

I have enjoyed many of the comforts of life, none of which I wish to esteem lightly; yet I confess I know not any joy that is so dear to me, that so fully satisfies the inmost desires of my mind, that so enlivens, refines, and elevates my whole nature, as that which I derive from religion—from faith in God.—May this God be thy God, thy refuge, thy comfort, as he has been mine. —Lavater

Gives Wisdom to Salvation—II Tim. 3:15

The Bible, when read in the light of the faith of Jesus Christ and with trust in Him, gives sufficient instruction for salvation.

Restoration, Joy, Enlightenment—Ps. 19:7-9

The law of Jehovah is perfect, restoring the soul;
The testimony of Jehovah is sure, making wise the simple.
The precepts of Jehovah are right, rejoicing the heart;
The commandment of Jehovah is pure, enlightening the eyes.
The fear of Jehovah is clean, enduring forever;
The ordinances of Jehovah are true, and righteous altogether.

—F. H. Revell Co.

A Guide for Right Living—Ps. 119:9-11

THE SPIRIT'S LIGHT

The Spirit breathes upon the Word,
And brings the truth to sight;
Precepts and promises afford
A sanctifying light.

A glory gilds the sacred page
Majestic like the sun;
It gives a light to every age—
It gives, but borrows none.

—Wm. Cowper, F. H. Revell Co.

Brings God's Message—II Pet. 1:21

For the word is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Heb. 4:12.

JESUS, THE TEACHER

John 7:14-18

Some of the best stories of Jesus are those that refer to Him as a teacher. He knew human nature and how to convince people of the truth. Therefore He used parables, or homely illustrations of everyday life. When He talked to fishermen, He used stories of the sea; when He was with farmers He told of the seed and growing trees; when He was with shepherds, His figures were of sheep. His Sermon on the Mount contains the greatest set of helpful truths that have been assembled. The Lord Jesus is the greatest teacher that ever lived. He used many methods in His teaching. He knew how to satisfy every spiritual desire and longing.

Then again one of the most valuable lessons Jesus taught was that of humility. If we as a people, will humble ourselves before the Lord, only then can we expect our prayers to be heard and answered.

The Question Bee

(1) Why don't more people desire to learn from a teacher like Jesus? (2) What lessons has the great teacher taught you? (3) Why must we become like little children? (4) Jesus taught by example. Explain.

The Prayer List

Thank God for (a) Schools, S. S. and Churches; (b) Christian parents; (c) The Bible and its sacred teachings.

Ask God for (a) Christian teachers; (b) Sincere leaders in our churches; (c) Receptive hearts to heed our Lord's teaching.

CHRIST

He comes like morning light to flood my life with Love
He comes like rising tide to lift my life above temptation and sins of life.
He comes like snows of winter—so pure and white to cover all my sins,
He comes like dews of evening to refresh my soul;
He comes like flowers of springtime to break the crust of my hardheartedness and beautify life.

RELIEF

HELEN A. PENNER HOME FROM FRANCE

Helen A. Penner arrived at her Beatrice, Nebraska home June 3, after having done relief work in France for some time. At present the political situation in France is very uncertain, and also it is almost impossible to get food into France. She advised that the work in France is at present still continuing to a certain extent. Miss Penner gained ten pounds during the last two weeks.

Brother M. C. Lehman Reaches America

On June 1 Brother M. C. Lehman reached New York along with the American Embassy. Sailing on the S. S. Drottningholm, the group left Lisbon, Portugal, on May 15.

Brother Lehman says: "We were kindly treated though our food was short in fats and fruit. I want to thank the brotherhood for its prayer and interest and am most grateful to be home once again."

Brother Lehman has completed over two years of service in German and German-occupied countries. He left America on November 17, 1939, and returned December 23, 1940. Following a three months' stay in America, he returned to Germany in March 1941 and continued relief activities until the entrance of United States into the war. It is Brother Lehman's plan to spend some time resting and visiting among the brotherhood.

"Blitzes in Britain"

The relief notes of May 20 mentioned Brother Peter Dyck's reference to the lull in air raids over England. However, his latest letter, May 14, gives an account of his work in a bombed city following the recent air raid there.

Brother Dyck says: "The first day or two after the raid many people who themselves have suffered greatly seem to be in a daze, not caring much what happens to themselves and others." It was such people that Brother Dyck used his utility van to evacuate, in numbers more than he could remember. Besides evacuating people the van was used to transport cots and blankets to rest centers where people were temporarily quartered.

Services of Dr. Herbert Schmidt

Dr. Herbert Schmidt, of Newton, Kansas, latest Mennonite worker to arrive in Paraguay, is busy helping in the hospital in Philadelphia. Here, with his brother, Dr. John Schmidt, he is serving the medical needs of the Chaco Mennonite colonies. Dr. Herbert Schmidt's period of service is to be a brief one and is confined largely to surgical operations.

Brother Coffman reports on Relief in England

During March Brother John E. Coffman reports that seven different relief projects were carried on by the Mennonite workers in England. Besides the nursery home for evacuee children, the home for evacuee aged people and the help given to Spanish children in Plymouth, there were several hundred persons who benefited by the clothing distribution.

Appreciations for the relief given are numerous. Bro. Coffman quotes the following from a letter received:

> "I am writing on behalf of the mothers at Atlanta Hostel to thank you for your kindness in sending garments for our children. We would like you to convey our deep gratitude to our American friends. The clothes are of a superior quality for which we are thankful, as country life demands harder wear. Words do not express all we feel but believe us when we say, 'God bless our American friends.' "

C.P.S. CAMP NEWS

Camp Gardens

Interesting reports come from a number of camps about the planting of camp gardens by the boys during their spare time. A number of the camps have rented several acres, which they are planting in peas, beans, watermelons, lettuce, carrots, and other vegetables to be used in the camp dining halls.

Regional Camp Conference

Throughout the country regional conferences are being held for campees in the C.P.S. Camps. These meetings are attended by delegates from each camp and by National Service Board officials. The Pike View Peace News reports that the regional conference held at Newton, Kansas, on May 9 and 10 was a profitable one. Campees were brought up to date on the C. P. S. developments. Religious, social, and recreational problems were discussed and the delegates became better acquainted with the total Civilian Public Service program and its problems.

Changes in Camp Staffs

Bro. Guy Hershberger and Sister Hershberger will discontinue their services at the Medaryville, Indiana, Camp on June 1 as Educational Director and Matron respectively. They will be immediately replaced by Bro. Paul Bender and Sister Bender.

With Bro. and Sister Leland Bachman's appointment as Director and Matron to the North Fork, California, Camp, corresponding vacancies were made at the Henry, Illinois, Camp. Bro. Ora Keiser of Kalona, Iowa, has been appointed director at Henry and Sister Keiser will assume the duties of camp matron.

Change in Administration

Since their inception, the Marietta Camp in Ohio and the Cascade Locks Camp in Oregon have been jointly administered by the Mennonite Central Committee and the Brethren Service Committee. While these cooperative relationships have been harmonious, both committees have agreed that in the interest of more efficient administration each committee will assume total responsibility for one camp. As a result of this mutual agreement, the Marietta Camp is now Mennonite administered and the Cascade Locks is entirely in charge of the Brethren Service Committee.

ALCOHOL FACTS VERSUS DRINKING PROPAGANDA

TOPIC: Unmasking Alcoholic Propaganda

Prov. 21:17; 23:32 Isa. 5:20-23 Hosea 4:11 Joel 3:2,3
Eph. 5:18

Introduction

Our lesson purposes to set the facts of the effects of alcoholic drinks over against the propaganda of the drink manufacturers. If liquor advertising propaganda were not misleading, it would not sell the goods. In fighting the drink evil there must be a constant appeal to the facts. No one who opposes this curse need fear the facts. It is necessary to make these facts known to the growing youth of our nation. There is available a constantly increasing amount of scientific literature which reveals the dangers inherent in alcohol. Any one with an unbaised mind, can readily see and understand.

Drinking Propaganda

The manufacturers and sellers of liquor make large use of advertising in various forms. Often their advertisements are in attractive colors and portray whiskey and beer drinking amid glamorous and attractive surroundings. Their chief appeal is to the pleasure and satisfaction derived, especially through the sense of taste. Their radio advertising also appeals strongly along this line and this makes a real appeal to the unthinking. Other appeals dwell on the sociability—the social glass or bottle—and the imagined smartness of drinking. Words, phrases and pictures are used to make alcoholic drink appear alluring. They call evil good, put bitter for sweet (vs. 20). These advertisements are like bait in a trap. Satan always sugar-coats his poisons. Liquor propaganda is made as deceptive as possible. Some even try to give the impression that moderate drinking is honorable and quite free from danger and harm. They know full well that ALL habitual drinkers began in a moderate way.

Alcohol Facts

The writers of our lesson text were well acquainted with these. They saw the results. The nature of alcohol was the same then as it is now. Wherever liquor is sold, some of these facts are readily seen. Generally those who love strong drink become worse off than financially poor. They lose their possessions, their health, their lives and their souls. The whole matter of liquor drinking must be judged by the finished product (vs. 32). It finally produces devestating results because of the poison in liquor. The result is seen in bleary-eyed ill clothed, dirty, repulsive men and women; persons who have lost all self-respect. It is more foolish and dangerous to drink alcoholic liquors than to meddle with poisonous serpents. The writer of the Proverbs is teaching total abstinence from strong drinks. Alcohol gives one a feeling of importance and wisdom (vs. 21), a dangerous condition. It makes people less vigilant and careful and unwilling to listen to wise and good advise. It leads some to be utterly indifferent as to results because it shows no immediate effects (vs. 22). The liquor traffic has always been an ally of crime, racketeering and perverted justice. Drinking has made some officials to become corrupt.

Alcoholic drink affects the nervous system and this effect is the first to be observed in the drinker. It is a narcotic and has a deadening effect on the brain. It lessens the activity of living matter. The keenness of perception is dulled. The brain does not function normally and so some think they feel better after drinking. The narcotic effect of alcohol is very deceptive. It prevents the nervous guage from functioning properly. Tests have shown definitely that a person who has taken alcohol is less able to endure exertion than is the abstainer. Alcohol destroys vigorous resistence. Intemperate persons are the first to succumb to disease.

Wine drinking was very common in Paul's day. He warns the Ephesians against the social aspect of drinking, and the great temptation to excessive drinking. He warns against drunkenness, the result of self-abandonment and recklessness. Paul gives the one SURE remedy. Open the heart to the Holy Spirit so that He may fill it, then all desire for drink will be removed. The root reason for all drinking is the desire for it. Young people when tempted to drink (Golden Text) should understand well that the FIRST drink MUST be declined. There can be no second drink so long as the first is not taken.

What mistakes of good people have hindered the control or defeat of the liquor evil?

What is the ONLY RIGHT attitude of a Christian toward the PERSONAL use of alcoholic drink?

Why is the drinking habit growing among the young people of the teen-age? Who is responsible?

THE BEST RELIGION

"The best religion is that which smiles at the table, works industriously at the sewing machine, that is kind in the living room, that polishes the mirror till it shines, that prepares healthful, appetizing meals, that measures out a yard of material and not an inch too little."

CORRESPONDENCE

UPPER MILFORD MENNONITE CHURCH

Zionsville, Pennsylvania

It has been a long time since any correspondence has been sent in from our church. We are happy to report, however, that the work is progressing nicely and an increase in attendance is shown in both the church and Sunday school. We have had many inspirational services during the past months of this year.

One of the things that the community always looks forward to are the Union Lenten services. These services are always held the last three weeks of Lent, with an average attendance this year of 250. The three denominations of the community unite as one congregation and the united choirs render special music.

On April 24 the Bluffton College Quintet rendered a program of music which was very well rendered and received gladly by the congregation.

On Easter Sunday evening our church united with the Allentown congregation and observed "Upper Milford Night." This visit was returned when "Allentown Night" was observed in our church on May 14. Rev. Roland Rupp of Allentown was the guest speaker.

On May 24 Rev. F. A. Posselt from the German Lutheran Church of Allentown gave us a message in German. This service was very inspirational and was especially appreciated by the older members of the congregation.

Seven of the boys from our church have been called into military service within the past year. Every Sunday morning a brief period of silent prayer is held in honor of those who had to leave home, and a few of them home shores. We had the privilege of having three of these young men at our communion service held on Easter Sunday morning. Our prayer is that God may bless them and guide their steps during the days that we may be separated.

—Arlene Geissinger, Corr.

DEEP RUN MENNONITE CHURCH

Deep Run, Pennsylvania

Easter Dawn Service was held for the first time this year, although "Old Sol" did not appear. The attendance was large and a fine program was rendered. The Intermediate C. E. members took charge of the devotions, and several musical numbers were given by a Doylestown instrumental trio and junior choir of our church. Rev. Russel Mast delivered a brief but very interesting and appropriate message. About ninety people remained for a light breakfast of coffee, coca and buns at the close of the service. Commemoration of the Lord's Supper was held at the 10:30 A. M. worship service.

Sunday, May 24, Rev. A. M. Fretz ordained Rev. Mast as elder and Ely R. Fretz of Pleasant Valley, Pennsylvania as deacon of our congregation to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Levi S. Moyer. May the Lord bless them in their newly appointed office for His Name's honor and glory.

Quite a number of our members attended the C. E. convention held at West Swamp on Memorial Day. The meeting was splendid, and in spite of conditions was well attended. —Corr.

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

Dallas, Oregon

As summer is drawing nigh and once again we see the beauty of God's nature, and all around us is war and destruction, we wonder just how long God's beauty will be marred by man's sinfulness. However, we need not wonder long as we look into some of God's precious truths and read, "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power." II Thess. 1:7-9.

Good Friday evening we observed the Lord's Supper. Easter Sunday eleven of the catechism class who had accepted Christ as their Saviour were baptized and received into the church. In the evening the Young People's group rendered a musical program.

April 10 Beacon Bible School graduation exercises were held with a graduating class of seventeen. Five of the group were from our church—Helen Kliever, Maratha Janzen, Dorothy Leisy, Herman Schrag and Gay Rempel. Dr. John Mitchel of Portland gave the address, speaking on the class motto "Saved to Serve," Col. 3:24. May 3 Anna Hiebert and Simon Neufeld were married. The evening of May 12 the Junior-Intermediate group presented the mothers with a Mother's Day program, which was followed by short talks from the men in appreciation of mothers.

On May 16 we received word from Kathryn Dick, missionary at Orio, Nigeria B. W. Africa, saying that the food and water was scarce; also that they did not have enough teachers. At present only one teacher is there for one hundred girls. She asks that we in the United States faithfully uphold her in prayer so that she may be able to carry on the work.

Right after the Pacific Conference, which is to be held at Colfax, Washington this year, Rev. Homer Leisy is leaving for Mountain Lake, Minnesota, where he will hold evangelistic meetings for two weeks.

May 17 nine new members were received into church by letter. —Helen Thiessen, Corr.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We wish to announce that Rev. J. R. Barkman is still with the Oklahoma Bible Academy, although he will not be actively teaching this coming school year. Instead he is serving as Field Representative, and therefore is authorized to collect and receive funds for the school.

Will you support him both with your prayers and gifts.

—S. Moutet, President of the Board

PACIFIC DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Lord willing, the Pacific District Conference will convene from June 18 to 21 in the First Mennonite Church near Colfax, Washington. We herewith heartily invite delegates and friends to pray for the conference sessions and to be present to enjoy with us the blessings in store.

C. O.'s AND THE OCCUPATIONAL QUESTIONNAIRE

A good many of our brethren are wondering what one, who is conscientiously opposed to participation in warfare, may do in respect to registering his position on the occupational questionnaire where no provision is made to indicate such position. The Mennonite Central Peace Committee recommends that such person write out a statement that he is conscientiously opposed to participation in the war program or to occupational activity which is directly related thereto, and that such statement be filed with the questionnaire, or very soon thereafter.

—The Junior C. E. Convention of the Eastern District Conference is to be held in the Grace Mennonite Church at Lansdale, Pennsylvania, on Saturday, June 6.

—"Twelve of our people went to the new camp at North Fork last Tuesday in order to help prepare the place for the boys from the East," states the bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California.

—The ordination of Ronald Von Riesen into the ministry took place at an impressive ceremony in the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, on Sunday afternoon, May 31. There was a large crowd in attendance. Ministers participating on the program were Rev. J. M. Regier, Hillsboro, Kansas, Rev. Lester Hostetler, Bethel College, Rev. C. Penner and Rev. Walter Dyck of the First Mennonite Church near Beatrice. The Fellowship quartet sang several numbers. Rev. Von Riesen is to be pastor of the new Mennonite church to be organized at Walton, Kansas.

—East Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: The East Swamp Men's Brotherhood is erecting a cabin at the Men-O-lan Retreat grounds in memory of Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Gottshall. Rev. Gottshall was the former pastor at East Swamp.

The East Swamp Young People's Society won the Eastern District banner at the annual convention held at West Swamp on Saturday, May 30. The society had 57 of their members present. Miss Dorothy Dietz, General Conference Young People's Secretary, is president of the Young People's group at East Swamp. —H. D. Burkholder

—First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas: "The camp at Weeping Water, Nebraska, has asked the loan of eighty or ninety copies of the Mennonite Hymn Books, which we have recently replaced with the Mennonite Hymnary. We are glad that we can be of service in this way."

—Rev. Joel Lehman, Berne, Indiana, a prominent retired minister and farmer, died as a result of pneumonia May 30. He was eighty years old. He served as minister of the First Mennonite Church at Berne for a time, and also served several Ohio churches beginning in 1890.

—Churches which gave to all six phases of conference work during the first quarter of 1942 were: Eastern District, Bethany Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa., First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa., West Swamp Mennonite Church, West Swamp, Pa.; Northern District, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota, Salem Zion Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota; Pacific District, First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington. (The record of the Eastern District churches is incomplete, but it is assumed that each one concerned gave for peace work.)

—Married: Arnold Reimer and Edith Mae Linscheid. Miss Linscheid graduated from Bethel in 1941. Brother Reimer has in a very conscientious way helped to prepare material for The Mennonite. He handled the incoming material while the editor was gone to Minnesota. The couple will reside at Beatrice, Nebraska.

—Churches with highest per member giving during the first quarter of 1942 were: the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, with a total of $11.28 per member and the Bethel Mennonite Church, Wolf Point, Montana, with a total of $7.00 per member.

—"Let's not betray our boys in the C. P. S. camps. Get service stamps every Sunday; get certificates as often as you can. There now are two colors of stamps: red for C. P. S. and blue for War Sufferers' Relief. To help those in need, to bear our witness, get stamps and certificates regularly." Selected from church bulletin.

—P. A. Penner will be at the young people's retreat at Spokane, Washington, in July, and then he will visit the Pacific District Churches.

—Dr. and Mrs. Wiebe left for Philadelphia Tuesday in order to be ready for emergency work of relief under the direction of the American Friends Service Committee. Mrs. Wiebe went with the doctor to be with him until he was called to go. We are glad that they could go together. We are also grateful for the timely and challenging message which Dr. Wiebe gave us last Sunday evening." —bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Reedley, Calif.

—Rev. Frank Harder, who was ordained to the ministry recently brought the message in the First Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota, on May 31.

—The Sixth annual young people's rally was held at the Ebenezer Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio, over the week-end of Decoration Day. Dr. John Herrman of Chicago, chairman of the Christian Youth League of America was the special speaker. He has a message for every class of people, the talented, saved, and lost. Many young people's minds were enriched to a deeper spiritual living. —Corr.

—Aganetha Fast has left for a tour of Canadian churches. Missionary Isaacs plan to spend most of the summer in Mt. Lake, Minnesota.

—First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas: Rev. John E. Renich recently spoke to the Young People's Endeavor and also brought a short message in the evening service. A bulletin of this church states, "According to the ruling of our church constitution and custom of many years standing, this Sunday will again be given over to the reading of 'The Articles of Faith'."

—"Our director, John F. Schmidt, received word last Friday forenoon from Dr. H. A. Fast, General Director of Mennonite C. P. S. camps . . . that with his consent he is to be transferred to Colorado to open C. P. S. Camp No. 33 at Fort Collins, Colorado." Whispering Pines (published at Marrietta, Ohio)

—A young people's rally was held at the Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minesota, May 31-June 5. Rev. Erland Waltner was the opening speaker Sunday afternoon. Dan Toevs from Wolf Point, Montana, spoke in the evenings.

—Johannesthal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas; The congregation has made extensive repairs on the meeting house. New concrete front steps and sidewalks have been built. Coming home from Fortuna, Missouri, sometime ago, Rev. and Mrs. Regier found a new linoleum on their kitchen floor, placed there by the sisters of the church.

—The First Mennonite Church, north of Butterfield, Minnesota, is putting a fell basement under its meeting house. Everyday for a week more than fifteen men with shovels, tractors, and scrapers cooperated as brethren in this project. It is expected that the outlay for this improvement will be more than $1,750.00. The constitution of this church stipulates that before any construction work can be begun 80 per cent of the estimated cost must already be in the church treasury. Rev. Victor Sawatzky, pastor, worked right along with the members in digging, etc.

BELIEF AND FRUITS

Jesus' teachings would guard us from the many half-truths we so often insist upon. He brought the whole truth, for He was the truth. He called men to follow Him, to believe on Him. That was fundamental. He used men's faith in Him and not certain works by them to save them from their sins. He insisted that men have a change of heart, for without a right attitude towards Him they could not grow in perfection (Matt. 5:48). However, Jesus was not so shallow as to believe in getting the decisions of men and then leaving them without commandments or teachings with which they might grow in Christian perfection.

Teacher that He was, He expected results, fruits. By their fruits and not by their professions would his actual disciples (those who really learned something from Him) be known. Speaking of the final examination (Matt. 25:35-36) He mentions some very specific acts. No one shall pass as His disciple, regardless of how loudly he may have proclaimed Christ as Saviour, who has not given definite expression to the definite impressions (teachings) which Christ seeks to make.

It was not Christ's purpose to leave re-born men stranded in a vague mist of good intentions. He would give them teachings with which to implement their good intentions. He wants men to accept Him as Saviour and then to live His teachings. He does not want disciples who "polish the apple." He wants love and loyalty that issue in fruitful living.

It is so easy to take shelter under a "belief in Christ" and then to forget about definite fruit. It is very soothing and comforting to say to oneself, "Yes, I believe in Christ," but it is rather pricking and disconcerting to review the fruits which Christ expects to issue from belief. Many are tempted to stop at the decision-for-Christ stage. Last Sunday I heard a lay minister in his prayer make a statement something like this, "For we know, O God ,that we can only serve Thee by serving others." That was clear thinking. It expressed the truth that love for God needs to become visible in concrete acts.

Let us think of Jesus as a great violin teacher who wants many pupils and who wants to train them to become expert violin players for all eternity. Let us think of the violin as representating life. Now some individual may heed the call of this Teacher and decide to play his violin according to the instructions of the Master. The student may go further than making his own decision. He may win others to a decision to accept his Master as teacher. But all of this is insufficient to fulfill the Master's main purpose. To fulfill the Master's goal it is necessary that that pupil and every other pupil actually learn to play the violin according to the Master's standards. Each pupil is to become more and more perfect by eliminating all mistakes (sins) and by concentrating on the right habits (ways of righteousness). He must heed his Master's teachings to do that. As each learns to play his violin in such a way, each achieves that skill (holiness) which makes his playing very winning and inspirational, and which brings great joy to His Master, whose great desire is that each violin be played in a perfect way for all eternity.

There are many who have decided to play the violin. What about the practice? —rw.

THYSELF

"Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach:
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another's soul wouldst reach
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed."

How About It?

A Presbyterian church sent the following questionnaire to the Rev. David H. Scanlon of Durham, North Carolina, concerning a candidate for its pulpit:

1. How old is he, and is he married or single?

2. How many children has he, and what are their ages?

3. Are any of his children unruly or uncontrollable?

4. Does wife take active part in church work?

5. How long has he been preaching?

6. What churches has he served, and where?

7. Give name of clerk of session or some prominent member in each church served?

8. Where was he educated? Is he a D. D.?

9. Is he orthodox?

10. Has he any oratorical ability?

11. Does he speak fluently or does he hesitate? Has he any impediment in his speech?

12. Does he read his sermons or confine himself closely to his manuscript?

13. Is he a deep, doctrinal, logical preacher and teacher, or of the shallow, popular type?

14. What is height, weight, build? Portly or slender?

15. Has he a strong personality, and is he a graceful speaker?

16. How is he socially? Does he make friends?

17. Is he a good pastor?

18. Is he studious or of the opinion little preparation is necessary for his people?

19. Is he deeply spiritual?

20. Is he a good Sunday School man?

21. Is he level-headed, cautious, and tactful?

22. Any musical talent in family?

23. Is he wide awake, aggressive, and progressive?

24. How long has he served present charge and what salary does he receive?

25. Are there any invalids in family?

26. Why does he desire a change?

27. Has he any deformity or physical defect?

Dr. Scanlon's Reply

"I have answered your enclosed questionnaire as best I could and return herewith. If I can serve you further in this matter, please feel free to call on me. I would suggest, however, that I would be in a better position to advise you as to this brother's adaptability to your needs if I had information on the following points covered by the questionnaire found below; or, if you prefer, you may fill out same and enclose to the brother in question as it may assist him in arriving at his duty in the matter":

1. Why did your last pastor leave?

2. Has there ever been any dissension in your church?

3. What salary do you pay, and is it paid promptly?

4. Are your members faithful in attending public worship as a whole?

5. If not, what per cent are "absent spirits"?

6. How is the midweek prayer service patronized?

7. What per cent of your elders and deacons lead in prayer?

8. Is the congregation responsive to the pastor's leadership?

9. How many tithers in your church?

10. Do the people enjoy strong sermons on stewardship and missions?

11. Are the members cautious and tactful in dealing with the pastor?

12. What is the average height and build of the congregation?

13. Are they generally of pleasing personality?

14. Do they prefer deep doctrinal sermons, or a spiritual, helpful, livable gospel?

15. Will the people as a whole throw themselves zealously into soul winning with the pastor?

16. How many pastors have you had, and the length of each pastorate?

17. Are there any chronic kickers in the church?

18. Does the congregation ever discipline members for drunkenness, gossip, dishonesty, or the neglect of such Christian duties as church attendance, forgotten family altars, etc?

19. What proportion of your church offerings goes to missions, and what do you spend on your own church?

20. Would you recommend your church as an attractive and inviting field for a pastor?

21. Are the people willing to follow their pastor, or are they inclined to let him go alone?

22. Do the parents accompany their children to Sunday School, or do they send them?

23. Do your people have family pews in church or do the children go home after Sunday School?

24. Do your people criticize their pastor before their children, or do they pray for him with them?

25. What constructive work has your church ever done in your community?

26. How many souls has your membership led to Christ since your church has been without a pastor?

27. What special opportunities does your church offer for the investment of a minister's life above that of other churches?

We like the idea. In fact, Dr. Scanlon's questionnaire provides an excellent check list for any congregation.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. WINFIELD FRETZ

COMPULSORY BROTHERHOOD

It has been characteristic of Mennonites for centuries to practice mutual aid in a wide variety of ways as a manifestation of Christian brotherhood. In Europe where settlements were made in villages it was common to have mutual insurance societies, community store houses, stock buying and breeding societies, protection societies for orphans and widows, old people's homes and a number of community owned projects such as common pasture lands and herds of sheep. In America during the pioneer days mutual aid was quite extensively practiced, but within recent decades the general American tendency toward individualism has manifested itself in Mennonite communities to a considerable degree. Demonstrations of voluntary Christian brotherhood have been on the decrease.

Today

The present world crisis is bringing about situations that may make a good deal of sharing with each other necessary. There are many instances in which we must begin to work together whether we like it or not. It is regrettable that we have not been willing to work together more wholeheartedly on a voluntary basis in time of peace. Adversity has its blesings, and the rationing programs and shortages today may be illustrations of this point. It may remind us of the blessings God had abundantly bestowed upon us, but which we had so frequently taken for granted. It may remind us that some people have always had the limited quantities, or less, than the small amounts now rationed to us. They were limited because of prosperity. It may remind us of the Simple Life poverty, but we forgot them in our enjoyment of that has been in theory a religious and social ideal of our church but one which has been vainly forgotten in times of peace and plenty. It may remind us that God will take away the talents of those who are unwise stewards as He so often has done in the past.

Blessings

As a result of the compulsory program of rationing of sugar, tires, and gasoline we shall stay at home much more than we have been. This will mean an opportunity to enjoy more family life, to get better acquainted with our neighbors, and to play and plan activities in the home community instead of running all over the countryside.

Since Sunday driving will be out of the question and people are at home during the week it may actually result in large church attendance. It is a shocking thought, but not at all impossible, that people may again be glad to walk two or three miles to church as our parents used to do before the days of the automobile. The church should avail itself of this opportunity to serve its community well on week days as well as Sundays, so that leisure time activities will not be left entirely to commercial and secular agencies.

Farmers may again work together in closer bonds of union. Instead of six or eight neighbors all driving their own vehicles to town one man may pick up a group of his neighbors and take them to town or even bring their orders back from town for them. Jobs such as hauling, butchering, threshing, and building may once more become a neighborhood project instead of an individually engineered and paid one. There are many things we don't like about the compulsory aspects of the present crisis. We hope it will not last more than a few years at most. But we must make the most of it, and if we rediscover a richer family neighborhood life, a finer sense of Christian brotherhood, this critical period will have had at least a few redeeming aspects.

WE LIVE IN AN AGE

Which thinks that being lost in the woods is a new freedom.

Which, having made a mess of civilization, petulantly cries, "Why doesn't God do something?"

Which, because it subtracts faith, multiplies fear.

In which men demand education for their children, but decline discipline for themselves.

When desire is deity and realization is futility.

Which seeks to settle every problem by denying its existence—the threat of war and the reality of sin, for instance.

Which puts the highest premium on knowledge, but when it gets it, it doesn't know what to do with it.

Which seems to think it has robbed death of its sting by transforming the cemetry into a "memorial park."

Which boasts of its unbelief, instead of being ashamed.

Which thinks a life daring which is only delirious.

Which believes religious fakers and follows political quacks, but thinks itself too intelligent to accept the Word of God.

Where youth boasts it is hard-boiled when it is merely half-baked.

Which prepares for everything even for a "rainy day," but fails to prepare for eternity.

CABLE MESSAGE FROM INDIA

"P. H. Richert:

P. W. Penner."

The last name must be Miss Kuehnys, who for some years worked in another mission in the eastern part of India, where the war danger is great.

The other three come home on furlough. Let us pray for a safe trip. —P. H. Richert

GRAFTING AND PRUNING

"I am the true vine," Jesus tells us. In the process of building the Christian church in our Basna area it is almost a constant "sea-sawing" between joy and sorrow; between healing and pain. In 1941 through the whole year 220 souls were grafted into the vine—coming into the Christian church in this area. These are branches. Many of them promise fruitbearing. But at the same time there must be and is a constant pruning. A few, thank God, a very few, of the 1941 branches have had to be pruned off. But several more of the older branches have had to be cut off. Here is a brother who stole a wife for his son in a heathenish manner. Several foolish weak branches supported him in this. All had to be cut off. There is another brother who failed to observe the moral standard of the Christian church; so he had to be cut off. Over there is another brother who played devil in another man's home, falling in love with that man's wife. He had to be cut off. In this way we could enumerate quite a few more. But, thanks to God, these cut off branches are not all dead and dry. Several who were pruned off have repented and have made restitution, and have again been grafted unto the vine. Other branches are in the mood of repentance but are still under punishment by the church. These, we feel sure, will soon be grafted in again. A few branches are still stubborn and proud; not yet willing to repent. May God's holy spirit overpower them before they dry up and cannot be grafted in any more.

"I Went Again to Salitaria"

"Well, what is there about Salitaria?," somebody may ask. Some of you readers will recall that I told you when on furlough how I was chased out of a village called Salitaria, in 1923. My Indian preacher brethren and I approached the village. The village chief and the village priest with a hoard of followers met us at the entrance of the village and bid us to turn right around and go back where we came from. We did. They wanted nothing about or from Christ.

Now in 1942 in January, 19 years later, it was again my chance to go to that village. Various thoughts and memories flashed through my mind as my Christian brother evangelist, Abhaiyadas, and I approached the village. We sent straight to. the Christian church in that village. (There has now been a Christian church in that village for several years already). After greetings and devotions with the brethren, I asked about the past. One of our Christian brethren had been in that gang in 1923. He recalled the incident. "Where is the village chief?" I asked. Answer: "The old chief is dead, and the young chief is our friend." So replied our Christian brethren. "Where is the village priest?" was my next question. Answer: "He is still living, but he has become poor and humble. He used to rich and proud and haughty (which I so well recalled), and had many servants. Now people don't support him and he is dejected." I said: "Let's go to meet him." Our Christians took me to the temple. But all was closed and a neighbor said the priest was out herding the few cattle he had left. The village chief came out to greet us and was most friendly to me, offering to help me in any way he could be of use to me. After a brief friendly conversation with the chief we bid him good-bye and left. At the outskirts of the village under a large shade tree I jumped off my bicycle once more; for it was the spot of the 1923 episode. Here I offered a brief prayer of gratitude, promising my heavenly Father not to let discouragement get the better of me in case of adversity. Yes indeed, "My Father worketh hitherto, and so do I." These are the words of the Master. Let us follow Him on and on.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Donovan E. Smucker, Wadsworth, Ohio

JUNE 25—"I the Lord search the heart...." Jer. 17:10

Towering above the chaos and corruption of his day, Jeremiah presents four pioneer convictions: first, there was but one God—Jehovah (monotheism); second, he preached the futility of mere form and ceremonies (justification by faith); third, he boldly proclaimed that Jehovah would survive without Jerusalem (separation of church and state); and, last but by no means least, Jeremiah affirmed the moral and religious responsibility of each individual (personal salvation). The gods of this prophet's time were all national and collective: Baal was the god of Tyre, Marduk the god of Babylon, Chemosh the god of Assyria; even Jehovah was almost limited to Jerusalem. In vain men have tried to make a tribal god out of Jesus; in vain men have tried to avoid personal responsibility through the rituals of church or state. Haunting these failures is this text: "I the Lord search the heart."

JUNE 26—"And God said, let us make man in our image after our likeness." Gen. 1:26

Roy L. Smith, the editor of the Methodist magazines, read this text and said: "With the utterance of these words the seeds of democracy were germinated." In contrast to the exalted conception of man found in the very first chapter of the Bible is modern doubt. One such cynic declared that "man is an ape who chatters to himself of kinship with archangels while filthily he digs for groundnuts." Scriptural Christianity, too, has a realistic conception of man's sin, avoiding the shallow optimism which has dominated our culture since the 19th century. But, thank God, ours is not a dead-end religion. Our duty as followers of the one, true God is to show mankind the Way by which one realizes this Godly creation. In fact, history is the record of the agonizing struggle to realize this creation—a struggle still continuing before our very eyes.

JUNE 27—"... thou has sold thyself to work for evil in the sight of the Lord." I Kings 21:20

The 21st chapter of I Kings contains a story with breathtaking relevency to our day. For, in the story of the dishonest, crafty pagan Jezebel and her weak but eventually repentent husband, Ahab, Elijah reveals a great truth: paganism and injustice are siamese twins. Add to this story and this revealed truth, the twelvth chapter of I Kings. Here we see haughty, luxury-loving Rehoboam attending what was to be his coronation. But, the people will have none of his religion unless he promises to be a just servant of the people—better than his ruthless father Solomon. When the king decides to follow the advice of his corrupt court-followers and replace the whips with scorpions, the Hebrews revolted. The king, it is recorded, "made speed" to flee from Shechem to Jerusalem. A total of 25,000,000 Bibles are sold every year; 25,000,000 seeds of justice are sown through stories like these. Thank God for prophetic religion.

JUNE 28—"Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins." I Pet. 4:8

Would it be too strong to say that there is a cult of intolerance in the General Conference, that is to say, a group of folks who are perennially becoming spiteful, bitter, divisive, self-righteous; folks like the Psalmist observed with "adder's poisin under their lips." (Ps. 140:3) Or, again like the Psalmist who said: "they gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." (Ps. 69:21) Sometimes one wonders if these texts ought not be made required reading at the start of every day and then read in unison Sunday morning in church. And why not use this text from Ephesians 4:31 for the benediction? "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice." Amen!

JUNE 29—"Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." I Sam. 15:3

Obviously, this is a difficult passage for Mennonites loyal to the historic peace testimony. Clearly, here is ruthlessness which extended to suckling infants, an atrocity even Hitler has not been charged with. Many years ago Menno Simons wrestled with this problem; here are his own words: "I am well aware that the tyrants who boast themselves Christians attempt to justify their horrible wars and shedding of blood, and would present it as a good work by referring us to Moses, Joshua, etc. But they do not reflect that Moses and his successors, with their iron sword, have served out their time and that Jesus Christ has now given us a new commandment and has girded our loins with another sword... The defenders of war and blood shed do not consider that they use the sword of war contrary to all evangelical Scripture against their own brethren, namely those of like faith with them who have received the same baptism and have broken the same bread with them and thus are members of the same body." (Complete Works, Part I, p. 198)

JUNE 30—"This is the way, walk ye in it?" Isa. 30:20

A soldier in the first World War was dying a horrible, choking death as a victim of a gas attack. Suddenly, he motioned to the chaplin to come and hear his last will and testament. In deep anguish he pieced together this haunting sentence: "I wish my enemy had known less about chemistry and more about God!" Today, there is an urgency, an imperative necessity about the Christian faith never known in any previous epoch of history. Our Lord is the Lord of history. Or, to put it more simply, God works through men and women, if—and this if is decisive—we place, full child-like faith in his omnipotent Way. God has not abdicated. He is still reigning. It is a man-made illusion, making it appear that history belongs to Caesar. Alas! if man were not so busy building the blood-stained highway to Armageddon, he might look up and observe the boundless grace of God saying: "This is the way, walk ye in it?"

WHAT DOES YOUR ANXIETY DO?

It does not empty tomorrow of its sorrow; but it empties today of its strength. It does not make you escape the evil; it makes you unfit to cope with it when it comes. It does not bless tomorrow and it robs today. For every day has its own burden. God gives us power to bear all the sorrow of His making; but He does not give us the power to bear the sorrows of our own making, which the anticipation of sorrow most assuredly is. —Ian Maclaren.

DO YOUR WORK GLADLY

How often life irks us. We are unhappy, and the result is that our work is not of the highest quality.

How often we speak of our ailments, perhaps magnifying them, seeing the dark side of life.

Yes, we need to be star-finders and not stain-finders. We need to look up and not down. We need to recapture the glory of mere living.

Ideal conditions exist nowhere. The only job that looks perfectly satisfactory is the one that someone else has. But if we got the same job, somehow it would lose its glamor.

And then, if conditions are not as we would have them, we can always improve them. That's what we are in the world for. Jesus and His followers down through history have improved men and conditions.

O for the simple gift of living, of seeing each day as a new opportunity for increased service. Serving others in love is the simple recipe which adds so much zest to life.

When we feel ourselves slipping, let us use a little sand. When we come to the end of our rope, let us tie a knot and hang on. There is no such thing as an impossible situation in life. —Selected

GLEANINGS FROM HOME MISSION CORRESPONDENCE

From a letter from Rev. Erwin Albrecht, 1500 West 72nd Place, Chicago Illinois, we quote:

"There has been a definite increase in First Mennonite Church, Sunday School attendance. So far this year the average has been well over the hundred mark. On Easter morning there was a brief program with an attendance of 127. Last Sunday the attendance was 111. However, on the 1st of May, which is moving time, we will lose about ten scholars."

Calvary Mennonite Church, Quarryville, Pa. A paragraph showing the enlarged range of concern for souls is indicated in a letter from Rev. Sylvan Lehman.

"Besides the ministry of our congregation here, the Eight District Sunday School Presidency has brought additional work. This district is endeavoring to formulate a plan by which an evangelistic survey of the whole territory would be made. The ministers have met once and will meet again in about a month. In the meanwhile a committee is to prepare plans, etc. for adoption when the ministers meet. It is our hope as Sunday School workers and ministers that much good may be forthcoming in this endeavor. Such a task upon such a wide scope will present its difficulties to be sure. Some sort of evangelistic endeavor is to follow the survey."

Rev. J. P. Glanzer, Winton, California writes in part:

"Our work is going on as usual. Rev. W. A. Regier, pastor of the Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, held meetings here the latter part of January and we were wonderfully blessed and strengthened. We intend to start a two-week's daily vacation Bible school in June, cooperating with the other Mennonite Churches. I know we need to work and pray more than even in these dark days. May we be ready when He comes. II Thess. 4:17-18."

From a letter from Rev. Johann P. Bueckert, Gretna, Manitoba, we glean the following:

After the Week of Prayer, according to the wish of the congregation, I engaged in systematic personal work. During a period of six weeks, in cooperation with another minister brother, we have made visits to almost every home. If at all possible we would hold a conversation with each individual in that home about his or her salvation. Usually we started this type of work on a Tuesday and carried it on through Thursday, leaving Monday and Saturday for personal preparation. This same type of personal work was done last year in the winter time, and it is a source of real satisfaction to be able to report that it was truly worth while. Almost everyone desires it that someone speak to them about their salvation and how they are going on with the Lord and to ask them whether they are growing in their faith... Frequently interesting and far-reaching questions are asked and discussed with the aid of the Word of God."

Rev. Jacob Toews, Glenlea, Manitoba, reports among other things:

"Received the request to go to Clear Lake, Manitoba, to visit the young men who are serving the government in labor camps. I spent February 21 and 22 in the two camps and preached three times in the English language."

A report by Rev. W. Martens, Grantham, Alberta, contains among other items this significant paragraph:

"Our journey with Brother C. D. Harder took us through Hussar, where we were enabled to visit in various homes and encourage the believers, as well as conduct public worship. One Sunday we stopped off at Tofield. We had been invited to assist in the ordination of two men as ministers of the gospel: David Regehr and Gerhard Franz. It was also our privilege to lead in the observance of Home Communion with ninety-three participating. The church at Tofield is being built up in their faith and devotion to the Lord."

ALBERTA COMMUNITY CHURCH

First Quarter, 1942

At the beginning of the year we opened a combined Bible class and leadership training school for six weeks. The response was very good. Nine teachers and S. S. workers satisfactorily finished their courses to receive certificates from the International Council of Religious Education for their work. We took the Life of Christ offered in the first series course. All seemed to enjoy it very much. Our group was commended for their initiative and fine work by the Religious Education Department of the Portland Council of Churches.

Some of the events that took place during the quarter were: a program by the ladies trio, a parent-get-acquainted program and social, a gospel program by the Multnomah School of the Bible, a program by a male quartet and chorus from the C. P. S. camp, and a week of evangelistic services conducted by Walter Duff Jr., pastor of the Kenilworth Presbyterian church of this city. He was recommended to us by Rev. Homer Leisy of Dallas. We enjoyed a blessed gospel feast together during the week.

During the month of March we made a religious survey of our district. We covered about twenty-five blocks and made some 250 calls during the month. Most all of these calls have been put on cards to be filed. We hope to continue this from week to week. It has given us an insight as to how many churchless homes there are in our community. Whenever interest was shown we have called on that home the second time or have sent them our church bulletins. My time has been taken up largely with personal work. We have a large field and one that needs to be worked hard. We hope to do so in a systematic way.

Etta Davis has organized an after-school Bible class. Approximately ten to twelve children attend it regularly. She sometimes becomes discouraged with the work here because the children at times are very rowdy. It requires lots of patience and stamina. To me this presents one of the greatest challanges of our day. I have not heard the Home Mission Report, but I do hope that we will be able to keep Miss Davis here in Portland to help us in our work. We need her very badly to continue this work, especially, if we want to expand it. Our church is very grateful to the Home Mission Board that it has made it possible for her to be here.

IF

How different if would have been—
IF you had only kept silent.
IF you had listened to good advise.
IF you had been more patient.
IF you had frankly apologized.
IF you had acted with prudence.
IF you had shunned that bad investment.
IF you had shown more sympathy
IF you had avoided that accident.
IF you had taken daily exercises.

How different it would have been—
IF you had not run into debt.
IF you had always been on time.
IF you had promptly declined.
IF you had started early.
IF you had put it into writing.
IF you had said the right word.
IF you had eaten in moderation.
IF you had stayed at home.

How different it would have been—
IF you had guarded your health.
IF you had been industrious.
IF you had recognized your fault.
IF you had simply acquiesced.
IF you had not blundered.
IF you had persevered.
IF you had given more generously.
IF you had not been stubborn.
IF you had daily prayed. —(Anon).

"LORD, OPEN OUR EYES!"

By P. A. Penner

The fourth verse of the fourth chapter of John is frequently passed over without much thought, whereas in reality it is, together with the rest of the story of this chapter, highly instructive. The road used by pilgrims to and from Judaea was on the east side of Jordan and not through Samaria. Jews avoided Samaria and contact with Samaritans. Furthermore, the road through Samaria from Judaea to Galilee was in reality no road, but only a footpath, rough and mountainous. The writer traveled this road in 1908. It was rocky and here and there so precipitous that he had to dismount from his pony frequently and lead the horse. Only a few hours of this sort of traveling was tiresome. I am not surprized that our Lord was "wearied with His journey." Then why this tiresome journey, why "must needs go through Samaria," when a smoother road on the east side of Jordan with its many pilgrims as companions could have been taken?

I suggest that He took this road because He recognized the value of One soul. Here in Samaria was a woman that needed peace of heart and needed it badly, and so Jesus who always did those things that please Him (my Father, John 8:29) undertook this tiresome journey to lead a sinner to Himself.

I would further suggest that Christ recognized the value of the opportunity. Christ had every reason to stretch on the grass or at least rest. He might have ignored the woman that came to fill her pitcher. What is a woman (in the Orient) worth anyhow? Instead of that He grasped the first (and perhaps the only) opportunity and unassumingly opened the conversation that led to her salvation. I suggest again that Christ recognized the potentialities of the human soul. Ordinarily, people knowing this woman and her filthy life, as Christ did, vs. 18, would have refrained from speaking to her. Even the disciples "marvelled that He talked with the woman." People might have said,—this is a low woman, a sinner, what hope is there of changing her, let alone seeing any dormant worthwhile potentialities in her future? Christ thought otherwise and the result was a group movement towards Christ in Samaria.

Is there a message for us in this interesting story? I think that there is. Have Christians today the vision, passion and compassion for such who "are bought with a price" but have not yet appropriated Christ's sacrifice? Have we failed to remember how God was able to make a Paul out of a Saul? To make a Hadley out of a drunken sot? To make a Billy Sunday out of a profane baseball player?

"Lord, open our eyes that we may see."

Mennoitnes! Our Land In The Future

By Frank Kauffman *

Through a rapid survey of history it becomes evident that the ownership of land, the fixed, immobile surface of the earth, has been always a great desire in men. The ancient empires grew up slowly where the earth could be cultivated, and they derived their wealth from the soil to an even greater extent than do we. In all the years that Europe was feudal the land relationship of noble and peasant, with certain rights and duties as between them, and law developing to perpetuate it, was paramount. England was first to emerge from feudal restrictions, doing it slowly, while the French Revolution of 1789 was the signal on the Continent for great moves away from an outgrown system. Other countries followed, and the advance has been great, and although much feudal law remains in this increasingly industralized world, it is not here that its outmodedness should be pointed out.

Upon this scene the vast Americas became available to Europeans, and forthwith we came. Like the theme in Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the mounting determination for self-expression after hammer-strokes of fate driving them to despair, the Mennonites, coming from German Land, as Goethe calls it, the very place from which Beethoven derived his human inspirations, imprisoned in a form called music, moved forward with the humanist crescendo of their day. English law directed its settlement, and the first Ten Amendments to the Constitution of the United States guided its personal liberties. English legal procedure has made for faster justice and greater concern for the individual and his privacy and solitude than the basic Roman law or Germanic developments.

In Europe, the Mennonites from their earliest formation have stayed on the land and have moved where land was good, with the exception of the lower Rhine, where in the Lowlands, some of them became the leading merchants and bankers. But basically Mennonites are land-minded. Because they settled in groups of their own people they usually received grants of land outright from the country in which they lived. In this way there was no aristocracy to which they were subject, a condition which is necessary for a true peasantry, and so Mennonites were not peasants. But land-minded just the same, their sensitivity to this basic factor in human affairs directed them to the very best parts of agriculture Europe and later the United States and Argentina and Paraguay.

In this country, from Pennsylvania westward to Central Illinois and then fanwise into the heart of the nation the Mennonites trod. Now therefore the var-

HOME AGAIN

By Helen A. Penner

Even though the sugar is rationed here, too, home looks pretty sweet to me! After nine months away the home folks and the home town are a welcome sight. The last few days in Lisbon we found ourselves humming, "Coming home—on the Drattningholm, coming home—on the Drattningholm."

At first we were told we would have to wait for the second voyage bringing home diplomats and repatriates, but one morning after we had "haunted" the American consulate a number of days we were told that they would make room for us on the first trip. We almost lost our dignity as we gave vent to our joy. The thought of waiting a month or so in Lisbon had not been relished by any of us.

Dr. M. C. Lehman, who is the director of Mennonite European Relief and who has been personally supervising relief work in Poland, returned on the boat, too. He had been interned in Germany five months, so he was extremely happy to have the opportunity to return at this time. Seven Quaker delegates who had been working in France were also in the group. There were almost a thousand people on the ship; so we were very crowded.

We heard many interesting stories. Admiral Leahy, our ambassador from Vichy ,France, was assigned the same life boat that I was, I discovered the day we had drill.

A number on board became seasick. The malady seemed to attack passengers indiscriminately. I was very fortunate, and although we were on the ocean almost eleven days I can say that I thrived on it. Perhaps, the fact that I turned down offers to go sight-seeing that last afternoon in Lisbon and napped instead helped to account for this. I often wished that we would have a storm, as the ocean is so majestic and beautiful when it is stormy. The passengers who became seasick at the slightest motion of the ship were about ready to throw me overboard when they heard such remarks!

There were no sad farewells as we pulled away. The employees of the ship said that it had been quite different with the group that they had brought from America. They were not at all anxious to return to Europe.

The Drattningholm is a one class boat, so we could and did roam at will. My favorite spot was at the very front of the boat where I could watch it cut the water and let the breezes blow through my hair. At times we could feel the salty spray on our cheeks. Those were carefree days—sunning ourselves on top deck in the deck chairs that Dr. Lehman was fortunate to be able to get for us, chatting with our fellow passengers, swapping tales of our experiences, reading, napping, promenading on one of the decks, or listening to the radio. Those hours on top deck left in their wake a fine crop of freckles and reddened and tanned skin.

Most of the passengers had come from countries in which food conditions were acute. They surprised and worried the employees on the boat by eating so much. Instead of making choices of the food on the menu we ate everything listed. I gained at least ten pounds in those two weeks after I left France! Butter, sugar, eggs, milk, and anything containing chocolate looked especially good to us.

We were on board Pentecost Sunday and Memorial Sunday. Rev. Hermon, the young pastor of the American Church in Berlin, was in charge of the services which were enjoyed by those present. Dr. Lehman read the Scriptures on Pentecost Sunday. Rev. Hermon mentioned that if the Unknown Soldier would be resurrected and see what is going on now he would say, "This is not that for which I died."

Three submarines were sighted, but we did not know of this until after we had docked. The ship was painted white, and the name "Drattningholm Diplomat" was painted on its sides and on top deck in black letters several feet high. In the evening the boat was well-lighted. There were special lights on the outside so that it could easily be identified.

Can you imagine the excitement when we sighted the buildings on Long Island about four P. M. Sunday, May 31? At seven P. M. we dropped anchor in New York Harbor. It was tantalizing to be so close and not be permitted to step ashore. The Statue of Liberty could easily be seen and we could see people on the shore. The boat was carefully guarded all night, so there wasn't even a chance of swimming to shore. We did not dock until the next morning.

Ernest Bennett and Mrs. Lehman met us at the pier. We had been vaccinated and "temperatured" beforehand, so those requirements were out of the way. After we located our baggage we found an inspector to examine it, and then were free to leave. At 4:40

P. M. I was on a train speeding on my way to Beatrice, Nebraska.

I am very thankful for God's protecting care during these unusual experiences and that I reached home safely and in good health. Psalm 91:1 "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty" was my guiding star.

ATTENTION C. E. WORKERS

Mrs. Gerhard Friesen, 700 East Broadway, Newton, Kansas, edits the senior C. E. material. She would like very much to get reactions from those who use it. Won't you, C. E. worker, please take a pen as soon as you have read this and answer the following questions and send the answers to her.

1. What part of the program material in the Senior C. E. department do you use? 2. Do you use any of the suggestions that are given under "Worship Service?" 3. Do you use the "Suggested Topics for Short Talks?" 4. Are the questions for discussion of any value? 5. Are the illustrations retold at your meetings? 6. What use, if any, do you make of the "Leader's Introduction" and "Facts for Study" sections? 7. Would you like to see more poetry or short thought nuggets instead of these sections? 8. Would you like to have some books suggested for book reviews once in a while? 9. Should the offerings for C. E. projects, as for peace work, the support of Ernst Harder, etc., be given for certain Sundays of the month? 10. How often does your C. E. meet? 11. How many of your C. E. members read The Mennonite?

WEALTH

I was thinking tonight of a Russian Mennonite family who came into our community after the late world war. They were stripped of all their possessions and could not have gotten into our land if someone had not sent them money to come. They were given a few household goods and they set up housekeeping in our community. Every Sunday night as they walked part of the way home from services this Russian brother and sister stopped at the man's home who owned their place of residence. He was not a Christian and they went to his bedroom window and sang songs of Zion. Though he owned a number of farms they said that they felt that they were rich and that he was poor. Think of that, separated from home folks of their own nationality, stripped of their goods, strangers in a strange land, they stopped below this wealthy man's window feeling that they were rich and that he was poor. Have you thought of your life possessions in such terms of value in such a time as this? My soul, my faith, my hope is worth more than all material possessions.

No. 3 of Series of Three Studies on the Bible

THE BEST USE OF THE BIBLE

John 5:39; Acts 17:11

I. Worship Service:

1. Songs: "Break Thou the Bread of Life," No. 288; "O, the Unsearchable Riches of Christ," No. 454.
2. Reading of leading topic, prayer, and leader's remarks.
3. Short talks on various ways of reading the Bible.
4. Offering for relief.

II. Leader's Introduction:

Nathaniel Hawthorne once said that the Bible contained plots for ten thousand short stories. Bible students know that he was right. One way of reading the Bible is to read it for the stories which it contains. They are a perennial source of interest and fascination.

An American traveling in England found that the elevator was called a "lift" in that country. Many Bible readers read the Good Book for the "lift" which it gives them: the comfort, the inspiration, the courage, the enthusiasm, the sustaining power it brings to their souls.

Some few make a systematic study of it. They are willing to work long and hard at it as Edison did over his test tubes. They seek to find its treasures and are richly rewarded by its life-giving waters. Not only to read a book of the Bible through as one would read through another book, but to find out when it was written and under what circumstances, why and to whom, what purpose it was to serve, and the message it was to bring makes its contents mean more and become more vital for our own life.

III. Suggested Topics for Short Talks:

1. Attention to reading, Neh. 8:3. 2. Practice its precepts, Matt. 7:24. 3. The Bible for conversion, Ps. 19:7, 8. 4. The Bible for instruction, II Tim. 3:16, 17. 5. Revelation of Christ, Luke 24:25-27.

IV. For Discussion:

1. Why is the Bible a good guide for daily living?
2. Which is better to use the Bible for the family worship period or a devotional book like the Daily Altar?

V. Facts for Study:

"It is easier to be satisfied than to progress. It is more comfortable to slumber than to pursue a distant star. There is always the temptation to say, Here be thy tabernacle, O Israel, and pitch the tents right there and move no further. Spiritual laziness is an easy habit to acquire."

Bible study classes can be a very definite help to overcome such laziness. To prepare for the class, to be guided by a good teacher, and to share in the discussion often means that new insights come and a new purposefulness comes into our life.

VI. Illustration:

Obedience Essential in True Religion

"Travelers among the Alps tell us that they come to have a peculiar feeling, unlike any other, for their Alpine guide. Not the feeling of companionship, fellowship, or friendship alone, but a combination of all three. This feeling, they say, is produced by their obedience to the guide's commands; and the men who have guided them through the Alps always seem to them different from other men. Our Guide once said, 'If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love'—that is, in Him. Simple obedience is essential to know the power of God's word."

VII. Food for Thought:

"A moment in the morning, ere the cares of day begin,
Ere the heart's wide door is open for the world to enter in,
Ah, then alone with Jesus, in the silence of the morn,
In the heavenly sweet communion let your joyful day be born—"

STORIES OF GREAT WOMEN

Unselfish Ruth, Ruth 1:16, 17

Have a member give a brief summary of the book of Ruth.

Ruth's good qualities appear at every turn. She acknowledges herself a foreigner, destitute of right or claims. She showed great wisdom and piety in her desire to take refuge under the protecting wings of Jehovah, the God of Israel.

Praying Hannah, I Sam. 1:11

Read also Hannah's Song of Thanksgiving in I Sam. 2:1-10.

Hannah, the childless wife of Elkanah, is grieved by her childlessness, and prays for a son. Her prayer is heard, and in gratitude she consecrates her child to the services of Jehovah.

Talk by Pastor—"The Significance of Child Consecration as Practiced in Our Church."

Anna, the Prophetess, Luke 2:36-38

Anna, the prophetess, recognizes Jesus as the Messiah and speaks of Him as such. Her manner of life is described in detail, because she is a type of the widows of the Christian Church, who did not marry again, but devoted themselves to the work of charity and piety. The title shows that Anna was known as a prophetess before this incident. She may have been 103 years old at this time.

Mary, Mother of Mark, Acts 12:12

"This Mary, mother of Mark, and aunt of Barnabas, was a widow of considerable wealth, as her style of living testifies. Her house had a gateway into the courtyard. There was a room within for the church to worship. Many suppose that her house was the scene of the Last Supper, and of the descent of the Holy Ghost."

Mary, the Mother of Jesus, Luke 1:46-55

"This glorious song, known as the Magnificat, tells us more than anything else in the New Testament of the character of our Lord's mother. She was one who diligently searched the scriptures, and was able in spite of her youth to enter into their deepest spiritual meaning."

Esther—A Courageous Woman

Esther, a beautiful Jewish maiden, was chosen by Ahasuerus to be his new queen. Mordecai, her uncle, who had reared her, urged her to accept this place of honor, feeling that it surely came from God for some purpose. So Mordecai sat by the gate to be near Esther. Hamon, a conceited man who had been promoted to an important position in the kingdom, became very angry when Mordecai refused to bow to him when he passed by the gate. He induced the king to pass a decree that on a certain day all Jews should be put to death. The king did not know that his beautiful queen was a Jewess. Mordecai told Esther she would have to go before the king and plead for her people. Esther was afraid because it was against the law for her to appear before the king unless he sent for her, but she was willing to brave death for her people. All the nation of the Jews fasted and prayed for Esther on the day that she appeared before the king. The king stretched out the golden sceptor which kept her from being put to death. She invited Hamon and the king to a banquet that day. Then at the second banquet she told the king of Hamon's plot to have all the Jews killed and admitted her nationality. The king was very angry and had Hamon and his ten sons hanged, while to Mordecai he gave the high place in the kingdom which Hamon had held. Thus the Jews won a great victory because of the bravery of their queen.

JESUS, OUR SAVIOR—John 3:16

A Victory Program

This is the last lesson in our four series of stories of Jesus. This is the crowning point or climax to all the others we have just studied.

The complete mission of Jesus was not found in His helpfulness to those who were in trouble, nor in His advice to those who did not know how to meet each day's problems. His principle ministry came as He faced the problems of sin in the world, and as He prepared Himself for the ordeal of becoming a sacrifice for sin. He became our Saviour by dying on the cross for our sin.

The name Jesus, itself, signifies salvation, aid, and deliverance.

It will be interesting to trace the life of Jesus telling just how He became our Saviour. First, His birth foretold. Second, early life and blessing by Simeon in the temple. Third, the knowledge of his mission revealed to him at the age of twelve. Fourth, His preparation and ministry on earth. Fifth, the death on the cross. Sixth, the resurrection.

The Question Bee

1. Where is our scripture text found? Recite it.
2. For whom did Jesus come into the world?
3. When Jesus becomes our Saviour, how are we different?

The Prayer List

Dear Jesus: Help us as Juniors never to forget that we have you as a heavenly father, who provides us with what we need, who gave us the greatest gift, your life, that we might have life eternally. We thank thee for everyday blessings and look forward and up to thee to help us in this world struggle that has been placed into our young lives. Give us knowledge and wisdom to know what is right and wrong, and courage to be true to our convictions, and willing to face ridicule if need be, and willing to sacrifice. Amen.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

A. S. BECHTEL

July 5, 1942

GOD THE CREATOR

Gen. 1:1-5, 24:31, 2:1 Read Chaps. 1,2

Introduction

The lessons for this quarter are a series of studies in the book of Genesis, and their aim, as given by the Lessons Committee is: "To discover afresh in this Book of Beginnings, evidences of the power, the care, the mercy, and the grace of God. To increase our faith in God as the Creator of the universe and as Ruler in the affairs of men and of nations." The aim is not merely nor primarily to ascertain historic facts. The writer interprets the facts from a religious standpoint. This portion of the Bible is of genuine interest to us today because religious truths of vital importance may be learned from the Old Testament. The first eleven chapters of Genesis form an introduction to the whole Old Testament. They give truths of fundamental importance concerning the origin of the world and of man and of the early history of the human race.

God Created the World Gen. 1:1-5,24,25, 2:1

"In the beginning God," majestic words with which to introduce the account of the creation. There is no attempt here to prove the existence of God. His eternal existence is stated as an eternal fact. This first verse gives information and contains implications of vast importance. God WAS "in the beginning" of time, antedating everything and everybody in the universe. He was created. Things exist in the material world and universe and there must be a cause bringing them into existence. This first verse tells us that God, who alone is eternal, is that Cause, is the Creator of all things. His eternal existence is necessary in order to explain the universe. Reason says there must be an intelligent Being, inconceivably great, Who is the Creator of this universe. Revelation says the same thing. This Being is God.

The word translated "created" is used exclusively of God's activitiy. At the origin of all our vast material universe is God. The materials which now compose the earth were at first a confused mass, an empty, watery waste and covered with darkness. God's Spirit moved upon—hovered over, brooded over it—working the discordant elements and preparing them for creating an orderly earth. Light came into existence by the spoken will and decree of God. This phrase occurs ten times in the first chapter. At the command of God the dense and gloomy vapors were dispersed and light spread over the waters. This light is a necessary condition for the growth of all life and progress. God is the source of all light. Day, in the Hebrew, means warmth, heat. Night signifies a rolling up in a shady mantle. These two were made to alternate by the daily revolution of the earth.

When God had prepared the earth for the habitation of living creatures, He made them to live upon the earth. Each was made after his kind, establishing a great law of life. No form of life can transmit characteristics which it does not itself possess.

God Created Man vss. 26-31

The last stage in the progress of creation had now been reached and the earth was prepared for the habitation of man. Man was the last and highest of God's creatures. The words show the unusual importance which God attached to forming man who was to be His representative on earth. God created man in His own image and likeness—like God in original righteuosness. Man is endowed with a will, conscience, reason, freedom, and choice, and a capacity to know God—powers which are akin to those possessed by God Himself, and which make man a true personality and with moral responsibility. God created man for a definite purpose (vss. 26,28). God also provided for the sustenance of all His creatures (vss. 29,30). God created everything very good. It contained no taint of evil.

How should the knowledge that God made man in His likeness affect our attitude toward ourselves and others?

How can we fulfill the purpose for which we were created?

God provides the needed food supply. What is man's obligation for its rightful distribution?
